The ministers of North California have recently held a meeting of several days' length in Fresno, in connection with the dedication of the new edifice there. The attack on the state organization of northern California by a reactionary newspaper has called forth indignant protest from these men. They passed the following resolutions and asked for their publication in all the church papers: "Whereas, There has been presented for publication to one of our eastern papers representing the Disciples of Christ, a series of articles questioning the honesty of the State Board of California, north, and Whereas, A synopsis of these articles has already been published and the matter has attained not only state, but national publicity; Therefore, Be it resolved by the preachers of California North in convention assembled, that we express our unbounded confidence in the personnel of the State Board of California North and our unreserved loyalty to the board and the purposes and methods for state work in and under their direction; and we further recommend the hearty co-operation of the Brotherhood of California North to the state board in the difficult and important work they are now carrying on."

Official Board Goes to Church.

Wilson Ave. church, Columbus, O., is proud of the attendance record of its officers during the past three months. The eight elders had a 100 per cent record on Sunday-school attendance, 92 per cent for church services and 79 per cent for prayer-meeting. Twenty-six deacons had 78 per cent Sunday-school attendance, 65 per cent church attendance and 52 per cent prayer-meeting attenance. The pastor, J. J. Tisdall, says the secret of a prosperous church is faithful leaders.

Arcola, Ill., Church is Dedicated.

Before Walter S. Rounds left Arcola, Ill., to go to Taylorville the church had almost completed remodeling its edifice. B. H. Bruner has taken the pastorate of the church and it has been his pleasant task to arrange the services for rededicating the building. The building was rededicated on March 21, and there were special services with visiting ministers each evening of the week following. These visitors were H. H. Peters, Paris, Ill.; George Darsie, Terre Haute, Ind.; O. E. Kelley, Terre Haute, Ind.; John McDonald Horne, Charleston, Ill. The new building has the basement finished complete with social rooms, modern kitchen, and quarters for other activities. The auditorium and Bible school rooms have been redecorated and recarpeted and the new indirect lighting has been put in. The church is now prepared to enlarge the Bible school work and to take care of the social needs of the young people of the community.

Perservering Evangelism.

East Creighton Avenue church, Fort Wayne, Ind., Edward H. Clifford, minister, held a fifteen day follow-up evangelistic campaign, beginning February 24 and closing March 14, to gather up the results of the Lyon Evangelistic campaign in which the Fort Wayne churches engaged during January and February. Forty-nine persons have, up to the present time, been added to the membership of the church, and there will be from ten to fifteen others who will be baptized and added to the membership as a result of the two series of meetings. Probably the best feature of the local campaign of East Creighton church was the cottage prayer-meetings held each week day except Monday and Saturday, in the homes, not alone of the members of the church, but also in several homes of those not Christians. A personal workers' organization will grow out of the meetings and it is expected that a permanent work among the railroad men of southeastern Fort Wayne will result in many more of the railroad men being reached. The meeting was conducted by the pastor, with home forces.

Texas Teachers Resign.

Resigning seems to be a habit this spring in Texas Christian university. It is reported that five of the instructors will leave. Resignations have been received from Carl Beutel, head of the music department; Miss Clara Case, instructor in Spanish; W. H. Atkins, assistant professor of botany, and S. A. Boles, athletic coach. Prof. Beutel plans to open a music studio in Indianapolis, it is said. Miss Case will enter the mission field in old Mexico. Prof. Atkins will enter Columbia next year. Mr. Boles, it is understood, will enter the athletic department of an eastern university. The trustees decided to bring about the incorporation of Midland college and other smaller colleges as a part of Texas Christian university in conformity with the ideas of President Kershner. Resolutions were passed thanking Prof. and Mrs. John Kinsey and Prof. W. T. Hamner, who also has resigned, for their services.

The Disciples at Yale.

Yale university has been for many years a center for Disciples. More than a hundred men have been enrolled in the School of Religion alone at different times; many of these are now prominent among the Disciples. Nineteen men are in the school of religion this year. All the Disciples attending the university during any one year constitute what is called the Campbell Club of Yale. This club normally has about thirty members. The Yale fellowship rejoiees this year in the presence of J. C. Archer as a lecturer on missions.

In and Around Chicago

Lin. D. Cartwright is one of the Disciple Divinity House students this winter. He has accepted a call to Fort Collins, Col., and will go there about April 1. Lin D., Jr., made his appearance at the Cartwright home March 7, and the family are waiting for the young lad to get a bit older before they undertake the long journey.

Evanston church celebrated its nineteenth anniversary on March 21. The church grew out of revival meetings conducted by E. W. Darst, and the first pastor was E. S. Ames.

The Chicago Church Federation Council has called a union meeting of Chicago ministers for March 29, at 10:30 a. m., in Central Y. M. C. A. auditorium. The general subject will be "Progress and Triumphs in the War on Vice." The principal speakers will be Dr. Timothy Stone, Mrs. Ellen M. Henrotin and Charles S. Bacon, M. D. The music will be in charge of Prof. L. L. Henry of the Tullar-Meredith Company. The Disciple ministers will join in this meeting.

The death on March 10, of Mrs. Mary DeWolf Trunkey, wife of J. H. Trunkey at Seattle, Wash, removes one who with her husband was for many years an active leader in Chicago church life. Mrs. Trunkey was a charter member of the Monroe street church and was well known through her deep interest in the Woman's Missionary Society of Chicago. Her daughter, the wife of Dr. Edwin A. Layton, became a foreign missionary. The funeral services were conducted at Seattle by her pastor, Cleveland Kleihauer, and in Chicago where interment took plaee, C. C. Morrison, her former pastor, officiating.

Confederate Veteran Dies.

Col. Elijah Gates died at St. Joseph, Mo., recently. He had had thrilling experiences as a colonel in the Civil War in the Confederate army and was a well-known democratic politican, being acquainted with the leading men of Missouri. Seven years ago, at the age of eighty-one, he took membership in First church, St. Joseph, and soon afterwards was made an elder. Though young in his church relationship, he was one of the oldest Disciples in Missouri at the time of his death.

Preaches Puzzle Sermons.

W. A. Bellamy, of Plainfield Avenue church, Grand Rapids, Mich., is preaching a series of puzzle sermons. He will in each sermon describe a Bible character and when the whole series is complete, he will present a fine Bible to the first person guessing the entire list of characters correctly. The subjects of his sermons are as follows: "The Woman Who Was a Model Mother," "The Woman Who Was a Model Wife," "The Woman Who Was False to Her Husband," "The Woman Who Was Beautiful but Deceptive," "The Woman Who was a Grand Old Maid," "The Woman Who Was Loyal to Her Mother-in-Law," "The Woman Who Was a Warrior," "The Woman Who Was Consecrated," "The Woman Who Was a Medium," "The Woman Who Was True to Her Husband," "The Woman Who Was Cursed" and "The Woman Who Saved Her People."

Membership Race Soon Over.

The contest of the Men's Brotherhood class, First church, Maryville, Mo., will soon close. The class had forty members when the contest began and this group was divided into two divisions to secure new members. The class has been built up until it numbers 200.

R. A. Doan to Return Soon.

R. A. Doan will soon return from the Orient, where he has tarried after his party had preceded him to America. He has been so deeply impressed with the work of missions that he will devote his life to promoting the extension of the gospel at his own charges. He will probably be connected with the Foreign Christian Missionary Society to arouse the business men of the churches to greater activity.

Need More Room.

The Sunday-school at Lawrence, Kans., needs more room. Its leaders are talking about an attendance of a thousand by Easter. A thousand dollars has been raised to finish the basement and divide it up into class rooms for the school.

Mary McGavran Missionary Society.

The monthly meeting of the Mary McGavran Missionary society, at Alliance, O., was held recently. The story of the session is an interesting one. Fifteen members answered roll call with current events relating to mission work. A part of the program was a talk concerning the Philippine Islands. C. B. Reynolds, the pastor, read a letter from the branch church in Lu Chow Fu, China, which was recently dedicated. Miss Haley, the president, who will soon leave for an extended western trip, assigned the work for the society while she is absent. Each girl wrote on a slip of paper the name of the country she would choose were she to be a missionary. These slips were then collected and redistributed but to different girls. Each girl was then to take an imaginary trip to the country designated on the slip she held and Miss Haley provided each one with a pad and paper and on this they were to draw the route and paste pictures of scenery along the route.

Boy Scouts Have Exhibit.

Troup No. 3, Boy Scouts, attached to First church, Scranton, Pa., gave an exhibit at the church on a recent evening. The Scouts had a camp tent and camp fire on the stage and gave a practical demonstration of camp life, including first aid to the injured put into practical use in camp. There was fun for both young and old. The boys carry on the usual boys' pranks in camp as well as show some of the features they learn in the movement.

Campbell Relative Gets Call.

Prof. Julian T. Barclay, of Bethany college, a grandson of Alexander Campbell, has accepted a position as Spanish interpreter of the Pan-American Institution at Washington, D. C. The position is a responsible one.

A Men and Millions "Life Meeting"

The emphasis of the Men and Millions movement is not primarily on the money that is to be raised. The leader of the movement, A. E. Cory, says that if he were naming the movement again, he would eliminate every word from its name that would suggest finance, and have the name associated with vital religion.

One of the three great features of the movement is the effort to enlist a thousand young people for definite Christian work. In many ways, this is the most important feature of the entire enterprise and a description of the methods employed will without doubt be of general interest.

Rev. R. H. Miller, recently pastor at Buffalo, who has charge of the "Life Meetings" in the Men and Millions campaigns.

In every church visited by the Men and Millions Movement, special meetings are arranged for young people. A description of one of these meetings, that held in Evanston church, will follow as being typical of the methods employed.

R. H. Miller has general charge of this work, and he is said to be at his best in these services. He was not able to go to Evanston, however, and those sent to conduct the meeting were G. W. Muckley, Dr. Royal J. Dye, H. O. Pritchard and H. J. Derthick.

The young people had been invited to the church parlors and the Ladies' Aid Society had given them a complimentary luncheon in the evening. In spite of all the distractions of city life, a goodly company of young people gathered about the table. After the repast of the evening was taken care of, and all were thoroughly at ease, Mr. Muckley introduced the different speakers.

Dr. Dye Says Missionaries Are Human.

Dr. Dye made his beginning by insisting that a missionary was a normal human being. He plays pranks on his fellows, such as putting coffee between their sheets, or pouring water down their backs. A missionary is not some one who has left all the homely joys of life behind, but is one who takes them right along with him. If he works hard, he also knows the thousand satisfactions that make life tolerable to us all. It is because young people sometimes picture the religious worker as some one who has left those things behind, that they often hesitate to go into special Christian work.

Mr. Derthick sounded the note of the opportunities of work in the great cities. He told stories indicating the need of the city. His own little boy tried to play in the back yard, but his ball was batted into a neighbor's yard and there was trouble. He tried to play in the front yard, but the game took him across the boundary line and there was a complaint. With his father's permission, he tried to play in the street, but the policeman threatened to arrest him. Then his father sent him to the school-ground, but a janitor with police power showed his star and drove him away. What this boy needed was a place to play. Mr. Derthiek showed how many of the occupations of the city can be turned to good use by the young people and made special mention of the need of consecrated nurses and kindergarten teachers.

A Story by H. O. Pritchard.

Mr. Pritchard insisted that no young person wanting education bad enough would ever go without it. He told the story of an awkward lad with home-made clothes who started into high school from the farm, and after he had made the young people laugh at the grotesque figure he drew, he declared himself the hero of the story. Two-thirds of the students of Eureka college make part or all of their own way through school, he declared. He exhorted the young people before him not to be satisfied with limited training but to go in for the best in an age when the world is demanding highly trained workers.

Mr. Muckley insisted upon a religious attitude toward every calling and profession in life. He was glad to admit that the church needed not only preachers and missionaries but Christian doctors, teachers, business men, and other kinds of folk. He felt that the choosing of a life vocation should be less a matter of chance and more a matter of careful and prayerful choosing.

It was at this time that the pledge card was produced and handed around the table for all the young people to look at. It was not a pledge to become a student volunteer or even a candidate for the ministry. Its terms were explained to the young people clause by clause. The text of the pledge is as follows: My Declaration. Believing that I should accept as my life calling that form of Christian service which will enable me most effectively to advance the kingdom of God, I gladly make this declaration of purpose: (1) To examine the world field with reference to opportunities for life investment. (2) To read God's Word regularly, to pray constantly, and to seek the help of Christian friends in order to find out just what life task to undertake. (3) And to secure as adequate preparation as possible in a Christian college for my life work."

Signing of Pledges.

The pledge signing was a very quiet matter and no pressure was exerted, yet every member of the group that night signed a pledge, a result which to the pastor seemed marvelous. O. F. Jordan, the pastor, was called upon to express his sentiments, and he declared that he would have been glad to have had life's issues presented to him so clearly twenty-five years ago, and he thanked the team for a presentation of the life problem which he declared to have been the best he had ever heard.

How will the Men and Millions Movement get any missionaries by such a process? These young people will be followed up through the mail. That everyone will go into Christian work is not to be expected, but that a thousand can be secured from the great brotherhood of Disciples no one who has watched the process can doubt.

In the life meetings, as in other meetings, the team depends upon the power of religious idealism. It wishes no other victory than that wrought by God's Holy Spirit.

Wife of Well-Known Leader Dies.

At the age of eighty, Mrs. Rachel Logan Hobbs, wife of Prof. Alvin Hobbs, recently passed out of this life. She was married to Mr. Hobbs at the age of eighteen and with her husband served the churches in a number of important centers. Among the cities where they lived during their active service were Bloomington, Ill.; Louisville, Detroit, Denver and Cincinnati. Mr. Hobbs was early connected with Central church in Des Moines and was a teacher for five years in the newly formed Drake University. Mrs. Hobbs was a very intelligent woman with the interests of her religion always close to her heart and she was as ever a good helpmeet. Mr. Hobbs has been dead for twenty-five years and Mrs. Hobbs has in recent years made her home with her daughters.

How Indianapolis Churches Co-operate.

The Indianapolis churches co-operate by having a "Christian Church Union" which is made up of all the official boards of the Disciple churches of the city. This "Christian Church Union" takes up the common problems of the churches of that city.

Jasper T. Moses Will Study and Lecture.

Jasper T. Moses, son of Mrs. Helen E. Moses, and former missionary in Mexico, has resigned his pastorate at Fowler, Colo., and will enter the Divinity School of the University of Chicago for advanced study. On his way to Chicago he will deliver a number of lectures on his Mexican experiences. While in school he will lecture some and carry on some pulpit supply work.

Pastor Defines Position.

Winston W. Wharton of Roodhouse, Ill., recently preached a sermon on the position of the Disciples of Christ and this sermon has been printed for free distribution. His ministry at Roodhouse the past year has been very successful, there being more accessions than in seven previous years. The popularity of the minister is indicated in that he has received a very unusual number of calls for service at funerals and weddings.

Church Favors Good Government.

In a recent primary election at Galesburg, Ill., the "wets" and "drys" were arrayed against each other for the control of the "People's" party. The parish paper of the Disciple church carried strong articles written by the pastor, H. A. Denton, showing the true nature of the issue before the people. A professor in Knox college was nominated on a platform that is "dry."

Provide Manse for Minister.

Lebanon, Kans., church is arranging to make its minister and his family very comfortable. A committee has been appointed to supervise the erection of a seven-room manse, which will be quite modern when complete.

Church Gets Damages for Civil War Outrage.

During the Civil war the Disciple church in Marshall, Mo., was turned into a stable for cavalry horses and the floors were torn up to provide stalls. In 1905, the church filed a claim against the government for this damage and the matter has been pending ever since. B. T. Wharton, pastor of the church, got the claim in shape so that it was finally allowed. The building was repaired after the war at an expense of $2,300, but Congress allowed damages of only $1,240. The church broke up during the war but was reorganized in 1866.

First Meeting of Arkansas C. W. B. M.

What is said to be the first annual state council meeting of the Christian Woman's Board of Missions was held in Little Rock, Ark., recently. There was a good attendance, and Miss Maria Reynolds Ford, a missionary to the Argentine Republic, was among the speakers.

Another Day for Church Going.

Des Moines recently observed its second annual "go-to-church" Sunday and the pastors were compelled to rent buildings to care for overflow meetings. F. W. Mutchler, of the Grant Park work, secured the public school building just across from his church. The ministers of the city were recently entertained at the Admen's club and there were addresses on church advertising.

All Springfield (Ill.) Will Be Canvassed.

The three churches in Springfield, Ill., will all put on the "every-member canvass" May 2, even if it is the moving season. The bulletin published by First church, Frank Waller Allen, minister, has a responsive reading on the back page with questions by the minister and answers by the congregation, seemingly designed for public reading in the church. This catechism explains the canvass fully.

New President for Phillips University.

E. V. Zollars, veteran college leader, is retiring from the presidency of Phillips University, on account of ill-health. The trustees have called in his stead H. E. Van Horn, pastor of First church, Oklahoma City, Okla. The Oklahoma institution was organized by Mr. Zollars and has been developed until it now has a student body of 550. The property is valued at $306,000.

E. V. Zollars, retiring President of Phillips University.

Methodist Minister Becomes a Disciple.

T. Q. Pursell, member of the northern Methodist denomination, and until recently residing in Chicago, united with Corsicana, Tex., church recently and was ordained to the ministry among the Disciples. Mr. Pursell has been promoting a Bible encyclopedia lately but hopes to secure a call to a settled pastorate soon.

Mayor Commends Pastor.

John Wesley Underwood, pastor at Belmar church, Pittsburgh, has held successful evangelistic meetings in his own church with 106 accessions recently. There were 350 accessions to the church in two years and although the building came near being sold under the hammer five years ago, the church is now in good financial condition. Mr. Underwood has been called for the fifth year without a dissenting vote. Joseph G. Armstrong, mayor of the City of Pittsburgh, says of Mr. Underwood: "I have just heard of the great evangelistic meetings which Rev. John Wesley Underwood has been holding at the Belmar Christian church, as well as the noon-day addresses at the Y. M. C. A., and also at some of our prominent steel works. It has been my pleasure to note his activity in civic affairs, and his strenuous efforts toward the spiritual, moral, and intellectual uplift of our great city. There is no question but that his untiring efforts and strong personality have enriched the community."

District Convention.

The churches of northeast Iowa recently held a district convention in Waterloo, in Central church. Papers were read on various subjects by C. H. Morris, L. C. Moore, C. H. DeVoe, W. O Livingston, and others. The church combined service, the junior church and other methods were discussed.

Publishes "The Christian Gimlet."

The parish paper at Moulton, Ia., is by no means a bore to read but is full of interesting news. Its striking name, therefore, "The Christian Gimlet," would seem to be a misnomer. Huell E. Warren, pastor of the church, is editor of the paper. When he changes pastorates, he takes his church paper with him, continuing the series in a new city.

Men Defeat Women.

In these days of the aggressive modern woman, the announcement of men defeating women, and especially in church work, is sensational. The Sunday school at Alvin, Ill., has been having a contest since Jan. 1, in which it was to be settled whether the male or female attendance at Sunday school would be the greater. The men won the contest by a large margin.

Finds no Chinese Suffragettes.

Miss Edith Russell expects to go as a missionary to China and as a preliminary experience has been studying the language among the Chinese in San Francisco. In telling her experiences at Central church, Wichita, Kans., recently, she declared that there was no suffragette movement among the Chinese women of the Golden Gate city. At the mission meetings, there were nine men to one woman, because the Chinese hold that a woman's place is at home. Miss Russell gained access to some of the secluded women by paying a dollar a lesson for instruction in the Chinese language.

Steal Church Lights.

Central church, Springfield, Mo., lost its light. This news concerns material realities and not spiritual. A thief broke into the church, and finding nothing else that he could make away with, took all the lamp bulbs from their sockets, leaving a church meeting with no light except that from a central chandelier which was out of reach of the thief. The police have been unable to discover the identity of the culprit.

Transylvania News Notes

The first annual reunion of the alumni and former students of Transylvania and The College of the Bible will be held June 7-10. Dr. Julian Estill, president of the Alumni Association, and his executive committee are making extensive preparation for the occasion. A procession of alumni and the annual dinner will be a feature of the 9th, in connection with class day exercises. Dr. Estill is arranging an interesting program for each day and a vigorous effort will be made to secure a large attendance.

Coach W. T. Stewart has returned from his vacation to take charge of the baseball team. It will be remembered that he developed a championship football squad last fall, and that under his direction Transylvania athletics have come into prominence and favorable notice.

The new catalogue of Transylvania, Hamilton College, and The College of the Bible is well on the way and will be off the press in a few weeks. They are distributed to those who ask for them.

Professor W. C. Bower, of the department of education, conducted a very successful missionary campaign last week leading up to the taking of the pledges for the support of Dr. Butchart, Transylvania's living link on the foreign field. It will be recalled that Dr. Butchart is in charge of the medical department of the University of Nanking, and the support of this department by the university and The College of the Bible is the result of a recommendation made by Professor Bower on his return from the Orient. The amount required for the living link is $600, and this sum was fully subscribed by the students. The missionary spirit is very strong in Transylvania and The College of the Bible, and more and more are the students looking toward "the lands beyond" as the field of their life work.

A Good Report from Rockford, Ill.

W. B. Clemmer has been five years at Rockford, Ill., and the statistics of his work for this period have been issued. He has preached 550 sermons, and 222 accessions have been brought into the local church. He has also had 70 accessions in his ministry in evangelistic meetings held elsewhere. The offerings to missions and benevolence have amounted to $951. The pastor has preached 65 funerals and performed 72 wedding ceremonies. The present resident membership is 297. Mr. Clemmer recently launched a "nine weeks' enlistment campaign" with special rally features every Sunday. Rally services will be held in the Sunday-school, evangelistic services in the church, and booster prayer-meetings every mid-week will be features, culminating with two weeks' decision services before Easter. The whole membership is to be enlisted in active service and a house-to-house visitation of the membership, and of friends favoring the church will be conducted. It is hoped to relate every person in the city, favoring the church, to its active membership during this campaign, and much interest was shown in the enterprise by the members of the church.

Delphi, Ind., Pastor Will Stick to Post.

J. L. Tyner resigned at Delphi, Ind., recently, but the official board met and asked the pastor to reconsider his resignation. He has agreed to do so and will remain in that town another year.

Holding County Conferences.

G. I. Hoover, district evangelist in the eastern district, Indiana, is holding a series of country conferences in his district. He will hold a conference for Howard county at Kokomo; a conference for Hamilton county at Noblesville; a conference for Johnson county at Edinburg; a conference for Grant county at Marion; a conference for Blackford county at Hartford City; a conference for Hancock county at Palestine; a conference for Rush county at Arlington. Two days are being spent in each city beginning March 15. At these conferences the speakers will be C. W. Cauble, corresponding secretary of the state organization; Garry L. Cook, state Bible-school superintendent; Mrs. O. H. Greist, state president of the C. W. B. M. and Guy I. Hoover. The county officers will in each case deliver addresses.

Sunday-school Contest at Bethany, W. Va.

The young ladies and young men's Bible classes at Bethany, W. Va., have entered into a contest with each other at Bethany College on a basis of two girls to three boys. The contest was made on this basis for the reason that there is a larger number of boys in school than girls. The young ladies have been ahead all three of the Sundays during the contest by a small margin. Both classes have nearly doubled their enrollment. Prof. Miller, instructor occupying the Moninger Memorial Chair of Bible School Pedagogy, is the teacher of the men's class and it is largely through his efforts that the class has been conducted so successfully. Prof. A. R. Bourne is the teacher of the young ladies' class. An orchestra has been organized among the college students of musical accomplishments and is presenting some creditable music both at the chapel services and meetings of other nature. Mr. R. W. Scott is manager and leader of this organization.

Evangelistic Effort at Mexico, Mo.

B. G. Reavis, of Mexico, Mo., has just closed a series of successful meetings of three weeks' duration, at Palmyra, Mo. This is an extremely conservative community and is slow to respond to any forward movement of any nature. However, the meetings have stirred the town.

School of Methods at South Bend, Ind.

The Disciples of St. Joseph county, Ind., enjoyed a rare treat and experience during the week of March 8-12. The first school of methods for Bible school workers of the northern district was held in First Church, South Bend, under the auspices of the Bible-school department of the Indiana Christian Missionary Association. The following composed the faculty: Garry L. Cook, dean, instructor in Religious Education; Hazel A. Lewis, elementary superintendent of Bible-school department, American Christian Missionary Society; Cynthia Pearl Maus, secondary superintendent with A. C. M. S.; W. J. Clark, adult superintendent under A. C. M. S. The Bible study periods were conducted by John M. Alexander. E. K. Van Winkle, of Mishawaka, and C. D. Franklin, of South Bend, had large delegations from their schools in attendance. More than one hundred teachers matriculated during the week. There were forty-one graduates. The closing address was made by Myron C. Settle of Gary, Ind., on Friday evening.

Why a Great Easter Offering is Needed

1. A Great Beginning. We have made a creditable beginning in this Christlike ministry. The past justifies the public and the Christ in expecting that we will maintain our record. They must not be disappointed.

2. A Great Family. Under the blessing of God, we have been permitted to bring together a great family of widows, orphans and the aged, numbering about six hundred. These helpless, homeless wards depend upon us. We dare not, we will not turn them out to perish.

3. A Great Demand. Never in the history of the Association was there such a demand for service. The cry of distress of the hapless American victims of the European war is heard constantly outside our doors.

4. Easter Our One Day. Easter in the Bible schools is the one day in all the year devoted to this sweet and tender ministry. If the Easter offering fails, our Homes fail, and the widow and the orphan will cry in vain to us for help.

5. An Empty Treasury. These Homes are all full. Our treasury is empty, our credit taxed. Others cry for aid. God awaits our answer.

6. The Will of Christ. It is the will of Christ that the hungry should be fed and the naked clothed. "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me."

How Can Your Church and Bible School Aid?

1. By trying to make the Easter offering unanimous in your school.

2. By trying to raise the amount suggested as the goal for your school, and by dividing the amount suggested, as a goal among the several classes of your school, that each class may have a definite goal.

3. By encouraging individuals to make thank offerings for birthdays, for wedding anniversaries, in memory of loved ones gone, in gratitude for the hope of the Resurrection.

4. By making Easter Day a day of great joy and thanksgiving in your church and Sunday-school.

Sign and send to us at once order card for Easter supplies. Order as many cantatas as you need for your school and choir. They will cost you nothing. Order coin envelopes, one for each scholar, to aid in gathering the offering. Order free literature, enough for every person in the school. Remember an Honor Roll certificate will be sent to each school that reaches the suggested goal. Every scholar giving as much as $2.00 and whose name is sent in, will receive one of our new albums.

The enthusiastic entrance of you and your church and Bible school into fellowship with Christ in His compassion upon the poor, by the observance of Easter, will enable the Association to seeure the $40,000 necessary for the comfort of the great family divinely committed to its care, and will bring the richest blessing of God upon you, for He said, "He that hath pity upon the poor, lendeth to the Lord."

P. S. Be sure to send your offering promptly to The National Benevolent Association, 2955 Euclid Avenue, St. Louis, Missouri.

Came, friendless, to one of the homes of the N. B. A. when one day old. Is now dearly loved in a good Christian family.

Dr. Medbury Back from Canada.

Dr. Chas. S. Medbury is back from a short vacation trip in Canada. He describes the military preparations there very vividly. Boys, too young for service, are drilling in the street. A hundred Germans and Austrians, who tried to organize to return to their countries for the war, have been held as prisoners.

Disciples Win Debate.

Disciple boys at Arkansas City, Kans., have lived up to the traditions of their fellowship by winning a debate. They debated the Methodist boys in the Baptist church at Arkansas City on the literacy test in the immigration bill. The Disciples favored requiring literacy.

Pastor's Salary is Raised.

Flora, Ind., church has raised the salary of its pastor, G. Stanley West, by two hundred dollars and called him for another year's work.

Hand Out Quarters.

On a recent Sunday the Bible school at Atchison, Kans., handed out quarters to all the pupils that would take them. These are to be invested and returned to the school with the increase, according to the principle in the parable of the pounds. The proceeds from this device are to be used in partitioning off the new class rooms. The money was loaned to the school by one of the members.

Conduct an Employment Bureau.

Vernon church, Portland, Ore., has a live men's class. The members are not satisfied with learning about the old prophets, but want to apply the prophetic principles to modern social life. Unemployment has been a very prominent fact in Portland's life this winter and these men established a free employment bureau, and each week were able to land jobs for a number of men. The Sunday-school is outgrowing its quarters and the men are wrestling with the problem of enlarging the building to furnish room for the various activities.

They have submitted their resignations to the supervisor and will go to Los Angeles or Long Beach for a rest before going back into the work of the ministry.

Becomes a "Community Minister."

For several months the idea of a community church, such as has been advocated by Washington Gladden, has been the topic of discussion in Seneca, Kans. One evening recently a group of citizens met in the offices of the First National Bank and decided to hire a minister for such an organization. They chose Charles A. Richards a Disciple minister, and raised a salary of $1,200 for him. The new organization will use the Universalist building. Mr. Richards was once chaplain of the Girls' Industrial School at Beloit, Kans. The first service under this new arrangement was held March 14.

Church Secures Second Minister.

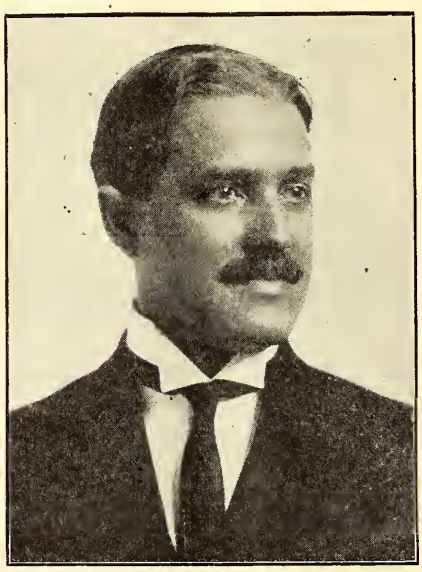
Rockport, Ill., church is faithful to the old minister who is ill, so a second minister has been secured to assume the active duties with the title of assistant. T. F. Keller is the older minister, and H. R. Brown has been chosen as his helper.

New Building Completed.

Congress Heights, Md., church has completed a new building at a cost of $1,200 and all the money has been raised except $400. This little church is now housed in a frame building seating two hundred and there is a prospect of good growth.

Great Crowds Wait Upon Professor.

Professors are evidently not all as dry as the newspaper humorist would represent them, for great audiences are waiting on the ministry of Professor A. W. Fortune of the College of the Bible in his revival services at Broadway church. The sermons are scholarly and full of the great human religious elements.



Professor A. W. Fortune, who is winning approval as an evangelist at Broadway Church, Lexington, Ky.

Agriculturists Dine at Church.

Two hundred farmers dined at Independence, Mo., church recently and a most attractive program was given. One speaker characterized farmers as tired, retired, or rubber-tired. The governor was on the program but on account of pressing duties at the legislature telegraphed his regrets at not being able to attend.

Pastors Disagree About Hell.

Secular papers in Kansas City have been tempted into discussing theology a good deal this winter on account of the variant views of the ministers there. The views about hell held by Burris A. Jenkins of Linwood Boulevard church and those of James Small in Hyde Park church were contrasted. Mr. Jenkins said: "I do not believe in a literal hell. Punishment for sins is inflicted both in this world and in the hereafter. It all tends toward ultimate reformation and redemption." Mr. Small replied: "Man's probationary period ends at the grave. Hell is a reality. Clergymen who believe that hell is a reformatory should go to hell and preach that doctrine. That's where they are needed if their views are correct."

Begins Ministry in Holy Week.

Vaughan Dabney is leaving Santa Monica, Cal., to succeed T. A. Boyer in the great church at Oakland. He will open his ministry with Holy Week services. The topics beginning Palm Sunday and running through Easter are "Our Most Precious Faith," "The Pure in Heart," "The Love of the Father," "The Life of the Son," "The Presence of the Spirit," "The Nature of the Kingdom," "The Yearning of the Race," "The Task of the Church," "The Hope of Eternal Life," "The Duty of the Individual."

Minister Loses Wife.

James C. Creel, Plattsburg, Mo., has lost his companion of forty-seven years. All the family were present at the time of her decease. During the 47 years of her married life, she was a faithful helpmeet to her husband. All the children are married, so Mr. Creel is now entirely alone. The last words of the departed wife were, "Papa, Jesus is so sweet to me now."

Churches Hire Expert.

Three churches in Nevada, Ia., have united to secure a Chicago church efficiency expert. These churches are Presbyterian, Methodist and Disciple and they have called Rev. Albert F. McGarrah, who will show them how best to use their local forces. He will discuss social service, evangelism, finance, missionary work, and other matters from the efficiency standpoint.

Why Should Our Schools Make it Unanimous and send an offering

to

The National Benevolent Association

2955 N. Euclid Ave., St. Louis, Mo.?

Because—The hundreds of widows, orphans, and aged under its care now were sent by our churches and preachers.

Because—For twenty-nine years this Association has faithfully, efficiently, and economically served in this Christ-like ministry.

Because—For twenty-nine years this Association has labored to establish Easter as its one offering day in the Bible schools. Their response has largely made the Association with its twelve great institutions serving our churches in ten states and its record of over 15,000 served.

Because—Certain other appeals are now going out to our schools and churches asking for Easter offerings. These appeals are so worded as to make it appear that they are being issued by the National Benevolent Association or by persons who have some connection with it. There is only one National Benevolent Association of the Christian Church. It is located at 2955 N. Euclid av., St. Louis, Mo. These confusing appeals that are going out from other parties in St. Louis claim a record of fifteen and one-half years of service; whereas, the Association making these appeals is less than four years old. It is publishing statistics as its own that are certainly and demonstrably of work done by and in the name of The National Benevolent Association of the Christian Church. Let no other interest turn your church or school from its support of the Association that has served the brotherhood's poor and needy for twenty-nine years.

Ten Big Reasons Why

BETHANY GRADED LESSONS are being adopted by so many of the best schools among Disciples.

1. There is more to them—at least a third more—than is contained in any other series.
2. They are rich, vital and full of suggestion to teacher and pupil.
3. They are free from the sectarian spirit.
4. They are soundly and fervently evangelical.
5. They are truly artistic in all their illustrations.
6. They are printed on better paper with better binding and in better taste than any other series.
7. Every lesson writer is an expert of interdenominational reputation.
8. They are a monument to the modern spirit of unity—several leading denominations have co-operated to produce them and are now using them.
9. The Disciples possess full editorial rights, through the editor, Charles Clayton Morrison.
10. Every Disciple school that uses them participates in and promotes a great Christian union enterprise.

DISCIPLES PUBLICATION SOCIETY, PROPRIETORS, : 700 EAST 40th ST., CHICAGO

Disciples Publication Society

The Disciples Publication Society is an organization through which churches of the Disciples of Christ seek to promote undenominational and constructive Christianity.

The relationship it sustains to the Disciples is intimate and organic, though not official. The Society is not a private institution. It has no capital stock. No individuals profit by its earnings. The churches and Sunday-schools own and directly operate it. It is their contribution to the advocacy and practice of the ideals of Christian unity and religious education.

The charter under which the Society exists determines that whatever profits are earned shall be applied to agencies which foster the cause of religious education, although it is clearly conceived that its main task is not to make profits but to produce literature for building up character and for advancing the cause of religion.

The Disciples Publication Society regards itself as a thoroughly undenominational institution. It is organized and constituted by individuals and churches who interpret the Disciples' religious reformation as ideally an unsectarian and unecclesiastical fraternity, whose common tie and original impuse are fundamentally the desire to practice Christian unity with all Christians.

The Society therefore claims fellowship with all who belong to the living Church of Christ, and desires to co-operate with the Christian people of all communions as well as with the congregations of Disciples, and to serve all.

In publishing literature for religious education the Society believes a body of such literature prepared by the co-operative effort of many communions reaches a much higher level of catholicity and truth than can be attained by writers limited by the point of view of a single communion.

* * *

The Sunday-school literature (The Bethany System) published by this house, has been prepared through the Society's association with the writers, editors and official publishing houses of the Methodist, Presbyterian, Congregational and other communions. In its mechanical and artistic quality, its low selling-price, its pedagogical adequacy, and, still more, in its happy solution of doctrinal differences it is a striking illustration of the possibilities of the new day of unity into which the church is now being ushered.

The Christian Century, the chief publication of the Society, desires nothing so much as to be the worthy organ of the Disciples' movement. It has no ambition at all to be regarded as an organ of the Disciples' denomination. It is a free interpreter of the wider fellowship in religious faith and service which it believes every church of Disciples should embody. It strives to interpret all communions, as well as the Disciples, in such terms and with such sympathetic insight as may reveal to all their essential unity in spite of denominational isolation. Unlike the typical denominational paper, The Christian Century, though published by the Disciples, is not published for the Disciples alone. It is published for the Christian world. It desires definitely to occupy a catholic point of view and it seeks readers in all communions.

Our Success Depends Upon You!

The Christian Century and the Disciples Publication Society belong to the Disciples of Christ, not to private individuals. With the steady enlargement of the volume of its business the Society will ultimately be on a self-supporting basis and its earnings will go to the cause of Christian education and missions. At present it depends for its existence upon gifts offered by friends who believe in the work it is doing and wish to see its ideals prevail among the Disciples and in the larger Christian world.

You are one of the friends of this great work.

Our success depends upon you!

The list of our supporters has been steadily growing. A few generous men and women have shown especial devotion by making large gifts. Every layman and minister who cherishes hopes for the success of such an enterprise will wish to make a gift to its support.

In addition to your own gift, you know of others in your congregation who, if the matter were brought forcefully to their attention, will find pleasure in making a gift. We depend upon you to secure their support.

The usefulness of The Christian Century and the Disciples Publication Society can be extended immeasurably by the prompt assistance of our generous friends.

We depend upon you to stand behind us! And we need your support now!

Do not let our call pass unheeded but fill out this blank and mail to us at once.

Disciples Publication Society,

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY

The Easter Faith

THE RESURRECTION OF JESUS MUST BE FELT AS A MORAL DEMAND BEFORE IT CAN BE TO US A HISTORIC FACT.

In our hearts there must be a presumption that it OUGHT to be true before the proof that it IS true will have meaning.

Thomas could not believe until he had thrust his hand into Jesus' side and his finger into the print of the nails.

Thomas had access to overwhelming objective evidence, but we are not in such a position. Therefore Jesus in blessing Thomas for his final surrender to the indisputable objective fact pronounced a triple blessing upon those who, in the absence of such proof, nevertheless should believe.

Faith in the resurrection is a moral achievement!

Thomas must ever afterward have carried a certain self-reproach in his soul that he had forced his Lord to produce sensuous testimony. How much more keen would have been the glory of that moment when Jesus appeared to him had he been able to say, "O Master, I knew that thou would'st rise; I knew that it was not possible for Death to hold THEE."

The time was when the church regarded miracles as a proof of Christ's divinity and the divinity of his teachings.

But in our time, to many minds, the miracles are a dead weight upon Christianity all around.

Many a man says, "If you simply had Christianity without the miracles, Christ without the resurrection, I could be a Christian, but I cannot believe the miracles."

If you read to him the evidence of the resurrection you find him impatiently shrugging his shoulders, as if to say, "Well, I can't answer you, but I don't believe you."

But if you can get your modern doubter's mind away from miracles in the abstract and get him to think of the miracles of Jesus as JESUS' miracles, he will easily come to feel that it is perfectly natural that such a one as Jesus should be able to perform them!

And if you can get him to think of the resurrection as JESUS' resurrection, it becomes a probable event, it takes on a certain presumptive credibility which ever so much proof of a mere objective historic fact can never gain for it.

Christ is the guarantee of his resurrection!

A greater miracle would be worked, faith feels, if he had not risen.

His rising from the dead was to prevent a miracle!

When we once know Christ we are not staggered by his resurrection; we would be staggered if he did not rise.

We so often misconceive faith, as if it were merely the belief of testimony. The devils have that kind of faith, and tremble in the possession of it.

No doubt on next Sunday many a preacher in the most lawyer-like fashion will assemble the various evidences of our Lord's resurrection and argue therefrom the indisputable strength of the gospel narrative.

All of which has its value. Yet to be convinced by this evidence is not to believe in the resurrection. It is not by demonstration but by moral insight that we apprehend this base fact upon which our Christian hope rests. Faith is not simply a belief that a thing is thus and so, but a demand of our moral nature that it MUST BE thus and so.

We believe in God because we need him, not because the "arguments" convince us.

We believe in immortality because we simply cannot tolerate the thought that death ends all. We will not admit that our universe deals flippantly and wantonly with its precious human cargo.

It is not possible, we affirm, that the soul dies as a candle is blown out. It is not possible that this is a Godless universe. It is not possible for death to vanquish Christ.

Easter, therefore, is the holiday of faith. It is the day when the soul, unchained from the grubbing drudgery of sense and evidence and argument, leaps forth freely to revel in full confidence that its utmost hopes are true.

For with Christ's resurrection are bound up all the dear and precious hopes of our lives—our own immortality, and the immortality of those who are dear to us, and of all mankind.

The sense of the incompleteness of our life and of the lives of those who have gone from us is our most poignant thought.

If we could feel that the life that passes out of our world is rounded off, that it had completed itself, that its possibilities were exhausted, we would then not demand from our universe the fact of immortality.

But because we see little children taken away, because all their wondrous possibilities are nipped in the budding, because we see some noble youth suddenly vanish from the threshold of a career which promises great usefulness and great inspiration to the world, and because every Tennyson and Emerson and Gladstone, falling on death whitened and weakened with many years, feels that life is truly only just beginning—because life here is always incomplete we feel that there must be something more.

And so our faith affirms that though these souls pass out into the dark, their feet are guided by a kindly God who leads them into ways of immortality.

"There is no proof for it!" says Thomas.

But our hearts know it is not possible for it to be otherwise!

Faith ever comes back to moral experience for its final justification. You cannot stand outside the life of Christ and understand him. You cannot know that he is the Son of God until you accept his way of life as your way of life.

You cannot believe in his resurrection until you have fellowship with his sacrificial self-giving. The cross precedes the resurrection in Christian experience no less than in Christ's experience.

And if a man walks with Christ in the valley of his humiliation, if he feels the inner dignity and grandeur of Christ's moral personality, he will gain a point of view from which the announcement of the Easter fact will seem not only credible but inevitable.

Such a man would not be disconcerted at the worst the scientists might do, or the critics. There would be that in his soul which, if the Bible had closed its record at Calvary, would write out by itself the story of an Easter morning.

In Christ he would see one whom death cannot hold.

> Strong Son of God, Immortal Love,
> Whom we, that have not seen thy face,
> By faith, and faith alone, embrace,
> Believing where we cannot prove.

Yea, Christ is risen!

Because it was not possible for HIM to be holden of death!

Samuel Mitchell Jefferson

The Tribute of a Friend to a Friendly Life.

BY ARCHIBALD McLEAN.

"Who comes to lift the Cross instead?
Who takes the standard from the dead?"

SAMUEL Mitchell Jefferson was born in Concord, Delaware, July 28th, 1849. He was the son of John Warren and Elizabeth Lynch Jefferson, and was one of seven children. In 1851 the family moved from Delaware to Illinois. The next year his father died. His mother, who was remarkable for industry, economy, and good judgment, though left without any property, rented a farm and kept the family together, and taught them the value and dignity of labor, integrity, and education. In the summer months the children who were old enough worked on the farm, and in the winter attended the public schools. Young Samuel took delight in spelling matches and in debating societies. In the spelling matches he was almost always the successful contestant; through constant practice he became a ready and effective debater.

A FARMER'S BOY.

Like many another boy who has risen to eminence in his calling, Samuel Mitchell Jefferson grew to man's estate on a farm. As the family was poor it was necessary for him to work with his hands, and to work hard. He was like the man of whom Holland wrote:

"Who was kept to his task by daily want of bread,
And kept to virtue by his daily task.
Till gaining manhood in the manly strife,
The fire that fills him smitten from a flint,
The strength that arms him wrested from a fiend."

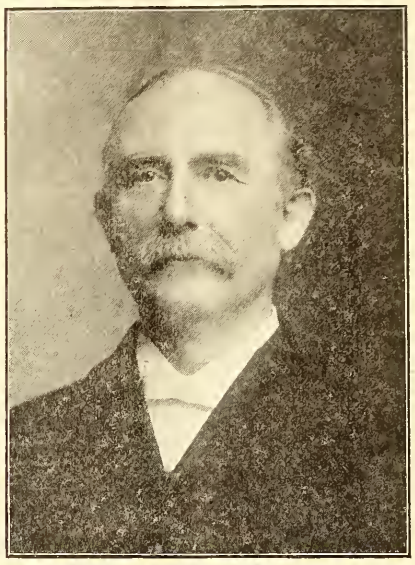
His life in the open air and his work on the farm helped to give him his vigorous constitution. At no time in his life did he resemble an ascetic, "sicklied o'er with the pale cast of thought." Even in his coffin he had the appearance of an athlete asleep.

While in his teens he confessed his faith in Jesus as the Christ, the Son of the living God, and was baptized in the Sangamon river by B. B. Tyler. During the time that he lived in Bloomington, Ind., where he worked in a photographer's studio, he took a great interest in the church and especially in the Sunday-school. Seeing that he was a young man of unusual ability, his friends in Bloomington urged him to enter Eureka college to prepare himself for the ministry. After a year in Eureka he entered the University of Indiana; and after four years, was graduated with the highest honors of his class.

A PASSION FOR KNOWLEDGE.

Mr. Jefferson was a student to the last day of his life. He had the tastes and the inveterate application of the scholar. He had a passion for knowledge and for accuracy. His library was large and contained the best books in the language on theology and philosophy; these he read and mastered. In his case "reading made the full man." To better prepare himself for the work of his life he studied in Columbia University and visited Europe twice. Few men living were as well informed on all subjects. In recognition of his scholarship, Bethany College conferred upon him the degree of Master of Arts and later the degree of Doctor of Laws.

During the time that he was in Eureka College and in the University of Indiana, Mr. Jefferson supported himself by preaching for churches in the vicinage and by doing evangelistic work in the summer vacations. On his graduation he was called to the Christian church of Lafayette, Indiana. After two fruitful and happy years in Lafayette he accepted a call to the Fourth Street Christian church of Covington, Kentucky. Subsequently he served the Walnut Hills (Cincinnati) Christian church, the church in Kokomo, Indiana, and the church in Augusta, Georgia. He continued to preach as long as he lived. By so doing he kept in close touch with the people.



The late Professor Samuel M. Jefferson

QUALITIES AS A PREACHER.

Mr. Jefferson's preaching, for the most part, was expository. As an expositor, he ranked with Alexander Maclaren; his spiritual intuitions were akin to those of Frederick W. Robertson. His preaching appealed to intelligent and thoughtful people. As a preacher to that class he had few equals and no superior. He was not a popular preacher in the common acceptation of the term. His messages were too learned and fraught with too much meaning to draw and hold the multitudes. He was a prophet of the kingdom dwelling on the deep things of God rather than an advocate of any doctrine that needed special emphasis at any particular time. In prayer he was marvelously gifted. Neither Beecher nor Spurgeon nor Parker excelled him in this respect. His preaching and praying were entirely extemporaneous. It is altogether likely that he never wrote a sermon in his life. With his ample stores of knowledge and his fluency of speech and his thorough mastery of the subject, it was not necessary for him to resort to the pen even to make a channel for his thoughts. While he made the most conscientious preparation, like Wendell Phillips, he carried the outline of what he had to say in his mind. Writing was irksome to him, and notes interfered with his mental processes. Nevertheless, he wielded a graceful and powerful pen, and while he was preaching in Covington ably edited a magazine entitled, "The Disciple." From time to time he wrote for the quarterlies and for the religious weeklies.

It is safe to say that Mr. Jefferson's best and most enduring work was done as a teacher. Before he entered Eureka College he taught a common school in Pennsylvania for one year. While he was ministering to the church in Augusta he was called to the chair of New Testament Greek and Biblical Literature in Bethany College. He filled that chair for three years and to the complete satisfaction of all with whom he had to do.

A FAVORITE AS A TEACHER.

His ability and scholarship profoundly impressed his students and his associates on the faculty. They saw in him one of the manliest of men, a man who searched for truth as other men seek for hidden treasures, a man who had the courage to assert and to maintain what he knew to be true. His studious habits had not dried up the genial currents of his soul; for one of his students testifies that often when discussing the person of Christ his eyes filled with tears and his voice quivered with emotion.

From Bethany College Professor Jefferson was called to be the dean of Berkeley (California) Bible seminary, and served in that capacity from 1896 to 1900. As the Bible seminary was beside the University of California and the Pacific Congregational seminary, Dean Jefferson lived on intimate terms with scientists, philosophers, and theologians, and greatly enjoyed their fellowship. His personality and learning commanded their highest respect, and the most eminent of them gave him welcome as a peer in the highest realms of thought. From the year 1900, when he left Berkeley, till his death, Mr. Jefferson was professor of philosophy in Transylvania university and in the College of the Bible. His inexhaustible fund of information and his readiness and skill in presenting the same were a constant surprise and delight to his students. He worked harder than any member of the class. As a result it was seldom that any question was asked that he was not prepared to answer at once, and to the satisfaction of all present.

A SCHOLAR AND A GENTLEMAN.

Like every great teacher, Professor Jefferson taught men to think for themselves. He did not wish them to accept his statements as true and to repeat them, parrot-like. He wished them to be assured for themselves of the matters concerning which they spoke. It was his ambition to make a master-workman of every apprentice who was committed to him. Moreover, he took personal interest in his students and was ever ready to render them any assistance in his power. Like Dr. Arnold, he would stand hat in hand before any student who did his best, no matter how slender his abilities. What was said of a noted English teacher, namely this, "that he was a beast, but he was a just beast," could never be said of him. Professor Jefferson was eminently just to all, but he was a gentleman also. One student wrote that it would be difficult to point to a character more worthy of emulation or to a man more universally beloved by his associates. "Always a sympathetic friend to every student, sharing equally the ups and downs of college life, eager always to aid and to counsel in times of misfortune and sorrow and to congratulate in times of victory, his noble character through these bonds of feeling was so interwoven with the ideals and aspirations of each of his students as to become the stimulus for the awakening of all that was good in his nature."

"THIS WAS A MAN."

Professor Jefferson taught by what he was no less than by what he said. Like Shakespeare's hero, "the elements were so mixed in him, that nature might stand up and say to all the world, 'This was a man.'" He was frank and honest and fearless. He was catholic in his sympathies and looked with charity upon all the creeds that struggled to give expression to even partial aspects of truth. At the same time, he delighted in wit and humor and in all innocent amusements. He often reminded one of

"Sport that wrinkled Care derides,
And Laughter holding both his sides."

No truer man and no truer friend ever lived. In his own home he was a most gracious host. Professor B. C. Deweese, the member of the faculty with whom he was most intimate, said that he was intellectually honest, a foe to shams, a man of clean lips, the genial friend and associate of students outside the classroom, to whom his life furnished a splendid Christian ideal. Dean Macartney of the University spoke of him as follows: "He was a man of great intellectual gifts, an accurate thinker, a deep and thoughtful scholar, a man of highest moral fibre, of unblemished character, of pure life; a man of broad visions and sympathies, of high ideals, who daily strove to live true to his best thoughts—a Christian, a gentleman without fear and without reproach. He was a great teacher, who taught well both by word and example. His students admired his intellect, praised his moral character, but loved him for his great heart. Their interests were his; their joys, their sorrows, his. We and they cannot realize that he is gone. And he is not gone. The good he has done will live in our lives and theirs and work as a blessed influence in the years to come. 'We shall not see his like again.'" President Crossfield of the University said: "To rare endowments he added a still rarer culture. He was one of the fullest and ripest scholars I have known." Dr. Crossfield spoke of him as most approachable, courteous, unselfish, intellectually honest, and devout.

A COUNSELLOR OF MISSIONS.

For twenty years Professor Jefferson was a member of the executive committee of the Foreign Christian Missionary Society. The work he did in that capacity was felt round the world, and will be felt for all time. The management of a great missionary organization with missionaries in all the great fields of the globe is a most difficult and responsible task. In the selection of men and women for the fields his counsel was invaluable. His knowledge of human nature was wonderful, and his judgment of the qualifications of a candidate was highly esteemed by his colleagues. He was present at every meeting of the committee unless necessarily detained. He had faith in God and in the ultimate and universal triumph of the cause. Hence he was not unduly depressed by apparent defeat, or unduly elated by apparent success.

"A GENTLEMAN OF THE OLD SCHOOL."

Professor Jefferson was married twice; first, to Miss Julia M. Barclay, by whom he had six children, three of whom are still living; and secondly, to Miss Annie M. Waterman, who survives him. He was as gentle and courtly and chivalrous in his bearing toward these gracious women and to his daughters and to all other women as any gentleman of the old school.

On the 20th day of February, 1914, within an hour after he had delivered one of his most masterly and helpful lectures, this good man went to his reward. He died of angina pectoris. His remains were interred in the family lot in Lafayette, Indiana. The good he did will live for evermore. Longfellow's lines written on Charles Sumner may be fitly applied to Professor Jefferson:

Alike are life and death,
When life in death survives,
And the uninterrupted breath
Inspires a thousand lives.

Were a star quenched on high,
For ages would its light
Still travelling downward from the sky,
Shine on our mortal sight.

So when a great man dies,
For years beyond our ken.
The light he leaves behind him lies
Upon the paths of men.

China's Missionaries in Conference

Impressions of the Remarkable Meeting at Kuling Conducted by Mr. Sherwood Eddy.

BY VACHEL T. AND CATHARINE F. LINDSAY.

DURING our recent six months tour given to our interests in China, we had the great privilege of attending the Inter-denominational Conference in Kuling, led by Mr. Sherwood Eddy. We were present, taking full notes of every session, through the eight days. It was a wonderful meeting—the most spirit-filled, most inspiring, most practical Christian conference we ever had the privilege of attending, not excepting the World Missionary Conference in Edinburgh in 1910. Kuling is the mountain home of the missionaries of the Yangtse valley during July and August, while the intense heat, and humid disease-laden atmosphere, make it a risk to their lives to remain in their stations.

PURPOSE OF THE CONFERENCE.

The purpose of the conference was to devise the best ways and means for the Christianization of China. As a result of the evangelistic campaign of Mr. John R. Mott and Mr. Eddy last year, over 18,000 officials and students of the principal centers of influence had signed cards pledging themselves to faithfully study the four gospels and to prayerfully consider the claims of Christ, and, if they are convinced that these are true, to accept Him. The Christian world has never seen such an opportunity. A very large number of these have already united with the church. So much interest had been aroused that it was believed the time was ripe for a great evangelistic movement of the united Protestant Christian forces throughout the entire nation.

The missionaries present at the Kuling Conference represented almost every board of the Protestant churches at work in China, as well as every sort of missionary enterprise, medical, educational and evangelistic, distinctly so called, though every branch of the work is included in the general purpose of evangelism, and all work together to that one end.

Bishop Roots, of the American Episcopal church, presided. He is a very broad-minded, consecrated Christian gentleman.

A "LIVE WIRE" AS LEADER.

Mr. Eddy was the leading spirit, and general manager. He spoke every day, and every time it was necessary. "He is a live wire," an American boy would say. He is not noisy, but very calm, knows exactly what he wants to say, is magnetic, spiritual, intensely in earnest, a great organizer, and always business-like. He understands how to conserve the forces, a very great need in our home churches. The subjects for each day were very carefully arranged in a continuous program, each topic being a part of the one plan to conserve all possibly available forces for the nation-wide evangelistic campaign. There was much time given to prayer, and to Bible lessons, Mr. Eddy leading a series of studies in Acts.

There were at the beginning reports from the various fields, showing, on the whole, a vast harvest ready for the reaping. The inadequacy of the number of workers, their lack of equipment and want of support in the home lands, were points greatly emphasized, and no one seemed to know how to supply these deficiencies except by prayer. It was the unanimous opinion that the boards at home did not realize the extent and the significance of the crisis in China, as indicated by the movements toward Christ among students and officials.

HOW INSTITUTIONS AID MISSIONS.

The walls were hung with statistical reports, comparing various policies and methods, and kinds of work. It was emphasized throughout that those boards that sent out chiefly evangelists, scattered throughout the country and not supplied with hospitals and schools, accomplished very much less in proportion than those who centralized their work in one provincial capital or important city, established a well-equipped, well-manned hospital, a first-class school for boys, a boarding-school for girls, and training classes for the natives in whatever line of service each preferred, including physicians, nurses, evangelists, teachers and Bible women.

No one subject was as omnipresent as the necessity for united and thorough co-operation among all the missions and every kind of missionary enterprise, all focusing on the one purpose, the speedy evangelization of China. Fervent prayer was offered for the few organizations which exalted their personal opinions above the fundamentals of Christianity, and therefore refused to co-operate in this great forward movement. Their favorite dogmas that originated in the needs of some other country at some period long past, can not be necessary to the present-day China. The church must unite in giving these orientals the vitalizing, essential elements of the gospel of Christ, and trust them in making the application to their own lives and to the peculiar and present needs of their own country.

"THE OLDEST MISSIONARY" PRESENT.

Arnold Foster, the oldest missionary so far as we know, who took an active part in these councils, was an intimate associate of the pioneers who did the very hard work of the beginnings, and have nearly all passed on to the higher life. He is a devoted friend of Arthur Smith, the veteran of Peking, who, he says, joins him most insistently in his recommendations. We have all read books by this noted writer on China. No man at Kuling was treated with greater respect or had more influence than Arnold Foster. He urged the appointment of a general superintending secretary for each band of missionaries under the same board. His chief reason was that he considered it impossible for any body of men or women at home to imagine or understand the needs and the special equipment that is absolutely necessary in order to obtain the largest results from the investments in money, buildings and missionaries. He talked to us privately for several hours, and urged us to publish the summary of his conclusions from his years of experience in China.

His deep earnestness was touching, pathetic. He did not ask to what particular company of Christians we belonged, nor did we have the least idea who supported him. His appearance suggested Elijah the Prophet, except that we thought if the raven that fed him were sent by the Lord, he would hardly be so emaciated.

MEDICAL MISSIONS.

Naturally we were intensely interested in the discussions of the subject of medical missions. The central importance of the healing ministry of Christianity was emphasized on all sides. The Christian hospital seems to be indispensable to the success of missionary endeavor. But with the change of conditions in China and the change of popular attitude toward foreigners the function of the hospital has also changed.

The government officials realize keenly that the greatest need of their country is an entire revolution in their ideas of medicine and surgery, and thorough, up-to-date training in the theory and application of the laws of health and sanitation. They have not the money to establish the necessary schools, with even a small number of qualified teachers. Therefore they are very anxious to have our missionaries establish well-equipped hospitals, manned with a sufficient corps of trained physicians, surgeons and nurses not only to treat the very large numbers of the afflicted within reach of each hospital, but, still much more important in their estimation, to train their own men and women, so that they may go out and establish similar centers throughout China. Where such hospitals have been already in operation for even a short time, the local governments have largely subsidized them, and the patronage from the paying classes has brought a revenue which has not only made the work self supporting but contributed to its rapid enlargement. More important even than this has been the opportunity of spreading the knowledge of Christ among the otherwise unapproachable citizens of the province.

THE VERY BEST POSSIBLE NOW DEMANDED.

On the other hand, the old style of missionary hospital with one doctor in charge, no nurse, meager equipment, and oral preaching of the gospel did good in the way of leavening sentiment through a period of pioneer years, but the changes in China have been so rapid during the recent revolutionary times, that the demands are now for the very best possible. A large number of the present officials were educated in the United States. They are intensely anxious for the future of their country. They do not want inferior ideals.

The missionary hospitals of the old type are now largely patronized by the poor and ignorant classes. Those modeled after American hospitals, even if comparatively small, are receiving the attention of the government and the students.

The present great mass movement of the officials and students toward Christ is unparalleled in the history of Christianity. It makes it absolutely necessary to meet the needs and demands in China in a very different way from that in any other land, or at any former time.

AN UNPARALLELED MOVEMENT TOWARD CHRISTIANITY.

The final fundamental decision was: China can never be Christianized by foreign evangelists, even if an impossible number of them with an impossible amount of money could be immediately provided. There are many sound reasons for this conclusion, which we give later. The only possible way is to establish centers for educating and training the natives, and then send them out under the temporary supervision of missionaries, to build up out-stations all over China, and, as soon as they can become self-supporting, withdraw foreign money, and, in as large a measure as possible, foreign authority.

HOSPITALS AS EVANGELISTIC FEEDERS.

The importance of the hospital as a feeder to every evangelistic agency, in the light of the Kuling Conference, can hardly be over-estimated. If the students and official classes once recognize any hospital as an up-to-date American institution, the word goes out quickly in every direction. The cultured classes, many of whom could not be induced to attend any ordinary evangelistic meeting or enter a Christian church, will send their afflicted ones a long distance to be healed by the "foreign doctor"—not "foreign devil," as formerly. Two or three of the nearest relatives usually accompany the patient, and remain through the time necessary for recovery.

In the large chapel in the front part of the hospital building all the people are assembled a part of every day, while Christianity is faithfully presented by well trained evangelists; all this while the physicians, surgeons and nurses are taking the patients in their turns. From one to two hundred strangers is a common attendance at these meetings. There is a well-furnished reading-room near at hand, where visitors may read, write and buy New Testaments, tracts and current periodicals. These they readily buy.

One Bible society sold over 2,000,000 copies of the Scriptures last year.

The visitors have little else to employ their time, except in reading and discussion of this religion which the evangelists have said is the vitalizing force of the American Republic, and the only salvation for "New China."

"NEW CHINA."

The intelligent people are very keen in observation and conclusions. They are intensely ambitious for their children and the future of their country. If they are convinced that this hospital and the neighboring school for boys will furnish the training for their boys that they so much desire for them, in order that they may become leaders in "New China" and that the boarding-school for girls will educate their daughters so that they may be acceptable wives for such leaders, our initial work is established. When they return home they will spread the information among all their associates, and they will make any sacrifice possible to send their children to be educated by the "foreign teachers," in "western learning."

Thus the hospital becomes the source of supply for every associated missionary enterprise.

Victor Hugo's Easter Hope

I FEEL in myself the future life. I am like a forest once cut down; the new shoots are stronger and livelier than ever. I am rising, I know, toward the sky. The sunshine is on my head. The earth gives me its generous tap, but heaven lights me with the reflection of unknown worlds.

You say the soul is nothing but the resultant of the bodily powers. Why, then, is my soul more luminous when my bodily powers begin to fail? Winter is on my head, but eternal spring is in my heart. There I breathe at this hour the fragrance of the lilacs, the violets and the roses as at twenty years. The nearer I approach the end, the plainer I hear around me the immortal symphonies of the worlds which invite me.

For half a century I have been writing my thoughts in prose and verse; history, philosophy, drama, satire, ode and lyric—I have tried all. But I feel I have not said the thousandth part of what is in me. When I go down to the grave I can say, like so many others, "I have finished my day's work." But I cannot say, "I have finished my life." My day's work will begin the next morning. The tomb is not a blind alley: it is a thoroughfare. It closes on the twilight; it opens with the dawn.

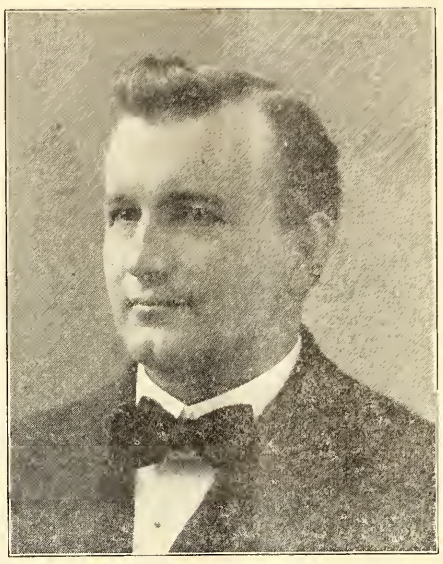
A Business Man at the King's Business

Ohio Brickmaker Takes Observations in China, Looking Toward the Consecration of His Life to Mission Work.

BY R. A. DOAN.*

IF SOME good angel were to say to me that God would grant one specific request of mine, and that this privilege would be given only once during my life, I would unhesitatingly pray that I might be given the power to reveal to American Christian business men the opportunity for investment in mission work in foreign fields. During these months in which I have been in the midst of a Christless people the deep conviction of our responsibility for them has been borne in upon me in an overwhelming way; and in an equally convincing manner have I come to feel that we are not meeting this great task with the consecration the situation demands.

The continued contact with these hopeless, spiritually starving people, who have none of the things I count most precious in my own life, has so shaken my selfish soul that I stand ashamed before the Master. In the midst of this appalling desolation I keep asking myself, "What have I done to alleviate this fearful distress?" And each time I am compelled to answer that I have done little and then try to justify myself by saying, "I did not know." I do know now and I can have no further excuse, but how am I to help others to know what I fear I would never have known had I not myself seen?



Mr. R. A. Doan, who has decided that an investment in human life is better than an investment in brick.

BIG OPPORTUNITIES, BUT SMALL FUNDS.

Two weeks ago we stood day after day in a Buddhist temple at Nantungchow where hundreds of people gathered each day at the appointed time eagerly listening to the teaching of Jesus Christ. The non-Christian officials of the city extended every courtesy and commended our teaching to the people. At the close of the week, when meetings had been adjourned to the little church, in order that we might get closer to those who were interested, many signed cards agreeing to enter a class for the study of the life of Christ. At once it became apparent that inquirers were coming in greater numbers than the little group of Christians could properly instruct. Nantungchow is in the midst of a district containing six million people for whom our own religious body is responsible. It presents opportunities that are rare even in China, but we must go slow because funds will not permit of rapid enlargement of the work. There are unmistakable evidences that unless we advance at once the present open opportunity will soon pass. What we can answer at the final accounting if we neglect to enter this open door is more than I can determine. I am sure we will be compelled to remain silent.

This same opportunity, except for certain local advantages, presents itself in thousands of places in China today, and so far as most of us are concerned, we sit idly by. It were far better had we never known Christ than that we should neglect these who are sending out a Macedonian cry for help.

I give some of my reasons for urging immediate investment by Christian men of capital in this work of the Master. Our missionaries are absolutely powerless to meet the demands that are made upon them by those who may be won to Christ. In the early years they sought many times in vain for opportunity to present Christianity. Now they must constantly choose which one of many opportunities they will embrace. Then they were coaxing and imploring people to come into their churches and to send children to their schools; now, they are turning them away.

"IF THEY COULD ONLY SEE!"

Money in the Orient (except the Philippines) will go twice as far as at home in erecting buildings. This is especially true in China. The cost of educational and evangelistic work is only a small fraction of what it is at home.

The joy of contributing to a world-wide interest cannot be calculated. If men of means could but come here and see how much relief a little money brings, how many burdens it lightens, what equipment it provides, what service it renders in the name of Christ—IF THEY COULD ONLY SEE! I would have no fear of the response. A few days ago I passed a distressed looking man standing near the hospital in Chuchow. His skin seemed to hang loosely upon his frame of bones; he was dressed only in rags. A few minutes later he was taken into the hospital and warmed and fed. Two hours later he died of starvation. He had been standing upon the street literally dying!

I came to the mission field that I might have stamped upon my memory the need of the world for Christ so vividly that I might never again be tempted to give too much of my life to sordid things. I did not dream that the need would be so awful that I would be unable to sleep after seeing it. Yet I am glad I came, else I might have gone on in my own selfish way.

A business life appealed to me from young manhood; I gave some of the best years of my life in an effort to make the best paving brick that could be made anywhere. But after seeing what I have seen in these recent months I say without reservation that an investment in China for the making of Christian men appeals to me a hundred-fold more than any investment which has for its object simply the making of good brick at a profit in dollars.

We at home ought to allow no missionary to have the heart-breaking experience of watching thousands of men pass by and on to death with no knowledge of Christ, because the long expected help from home fails to arrive.

FIELD FOR IMMEDIATE INVESTMENT.

I base my plea for this investment not upon the ground that all money and lives in the past have counted for all they should. Mistakes have been made. Wisdom has not always prevailed. No attempt has been made to conceal these errors The workers are profiting by past mistakes. Where is there a man in business but knows of many men in the same line of business who have failed? But that has not deterred him from entering the same business when he saw a good opportunity. I plead for immediate investment because of the opportunity and because I believe more is now to be accomplished because of the very mistakes which came inevitably from experience and lack of a properly balanced program.

Sitting tonight in the midst of heathenism, darker than anything ever painted for me by those who knew, I have nothing so precious that I would not give it if I could be assured that by that means my brethren in America who have it in their power to minister to these in the name of Christ, could be made to see the hopeless millions marching on without hope or joy or rest.

*Mr. Doan, of Nelsonville, Ohio, who was teacher of one of the largest men's classes in the world, was on the Commission of the Foreign Society to the Far East. He remained in China and has been speaking to large crowds of Chinese men in evangelistic meetings.

Two Poems

THE BURDEN BEARER.

I am the burden-bearer, I
Will never pass the o'erladen by.
My feet are on the mountain steep,
They wind through valleys dark and deep;
They print the hot dust of the plain,
And walk the billows of the main.
Wherever is a load to bear,
The burden-bearer, I am there.
—Robt. F. Horton.

FROM DARK TO LIGHT.

I know the night is near at hand,
The mists lie low on hill and bay,
The autumn sheaves are dewless, dry,
But I have had the day.
Yes, I have had, dear Lord, the day;
When at thy call I have the night,
Brief be the twilight as I pass
From light to dark, from dark to light.
—S. Weir Mitchell.

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY

EDITORIAL

MR. MILLER'S MESSAGE.

THE appearance of a new leader in the general life of the brotherhood of Disciples is an event that prompts interested observation and comment.

Rev. Raphael H. Miller, as pastor in Buffalo, stuck so close to his task that the full strength and stature of the man was little known in the wider circles of our fellowship.

But with the acceptance of the associate leadership of the Men and Millions Movement, with Dr. Cory, he becomes inevitably the subject of measuring study by the churches in general.

And the churches are finding in him a rare soul, one almost Calvinistically foreordained to the unique work that his brethren have laid upon him.

Slight of physique, he carries his body with a fine and quiet poise, that creates the impression of strength and weightiness which many a more athletic looking orator might covet.

His speech is syntactically chaste and even. No less fertile with words than with ideas he holds your attention partly in admiration of the perfectness of his sentences.

His sentences keep on meaning something more until the last word is said.

So far, he has adopted none of the habits that spoil so many secretarial speakers whose style is moulded under the high-pressure necessity of getting immediate results.

The little commonplace and ineffective "handles" affected by evangelists and jury lawyers and unconsciously adopted by many secretarial pleaders, such as, "My friends!", "I want to say!", "I tell you," etc., etc., have not entered in yet to spoil the clean-cut pastoral vocabulary which wore for a dozen years in one congregation without wearing out.

The grain of the man shows in his face. The thoughtful habits of many years have chiselled a fineness and depth of character into his features, of which one discerns only a prophecy in the more youthful picture shown in The Christian Century last week.

Mr. Miller is a Hiram man. To the initiated that fact is enough to define the quality of his mind. He thinks in evangelical categories, but these categories have, to him as to the typical Hiram man, taken on modern ethical meanings.

For example: When Mr. Miller would impress the ethical principle of our stewardship of wealth or talent or life, he casts it into terms of the risen Lord who reigns over all, whose servants we therefore are, and who, therefore, has a right to all we possess.

That is probably the back-bone of his message. Like the motif of a symphony it recurs again and again. The message goes home to the consciences of Christian business men and of Christian young people whom Mr. Miller is seeking to lead to invest their lives in Christian leadership.

His appeal is sane, thoughtful, patient, not over-wrought.

And his words are commended and reinforced greatly by the unmistakable sincerity that sits upon his countenance and registers itself in his every utterance.

WAR AND DRINK.

HOW subtly and in what unsuspected ways the drink traffic relates itself to the morale of a nation in time of war is brought out in cautious and restrained terms by the "British Weekly," which discusses Mr. Lloyd-George's suggestion for the complete prohibiton of the drink business while the war lasts. Says the "Weekly":

> Every generous heart must symphathize with the women whose husbands are at the Front. Their hearts are aching. They suffer from a constant anxiety and a burdensome care. They are often left long without tidings of their dear ones. It is only natural that they should easily fall into the temptation to escape into an unreal world, and to get rid of their pangs by the aid of drink. This is not a subject on which we are willing to write. But the testimony of competent witnesses is practically unanimous. In particular, it is found that the Government grant of $25 has often been spent entirely upon drink. We should remember that this bears very hardly upon the men who are fighting in the field. While they are giving their lives to their country, the homes to which they look back longingly are being wasted and ruined. The prohibition of distilled liquors during the war would have a most powerful effect in the abatement of this miserable scandal.

Any one can read between the lines of that quotation and see a hideous picture.

Mr. Lloyd-George says that England's enemies are three: Germany, Austria and drink, and he deliberately declares that the greatest of these is drink.

The government would promptly take action to prohibit traffic in alcoholic liquors if it could be assured of the support of public opinion. That such support will be forthcoming is not doubted.

A memorial to the Prime Minister is being circulated in Scotland, requesting just such vigorous action as Mr. Lloyd-George intimates may have to be taken, and it is reported that it is being very widely signed.

A distinguished Scotchman says that if the country were polled he believes "it would be as unanimously and enthusiastically in favor of the measure [prohibition] as of the war itself."

When Scotch sentiment expresses itself in that fashion the world may expect any day to hear that Great Britain has joined France and Russia and "gone dry."

CHARLES RICHMOND HENDERSON.

THE news that the life of this noble man had passed away at Charleston, S. Carolina, whither he had been taken in the hope of physical amendment, brought sadness to the heart of every Chicago man and woman, and to a multitude of appreciative people throughout the world.

Professor Henderson easily deserved title of the foremost citizen of Chicago. In all-round service to this municipality he was without an equal. To the duties of his class-room and his chaplaincy at the University he added those of many positions in which his services were given gratuitously for the community.

He was the President of the Associated Charities, a position which he filled not with official aloofness, but with a solicitous regard for the services to be rendered the unfortunate of the city, which left him drained of his energy by the prolonged drafts upon his time and sympathy. There were occasions when he came away from that work haggard and aged.

Even more wearing was the service he rendered as chairman of the commission appointed last autumn by the mayor to investigate the condition of the unemployed, and to report immediate methods for relief, as well as suggestions for new legislation of a preventive character. Much time and strength were devoted by Professor Henderson to this cause, and with results which are now beginning to appear.

These and many other duties pressed upon his brain and heart. No call was unanswered. Human strength, even such rare and guarded strength as his, was unable to sustain such a burden. He has paid the price laid upon him by an unaroused public sentiment. Conditions such as those with which he grappled will be increasingly impossible as the principles of a Christian society are realized.

But meanwhile the University and the city mourn the loss of a man whose like will not soon be seen again. He gave himself freely for the institution and the city he loved. "He saved others, himself he could not save."

THE EASTER MESSAGE.

"ARISE and come away; for lo, the winter is past, the rain is over and gone, the flowers appear in the earth, and the time of the singing of birds is come."

It was thus that the singer of the Canticles poured out his soul in delight at the coming of spring, and such is the deep universal note of the Easter season. All nations have rejoiced in the coming of spring, for then nature seems most eloquent in her argument for the revival of life after death.

A CONSTRUCTIVE WEEKLY

And such is the central message of the Easter time. That life is not the poor fragmentary thing it sometimes seems to be, but the beginning of a persistent and increasing experience is the word of Easter.

And the victory of Jesus over the powers of death, by which he could not be holden, is the pledge that in his strength and by his spirit we, too, may share in the life that is life indeed, and may become the living witnesses of the Easter message.

THE OUTLOOK FOR THE SOUL.

SERIOUS thinking about the things of the soul is on the increase in the United States. Careless, superficial, passive thinking is on the decrease.

How do we know?

By the books the people are reading.

The Publishers' Weekly in its annual trade reports shows that the high water mark of the novel was reached in 1908, when 1,489 volumes of fiction appeared in the United States. Last year there were only 1,033; a decline of nearly thirty per cent.

These figures are virtually reversed in theology, religion and philosophy, for books devoted to such subjects rose during the same period from 999 to 1,400; a gain of forty-four per cent.

If we compare the literary output of 1913 with that of 1914 we find the same trend shown, for theology, religion and philosophy have gained fourteen per cent and poetical and dramatic works have gained thirty-three per cent, while science and such technical subjects as engineering, medicine and agriculture have declined fifteen per cent since the year before.

Whether the figures indicate a falling off of interest in purely scientific subjects or a curtailment in the production of superfluous books is a question, though it is probable that both hypotheses are true.

In commenting on these figures the "Independent" reminds us that Winston Churchill's "The Inside of the Cup," which has the distinction of heading the list of best sellers, owes a large part of its popularity to its religious theme.

One can see from publishers' announcements that books of poetry are now being put forth with greatly increased confidence as compared with the recent past. This means that the people are reading poetry. And it suggests that we are entering a new age of poetic creation and appreciation—which means that we are entering a new era of spiritual life.

Poetry and spiritual life go together.

There is a great seriousness settling down upon mankind. Science has fought its battle, and has won a victory for its own method as against the dogmas and superstitions of the past.

With that victory won the human spirit feels more free to stretch its wings and soar to heights unattempted hitherto. Inhibitions and doubts are being removed. Imagination is coming into its own.

All of which means that the soul is coming into its own.

THE WRITHING OF THE "FIENDS."

AWFUL revelations of the wide-spread use of habit-forming drugs are coming to light through the enforcement of the newly-enacted Harrison law prohibiting the sale of such drugs except under the most stringent rules.

The delusion that the victims of this depraving habit number only a few worthless back alley characters is being shockingly dispelled in these days that the Federal authorities are clapping the lid down tight upon the stores hitherto selling the drugs.

Instead, the public is learning that "drug-fiends" are often found in respectable circumstances and their shame is now being exposed by the undone condition into which they sink when the drug is denied them.

All the government, state and city forces are compelled to combine their hospital facilities in order to make room for these human wrecks.

In the underworld and in unsuspected quarters of the "upper" world scenes indescribably pathetic are taking place. Cut off from their supply of "dope" the victims are writhing in anguish of nerve or are driven insane. Some have sought suicide. The insane asylums in Illinois and other states have been opened, by special provision, to receive sufferers from this habit.

Meanwhile there is much matter for painful reflection for those who can do no more than look on.

For years most states and most municipalities have had laws that, in theory, adequately prohibited the promiscuous traffic in habit-forming drugs. And all the time the sheriffs and police forces have winked at their violation, while the unspeakably sad havoc has been wrought in tens of thousands of souls.

Now that the national government has taken the matter up with laws and legal processes of its own it may be expected that enforcement will be absolute.

If it is, most of the present victims will get well and the law that seems at the present cruel will prove in the end to be inexpressibly kind.

ASSOCIATE MEMBERS.

DISCUSSING the outstanding problems among the Disciples of Christ a member of the Men and Millions "team" made an illuminating though, apparently, a quite casual remark before the Chicago Ministers' Association.

There are two classes of Church members, he said: the pious unimmersed and the un-pious immersed. The controversy over the admittance of the first class into churches of Disciples has given rise to an unfortunate terminology. We have gotten into the habit of referring to them as "associate members." But, the speaker went on, they are the real members and class number two are the "associate" numbers.

That seems rather obvious, and one wonders that it hadn't been said before.

To call a selfish, unconsecrated person a full member of the Church of Christ because he has been immersed, and to call a consecrated, unselfish person an "associate" member because he was baptized by some other mode than by immersion, is a strange reversal of the values Christ taught his disciples to keep to the front.

The un-pious immersed person is literally the "associate" member—he simply associates with those who are truly members of Christ's Church.

DEAN MATHEWS' RETURN.

THE visit of the two representatives of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ of America to Japan in the interest of friendly relations between the two peoples, was concluded early in March, and Dean Shailer Mathews, the president of the Federal Council, returned to Chicago last week. Dr. Gulick remained in Japan, where he was formerly engaged in missionary work.

The reports of the visitation show that the two men were received everywhere with demonstrations of deep interest in their message as representatives of Christianity in America. And Dean Mathews brings back a most interesting story of their experiences while there.

He is convinced that there is no more desire for war with the United States on the part of Japan than there is in our own country. It is apparent that there is a jingo element in both nations that seizes upon every pretext to produce unfavorable impressions regarding the other nation. But these hostile utterances do not express the real feelings of Japan any more than do those of America.

As to Japan's attitude toward China, Dr. Mathews believes that it is very similar to that of the United States toward South America in the days when the Monroe doctrine was formuated. Japan realizes that the most serious danger in the East lies in the attempt of Western nations to partition China among themselves, or at least exploit her great natural resources. It is the determination of Japan to prevent this if possible, much in the same manner as the United States resolved to protect the newer portions of the Western continent from exploitation and settlement by European nations.

Perhaps this view throws some light on Japan's activities in China at the present time. If so, her designs are less sinister and selfish than they have been interpreted of late.

The Larger Christian World

A Department of Interdenominational Acquaintance.

The Churches Cost Money.

When it is remembered that the churches of America are supported by the free-will offerings of the people, the total amounts spent in religious work are an evidence that the church is still a very virile institution. The running expenses of all the churches in America in 1900 were $158,000,000. In that year the Protestant Episcopal Church spent $14,606,000 for running expenses; the Presbyterian, $20,375.000; Baptist, $12,348,000; Methodist, $28,269,000; Roman Catholic, $31,185,000; Disciples, $10,000,000. These figures do not include the fabulous sums given colleges, libraries, etc. In general, the American churches spent 94 cents at home for every 6 cents they spent for the evangelism of the non-Christian world.

Episcopalians Not In Panama Conference.

The Board of Missions of the Protestant Episcopal church has decided not to enter the Panama conference of South American missionaries to be held next year. The reason given is lack of power to act without the authority of the general convention. The Living Church, a high-church organ of the Protestant Episcopal communion, interprets the attitude of that wing of the church as follows: "This Church enters South America to make its people better Catholics than they were before; to give them free access to sacraments that are alleged to be withheld from them by the Church of the land except upon terms, sometimes pecuniary, sometimes intellectual, that are in themselves unrighteous; not to proselyte from the Church of the land, but to make Anglican historic Christianity and Catholicity accessible to those who, in the western world, are not willing to be bound by the limitations of Latin Christianity, to people who wish to be Americans and not Romans. These ideals differ in toto from the ideals of the Protestant boards that sustain missions in Latin America. These are a destructive force; ours seeks to be constructive. These would make Protestants out of Catholics; ours would make Catholics out of lapsed Romans. If there were to be a conference of all Christian forces in South America, including, as a matter of course, the Roman Catholic churches of the various countries, we should be quite ready for our board to be represented, though we should be far from confident that any good would come from the conference."

Dr. Shailer Mathews Returns.

Having completed his work in Japan, Dr. Shailer Mathews set sail from Japan on March 17. During his stay in Japan, he has met some of the high officials of the government and has spoken in the leading educational institutions. The trip has been one of far-reaching significance both for Japan and the United States.

University Students and Religion.

The impression that a state university is "a godless institution" is entirely dispelled by a study of the facts. Men and women students at the University of Missouri at Columbia belong to 21 religious denominations. In the entire student body there are but 278 men and 57 women who belong to no church nor have any church preference. There are more students who belong to the Methodist church than to any other, there being 278 men and 127 women members. Then comes the Christian church, with 256 men and 111 women; the Presbyterian church, with 189 men and 114 women; the Baptist, 172 men and 98 women; the Episcopal, 62 men and 31 women; the Catholic, 46 men and 29 women; the Congregational, 30 men and 10 women; the Lutheran, 22 men and 5 women; the Jewish, 8 men and 5 women; the Christian Science, 3 men and 1 woman; the German Reformed, 5 men and 2 women. Other denominations represented each have but one or two members. There are 339 men and 99 women who belong to no denomination, but who have a preference for some one church. Eighty-five per cent of the students belong to a church or have a church preference. Sixty per cent of the men are members of some denomination, while 70 per cent of the women are members.

Rev. F. Herbert Stead Visits America.

Rev. Herbert F. Stead, of Browning Hall, London, is a brother of William T. Stead, the brilliant journalist that went down with the Titanic. He shines in his own light, however, and is making substantial contributions to England's life. Mr. Stead came here to spend a week lecturing and preaching at Auburn Theological Seminary, but he has visited some other cities during his brief stay. Although he is in favor of a large navy for England, and he believes in the righteousness of the cause of the Allies in the present war, he is anxious for America to take the initiative in bringing about the next Hague conference. He advocates an international navy and an international court before which world problems may be tried. The penalty to be fixed by this tribunal would be commercial boycott of the offending nation.

Chapman-Alexander Campaign in Atlanta.

The Chapman-Alexander evangelistic campaign, in Atlanta, Ga., has been successful. A temporary tabernacle seating four thousand people was erected. This has been filled to overflowing twice a day, afternoon and evening. Mr. Chapman has given attention to local problems and attacked especially the custom of keeping liquor in the lockers of the clubs of the city. All the churches united, with but few exceptions. Among those not going into the work is Dean Atkinson, of the Protestant Episcopal church, who opposed the meetings on the ground of narrowness of theological interpretation. There have been 2,500 penitents and a hundred young men have signified their intention of entering the ministry and fifty young women devoted themselves to Christian service.

Fifty Thousand a Year for Preaching.

Probably there has never been a preacher in the history of Christianity who has been as well paid for preaching as Rev. "Billy" Sunday. From September, 1904, to January, 1915, there was a total of $537,005 given Mr. Sunday for his personal use, or about fifty thousand dollars a year. This is nearly equal to the salary of the President of the United States. During this period 313,993 people have professed penitence in the meetings.

Son of British Preacher in Georgia.

Rev. Percival Morgan is a son of G. Campbell Morgan, of London. He has accepted a pastorate in America, having settled with Tutnall Square Presbyterian church, Macon, Ga.

Bibles With Bread.

The enterprise of the New York Bible Society is manifested by the practice which it has initiated of giving away Bibles to the men in the bread lines of that metropolis. Over fourteen thousand Bibles or portions of the Bible have been given away in that manner. Next to the English, the versions most in demand are Russian and Polish.

War Begets a Revival.

The old saying that it is an ill wind that blows no one any good is exemplified by the present war. There is every indication that the peoples of Europe are being brought face to face with religious reality as never before in a generation. Prof. Dr. Adolph Deissman, of the University of Berlin, writes that the war has been the cause of a distinct, and in many places, marked revival of the Christian life. In Germany competent observers are unanimous in the declaration that for the past few months the Protestant churches and denominations have undergone a period of intensified religious feeling. Perhaps the most remarkable feature is the holding of prayer-meetings. The people usually gather on weekday evenings either in the churches or in halls. The service is short but intensive. Song and prayer occupy first place. An address is not always given, but if so, is brief and to the point. In the country these hours of prayer and quiet devotion are sometimes held at noonday and the men and women come to church directly from their labor in week-day clothes.

Gospel Tents for the Farmers.

The rural church problem is one that is receiving much attention by religious leaders. The Congregational Home Missionary Society is trying to reach isolated sections in Massachusetts that are not able to maintain churches. In each of three western counties the churches own and equip a gospel tent. Each tent is in charge of three young men who live in the tent and preach the gospel to large audiences.

Religious Leaders Seek Efficiency.

The various employed officers of missionary and publication societies in Chicago will hold a conference at the La Salle Hotel, April 15-17. There will be departmental conferences for home missionary secretaries, foreign missionary secretaries, state and district superintendents, city mission superintendents, general financial agents and board of publication officers. These various leaders will study the methods of securing financial support, and of properly carrying on the publicity that must lie behind a financial campaign. Prof. Walter Dill Scott, of Northwestern University, will give an address on "The Motives that Prompt Action Today."

Federal Council Issues Reports.

The Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America has issued a paper bound volume of reports, of 231 pages. In this book the salient facts of the organization are given. The impression given by the volume is that American Protestantism has achieved much more of real unity than might popularly be believed. The amount of work done through this clearing house organization bulks very large.

Dr. Campbell Morgan Goes to Work.

Dr. Campbell Morgan, a British preacher who is well-known to Americans through his addresses at summer conferences in this country, has been ill and away from his church all winter. He returned to his congregation at Westminster chapel, London, Feb. 28. He also resumed his lectures in the Bible School on "The Historic Element in the Divine Library," beginning March 5. He is more robust than for some time, but he is still conscious of physical limitations and will have to go slowly for a while.

Bishop is Annoyed.

The Bishop of Birmingham in England is annoyed by the self-constituted critics of the church who are finding something to complain of. He says: "If the Archangel Gabriel were to appear at the present moment there would be some church people who, instead of observing the splendor of his wings, would be likely to remark that he was moulting."

Eminent Men at University of Chicago.

Leading pulpiteers of the country are brought to the University of Chicago as preachers. These men conduct the chapel exercises and preach on Sunday. They also maintain office hours when they may be consulted by the students on religious difficulties. The university preachers for the spring quarter have just been announced, as follows: April 4, 11—Rev. John E. White, First Baptist Church, Atlanta, Ga. April 18—Rev. Harry Emerson Fosdick, Montclair, N. J. April 25—Bishop Charles P. Anderson, Chicago. May 2, 9—President Albert Parker Fitch, Andover Theological Seminary, Cambridge, Mass. May 16, 23—Rev. J. Harman Randall, Mt. Morris Baptist Church, New York. May 30, June 6—Professor G. A. Johnston Ross, Union Theological Seminary, New York. June 13—(Convocation Sunday) Professor Charles Richmond Henderson, University of Chicago.

A Municipal Thanksgiving.

It is now nine years since the San Francisco disaster. Representatives of the great communions on the coast, university presidents, and others have united in a call for a municipal thanksgiving day on which the community shall give thanks to Almighty God for the rebuilding of the city and for the altruistic spirit in the nation which has helped in its rebuilding. Services will be held in all the churches and also in the municipal auditorium.

Change English Prayerbook.

The question of changing the phraseology of the prayerbook of the English church has been agitated for a long time, but the proposed changes seem nearer now than ever before. A committee was appointed which recommended 162 alterations. These have been opposed by some high churchmen and by some evangelicals, chiefly from the feeling that the discussion of change might precipitate trouble in the church. The Broad churchmen would seem to favor the change unanimously. The committee is recommending an "experimental" liturgy which shall be tried in the churches for a time and this plan has been sanctioned by the Archbishop of Canterbury. It remains to be seen whether the Convocation of York will take the same action or whether only in the territory of Canterbury Province alone the experiment will be tried. It is pointed out that any action taken will affect the church throughout the entire English-speaking world, either directly or indirectly.

John R. Mott on the War.

John R. Mott, Young Men's Christian Association missionary leader, is making addresses in different sections of the country in which he interprets the religious significance of the present war. His note is not pessimistic, though he recognizes the evil of the present reversion to lower standards of life. He says: "It has demonstrated the unity of the Christian religion; it has revealed a capacity for vicarious suffering and service, and the cry seems to be 'Let us use ourselves in service for others.' The war is not only purifying, but simplifying faith. The students don't believe as many things as they did, but they know now in whom they have believed. Sick, wounded, suffering in the trenches, they gather together to read and pray and sing. Said one young fellow who lay wounded and without help for four days and nights, owing to the inability of the Red Cross to reach him through the incessant shell fire, 'We had a bit of candle and used to drag ourselves together for a bit of scripture and a song each night. We tried to sing "Lead, Kindly Light," and we got along all right until we got to the verse where it says, "The night is dark and I am far from home," and then we had to stop.'"

French Huguenots Ask Aid.

The Evangelical Reformed church of France, the historic Huguenot church of that country, which has 450 congregations, is sending a delegation to this country asking aid. The chief spokesman for these French Christians will be Rev. Stuart L. Roussell of Paris. He belongs to one of the oldest Protestant families in the south of France, his name being one of those appearing on the roll of the early martyrs of the Huguenot churches. His present post in the Reformed churches is that of a lecturer and missionary on behalf of work among the young. The Rev. Mr. Roussel has travelled far and wide, visited four continents and preached in the bush of South Africa, India and Ceylon as well as in many European capitals. He has come straight from Rheims, which city was under bombardment during the three days of his visit. He preached to congregations who had taken refuge in the "Catacombs" at Rheims and some of his pictures deal with this subject. On his advisory committee is ex-President Theodore Roosevelt, and many of the most prominent clergymen of New York, including Dr. J. H. Jowett, Dr. Lyman Abbott and Dr. Newell Dwight Hillis.

Wants a Municipal Church.

Mayor J. W. Catock wants an immediate realization in his city of San Bernardino, Cal., of the idea put forth as an ideal by Rev. Washington Gladden some years ago—the municipal church. This mayor proposes to abolish by law all the existing churches, build a municipal tabernacle and employ a municipal minister, who shall accept a salary but refuse all fees. The proposal has resulted in most facetious comment in the secular press. Christians will have to settle a number of differences before this dream, for which there is so much to be said, would be practical.

Free Churchmen at Manchester Cathedral.

An interesting instance of how the war has promoted closer friendliness between the Church of England and the Nonconformist churches is afforded by the keen interest which Dean Welldon is taking in the visit of the National Free Church Council to Manchester. The Dean has arranged for a united intercessory service to be held in the cathedral during the visit of the National Council, and he will invite the clergy and members of the Church of England of the City. The National Council will adjourn one of the morning sessions an hour earlier so that the delegates from all parts of England and Wales may be able to attend the Cathedral service. Dean Welldon will conduct the service, and several of the Free Church visitors will take part.

World's Sunday-school Convention.

At a recent meeting of the Executive Committee of the World's Sunday-school Association it was voted to proceed with plans for the World's Eighth Sunday-school Convention which is to be held at Tokyo, October, 1916, regardless of the war now raging, in the hope that peace will be declared soon enough to make possible a successful convention. Rev. K. Mitto, of Mikage, Settsu, Japan, writes that plans are on foot for the erection of a building in Japan for the training of Sunday-school teachers, to be known as the Hamill Memorial building, in recognition of the service of the late Dr. H. M. Hamill, president of the International Sunday-school Association, who passed from this life on January 21, 1915. The location will soon be decided upon, and the Japanese hope to be able to begin the work of teacher-training in the new building next year.

Baptist Leader Exiled.

Rev. William Fetler is the Baptist leader in Russia. His work in Petrograd in the Doma Evangelica has gathered together several thousand people. He has recently been accused of being in league with Germany and of spreading German ideas in Russia. This report gets its only substance from the fact that historically the Baptist faith was introduced into Russia from Germany. On December 5, he was taken to prison and was about to be exiled to Siberia. However, he was released and given three days to go to Siberia at his own charges. On account of the frail health of his wife and three months old baby, he was finally permitted to leave Russia instead. Mr. Fetler and his family went to Sweden and he is now engaged in missionary work among the Laplanders.

Distress in Labrador.

Dr. W. T. Grenfell sends word to his friends in America that the distress in the Labrador country is unusual this winter. The catch of fish was very poor and the price unusually low. On account of the war, it is impossible to sell furs for cash this year. The price of the foodstuffs that must be purchased in Labrador is very high.

Here and There

What Books to Read.

Don't be misled by the oft-repeated taunt that the Ladies' Home Journal is too effeminate for red-blooded men. Many issues have contributions that are worth reading again and again. If it is for the fairer sex primarily, there is much that appeals to men of good taste. Read in the April number what our former President Roosevelt has to say about books and reading, and decide whether he or his fine essay is to be classed with frills and furbelows. No subject is of greater interest to the student than that of reading. Most of us must confess to having wasted many precious hours in idleness when we would have read had we known what to read; and many more hours in reading trash. The best hours in many a man's life turn on the reading of a great book.

Some men known to us would change their course of life if they would change their course of reading. The bigot will always be with us until you can induce him to read the history of religious opinions, or a standard work on the Inquisition.

Making Sure of His Audience.

Dr. Burton and Dr. Gage were ministers and friends. Dr. Gage had been lecturing on his travels, and one of his lectures—on Palestine—had been thought not so interesting as the others. On its second delivery many of the auditors withdrew. Dr. Gage's house was soon afterward entered by a burglar. Dr. Gage was giving Dr. Burton an account of it. "Why, Doctor," he said, "I had him down flat on his back. I held him there. He couldn't move an inch." "Good!" said Dr. Burton. "Now, what a splendid opportunity that was to have delivered to him your lecture on Palestine!"

Acting Just Like Church Members.

"Why don't you get rid of that mule?" "Well, suh," answered Erastus Pinkley, "I hates to give in. If I was to trade dat mule off, he'd regard it as a personal victory. He's been tryin' foh de las' six weeks to get rid o' me."—Washington Star.

Rolling the Mists Away.

It is never an easy thing to see the other side of a question. Our side seems so reasonable that we look with pity upon those who differ. We feel sorry that their gifts are so meager, or that they reason so loosely. But if we do put ourselves in the other fellow's place for a time it is wonderful how many changes are certain to come over us. At one time every sect thought every other sect doomed to destruction. When they knew each other better, the mists all rolled away. When we were not acquainted with the pagan and heathen worlds, we were "devils" in each other's sight. When we knew each other better, more mists rolled away. When differences among brethren vex and annoy, the proof is certain that we are not acquainted. The mists are rolling in upon our sight. We see through a cloud darkly, if at all. There is never agreement until we know each other, until we talk over the differences—until we get the fireside point of view and give up the battlefield point of view. Personal acquaintance is the great adjuster of difficulties.

Our Unfinished Tasks.

If one should take a superficial view of much that appears in some of our church papers he might be tempted to conclude that our unfinished tasks were about as follows:

Scolding each other.
Chewing the rag over small matters.
Laying the blame on some one else.
Trying to compel all to sing the same tune.
Locating the heresies.
Predicting the "dreadful awfuls" that are certain to come upon us, unless we repent.
Lamenting the good old days that are gone.
Remembering the things that are behind.
Trying to be lurid without being profane.

Billy Sunday's Social Message.

"Billy" Sunday, "fighting mad," we are told, made one of the most forceful utterances of his Philadelphia campaign from the standpoint of social and industrial reform, according to the Philadelphia "North American's" reporter at the tabernacle. In one of his famous afternoon sermons, "for half an hour he turned the biggest guns of his batteries on the child-labor exploiters, the political grafters, employers who pay starvation wages, and the food dopesters, and literally, to use his own expression, he 'shelled the woods for God.'" In connection with Mr. Sunday's political allusion, it is interesting to remember the Philadephia "Public Ledger's" demand that he openly attack the Republican political machine in the city, also to note that Mr. Sunday decided to lengthen his Philadelphia campaign by two weeks. In his sermon Sunday paid his respects to the type of man "who seems to think that his religion is summed up in the doing of a lot of special things, such as attending church, singing psalms, saying prayers, etc., and who seems to think that religion is confined to one day in the week and that the other six are the legitimate field for plunder." And the evangelist, as quoted by the Philadelphia "North American," went on to specify: "We have produced in America a religious type of men who are religious in the best sense of the word in their private lives, but who in their professional, commercial, social, and industrial relations, where other people are concerned, do not seem to think that their religion need necessarily enter. In other words, this idea of religion has produced men whose private lives are good, but whose public lives are rotten, vile, bad. While they are true to their marriage vows and virtuous, they are rotten in politics. We have produced men who, while they would not shoot a man with a pistol, will sit in New York City or Philadelphia and by a vote in the board of directors' meeting set in motion forces which ultimately may take a man's life out on the Pacific slope months afterward. While they wouldn't hand you a dose of poison, they'd sell you adulterated goods and kill people a thousand miles away. If your religion doesn't make you sell straight goods, then it doesn't amount to three whoops this side of hell in the pews, either. Men who would not pick the pockets of one man with the fingers of their hand will, without hesitation, pick the pockets of 80,000,000 people with the fingers of their monopoly or commercial advantage. Men in whose hands the virtue of your wife or daughter would be as safe as in your own will every year drive hundreds of cases of virtue over the line into vice by the pressure of the starvation wages they pay. Men who will gladly draw their check for $10,000 and give it to a children's hospital, see nothing ridiculous in the fact that the $10,000 for the children's hospital came out of $200,000 made from a system of child-labor which crushes and kills and maims more children in one year than the hospital will heal in twenty."

Valiant Service for the Peace Cause.

The Courier-Journal of Louisville is doing great service for the cause of international peace. Of course, army and navy leagues are peace organizations, so they tell us. Any of their members would be insulted if you intimated that they were preparing for war. They believe in peace with guns: so does a fish believe that the best way to secure his liberty is to advocate barbed hooks well baited. The military men tell us that peace is effeminate and will eventually destroy any nation, yet they believe in preserving the peace! If they can't destroy us with armaments they will with peace, so we are gone anyway. Here is a fine editorial from the Courier. It is entitled, "Let Us Pray."

The Pennsylvania, the mightiest engine of sea warfare the world has ever seen, the costliest man of war laid down by any nation, representing the expenditure of nearly 15,000,000 American dollars, equipped with guns before whose projectiles no fortification could stand, has been launched at Newport News.

The Pennsylvania would be but a single item in a long bill of particulars which would be laid before the taxpayers of America if they would agree to the inauguration of the adequate preparedness for which some of our thoughtless patriots, and more of our thoughtful lobbyists for dealers in equipment, are arguing. In the words of Watson, the English poet:

"If two men fell to fighting, of whom one
Carried that day no ready weapon save
Only an oaken stave,
While the other glittered in the summer sun
With casque and corselet, lance and whetted glaive—
By which of these would all but fool or knave
Adjudge the combat to have been begun?"

Let us pray that there shall not be, as a result of foolish pride, or dishonest urging, too many Pennsylvanias. We have paid for one war vessel the sum that Thomas Jefferson paid for the Louisiana Purchase, an area larger than the British Isles, the German empire, France, Spain and Italy combined, which now supports three times the population boasted by the United States when the purchase was made, yields $800,000,000 a year from tillage, and contains $900,000,000 worth of farm livestock.

Let us pray that the Pennsylvania, despite her enormous cost, will rust and rot and go to the scrap heap without having fired a gun save in target practice or as a salute, and without having served a moment of actual usefulness.

The Pennsylvania has received her baptism in wine. May she never receive her baptism of fire!

That Bishop Again.

My friend Idleman, why do you insist upon thrusting a Bishop upon us? Don't you know that there are already several in his seat? Let the matter drop, unless you can give a written guarantee that he will not interfere with the existing order.

THE SHEPHERD PSALM.

INTERNATIONAL UNIFORM LESSON FOR APRIL 18.

Golden Text: Jehovah is my Shepherd. Psalm 23:1.

Psalm 23. Memory Psalm, 23.

American Standard Bible.
Copyright, 1901, by Thomas Nelson & Sons.
(Used by permission.)

1 Jehovah is my shepherd;
I shall not want.
2 He maketh me to lie down in green pastures;
He leadetn me beside still waters.
3 He restoreth my soul:
He guideth me in the paths of righteousness for his name's sake.
4 Yea, though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death,
I will fear no evil; for thou art with me;
Thy rod and thy staff, they comfort me.
5 Thou preparest a table before me in the presence of mine enemies;
Thou hast anointed my head with oil;
My cup runneth over.
6 Surely goodness and loving-kindness shall follow me all the days of my life:
And I shall dwell in the house of Jehovah forever.

Verse by Verse.

BY ASA MCDANIEL.

1. Jehovah is my shepherd. This is a common figure of speech in the Old Testament. It doubtless originated in the pastoral life of the early history of the Israelites. Keeping sheep was the chief occupation of the inhabitants of Bethlehem. Jehovah was conceived as taking the same patient care of his people as the shepherd did of his sheep. The title of shepherd is also applied to rulers, see 2 Sam. 5:2; 7:7. Note the social element in the Psalm as well as the personal. —I shall not want. I have no want. "The tense is not future, but a present of habitual experience." Briggs. The shepherd has provided for all our wants. While this is a present reality it expresses also a confidence in the future.

2. He makes me to lie down. He makes me to lie down in the midst of plenty, so that I may enjoy my pasture with ease and comfort.—Green pastures. Pastures where the grass is tender and abundant.—He leadeth me. Shepherds in the East lead their sheep. The word suggests the idea of guidance, and sometimes the sustaining power of Jehovah.—Still waters. Hebrew, waters of rest. "Unto refreshing waters." Briggs.

3. He restoreth my soul. The word translated soul means life. He renews and sustains my life with the "green pastures" and "refreshing waters."—He guideth me. A word often used of Jehovah's guiding his people, and also individuals, see Ex. 15:13 and Ps. 5:8. On a journey when one is liable to stray from the right path a guide is needed.—Paths of righteousness. Dr. Briggs translates the phrase by "right tracks," those that lead directly and safely to the goal, as opposed to delusive tracks. He is safe who lets Jehovah guide.

4. Yea. More than this. The valley of the shadow of death. The hill country of Palestine is broken up by narrow and precipitous ravines, difficult to ascend and descend, dark, gloomy, and abounding in caves, the abode of wild beasts and robbers.—Shadow of death. This phrase is in the RVm. translated "deep darkness."—I will fear no evil. An expression of confidence in the shepherd's ability to protect them from injury of any kind.—For thou art with me. The companionship of a trusty guide removes all fear. Jehovah's presence is his people's strength and comfort. Thy rod and thy staff. The rod for protection and the staff for support in walking.—They comfort me. The presence of a faithful guide, fully equipped for his task, has a tendency to allay fear and calm the troubled spirits of those under his care.

5. Thou preparest a table before me. He can sit down and eat in perfect security though surrounded by enemies. He is safe and secure for the host is obligated to protect him.—Anointed my head with oil. It was the custom in the East to honor guests by anointing the head with scented oils in preparation for the feast.—My cup runneth over. Thou hast not only given me an abundance of food, but filled my cup with the best wine. The service of Jehovah depends only on our ability and willingness to receive it for his glory.

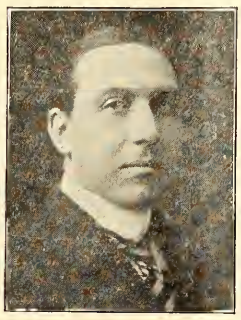
6. Surely. Or as in the RVm., only. Goodness and loving kindness. These attributes are personified, and represented as servants waiting upon the guest. This is frequent in the Old Testament.—All the days of my life. This is not to be an occasional guest, but one who shall have a perpetual welcome at the table of Jehovah.—Dwell in the house of Jehovah. These words are to be understood figuratively, and not of an actual residence in the temple. Meyer suggests that God's house is his Presence—Himself.—Forever. Lit. for length of days, RVm. The blessing of life is crowned by the still greater blessing of an intimate fellowship with Jehovah.

A Song of Comfort

The Lesson in Today's Life.

BY JOHN R. EWERS.

Says John Edgar McFadyen, of Knox College, Toronto, a very careful Old Testament scholar: "The problems of the authorship of the psalms is one of the thorniest in the Old Testament. One hundred psalms are ascribed to definite authors: One is ascribed to Moses, seventy-three to David, two to Solomon, and yet there are not a few scholars who maintain that, so far from being Mosiac, or Davidic, there is not a pre-exilic psalm in the Psalter, and the less radical critics do not allow more than thirty or forty. The question must be settled entirely upon internal evidence, as the superscriptions, definite as they often are, are never demonstrably reliable, while some of them are plainly impossible." He shows that the phrase "Psalm of David" may mean "Psalm for David." The only absolutely undisputed poems of David are the eulogy over Saul and Jonathan in 2 Sam. I, and the lament over Abner, 2 Sam. 3:33-34. Again, "What is certain is that David was an accomplished musician, a great poet, a man of rich and varied experience, rich emotional nature and profound religious feeling, a devoted worshipper of Jehovah, and eager to build Him a house." "Later ages regarded David as author of sacred song, just as they regarded Moses as the author of Hebrew law." "It is not probable that there are many, if any, psalms later than 170-165 B. C. in the Maccabean period; some deny even this possibility, basing their denial on the history of the canon." "The Psalter was the support of piety as well as the expression of it; and, to a worship which laid so much stress upon punctilious ritual and animal sacrifice, the Psalter, with its austere spiritual tone, its simple passion for God, and its bracing sense of fellowship with the Eternal, would come as a wholesome corrective. "Hatred of enemies, protestations of self-righteousness, and other utterances prevent it from becoming, in its entirety, the hymn-book of the Christian church."



DOES IT MATTER?

Really does it make much difference who wrote the twenty-third psalm? It is easier to say off-hand and without difficult investigation that David wrote it, and, there are not lacking dogmatic, superficial people who would stake their hopes of heaven upon the Davidic authorship of the Psalms. I remember Mr. Moody saying at Northfield, "I don't care whether there were one, two or twenty Isaiahs. What I do care for is the obeying of the truth found in those pages no matter who wrote them." He was right. Moreover, it is a positive crime to teach falsehoods in our Sunday-schools. No one should be a teacher who is not broad-minded enough to want to know the precise truth and who is willing to use his consecrated energy to ascertain the exact truth. But to inculcate as truth dogmatic statements about the Bible which simply cannot be squared with the best modern knowledge is quite wrong. It is not necessary to be dogmatic at all. One may state both sides and leave the truth still to be ascertained if there is any doubt.

TRY.

At any event one should make the effort to find the truth. Dogmatism and laziness are good friends. People who are too lazy to investigate take refuge in stand-pat dogmatism. It is easier to carve a cow out of butter, than to chisel a god out of Persian marble! But the marble can stand the heat better. The premium is always upon honest effort.

A MASTERPIECE.

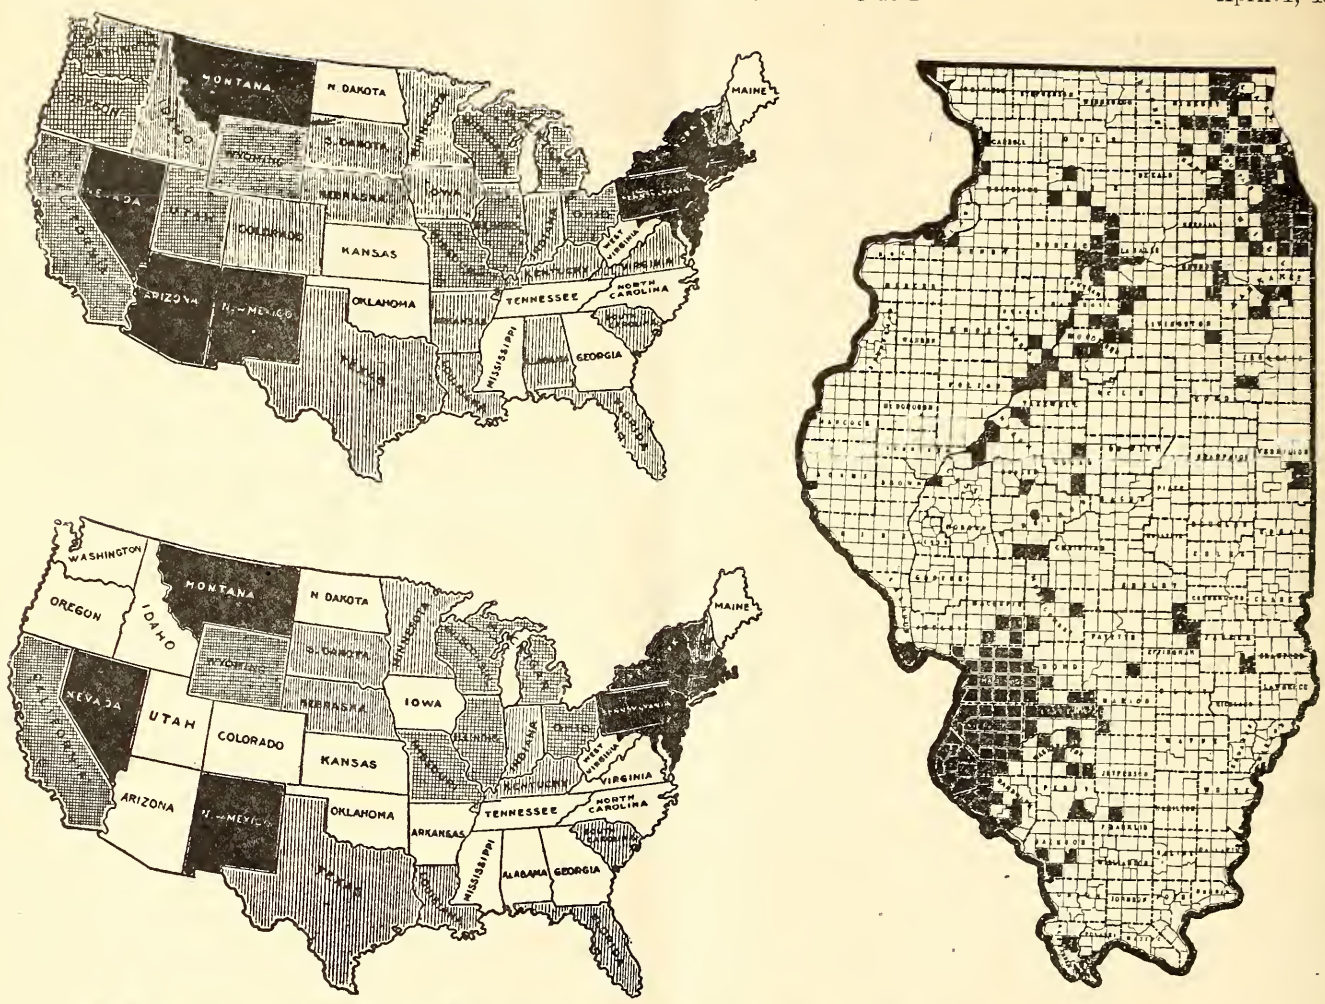
Now, whoever wrote this wonderful piece of literature composed a masterpiece. I would like to think that David did it, but I cannot be certain about it. Some say that it must have been written by an old man, so full of deep experience is it; others insist that it must have been written by a youth, so full of the love of nature and life is it. Beecher called it the nightingale of the Psalms singing out of obscurity, and flooding the whole world with its sweetness.

A CONTRAST.

It is purely individualistic. "I," "Me." Contrast the Lord's prayer with its, "Ours," "Us," "Thy," "We." Is this significant?

VALUE.

But when all is said and done we are too wise to waste our time in a critical consideration of the 23rd Psalm. To do that would be like scientifically considering the chemical composition of a baby, rather than hugging it, or to pick a rose to pieces rather than pinning it to your lapel or placing it in a vase on your desk. This psalm is a beautiful confession of individual trust in God. It is full of comfort. It seems like a quiet haven to some storm-tossed mariner; like a cottage fire after the hard day's toil; like the mother's arm to the injured child. Bruised and torn by the disasters, sins, temptations, sorrows of daily struggle, this peaceful psalm is as the healing oil. It is the fourteenth chapter of John of the Old Testament. But the difference between the twenty-third psalm and the fourteenth chapter of John is the measure of the distance between a mere man and the glorious Christ.



How Prohibition is Spreading

An Exhibit of Facts and Figures.

By E. J. Davis, Superintendent Chicago District of the Anti-Saloon League of Illinois.

Map Number 1: The Wet and Dry States on September 21, 1914. Map Number 2. The Same March 15, 1915. On both maps the white states are under prohibition, or have adopted prohibition effective January 1, 1916. States with perpendicular lines have over 50 per cent of the population in Anti-Saloon territory. Cross lines indicate states having over 25 per cent of the population in Anti-Saloon territory. (N. B. Anti-Saloon territory is where the saloons have been outlawed by votes of the people under enabling laws passed by the state legislatures.)

Ohio and South Carolina will vote on state wide prohibition this year (1915).

It is already settled that California, Florida, Kentucky, Nebraska, Montana, South Dakota, Vermont and Utah will vote in 1916, and state-wide prohibition bills are now pending in the legislatures of Delaware, New Hampshire, New Mexico, Maryland and Indiana.

Overy fifty-two million of the population of the United States live under prohibition; over 85 per cent of the nation territorially has adopted prohibition. One-half of all the people now living in license territory live in four states: New York, Pennsylvania, Illinois and New Jersey. One-half of all the saloons left in the country are in fourteen cities.

The eighteen prohibition states are: Maine, Kansas, North Dakota, Oklahoma, Mississippi, Georgia, North Carolina, Tennessee, West Virginia, Virginia, Colorado, Oregon, Washington, Arizona, Alabama, Idaho, Arkansas and Iowa.

Map Number 3: Illinois, showing the conditions just before the vote in April when more than sixty towns and cities will vote. The fate of over three hundred saloons is involved in the outcome.

"Constitutional prohibition is a certainty and is close at hand." This may be said to fairly represent the judgment of most congressmen at the close of the session of congress just ended and is a marked change over a year ago. It is construed to mean that the victory is much more than half won.

WHY PROHIBITION SENTIMENT HAS GROWN.

The change is attributed to several great causes.

First, the majority vote for the Sheppard-Hobson Amendment to the Constitution on December 22 last. The vote showed 197 votes for, to only 189 against—a clear majority of eight. It was so close to the necessary two-thirds that the liquor interests will never recover from the fright by this emphatic approval of a dry nation.

Second, the change in the attitude of public sentiment toward prohibition throughout the world. The action of Russia with the tremendous results following the act of the Czar in abolishing vodka. Notwithstanding the progress of a great war the net deposits in the banks in that nation have more than doubled and industrial productivity, according to M. Bark, Minister of Finance, has increased from 30 to 50 per cent. The attitude of Germany, France and the highest authorities in the government of England.

Third, the rapidly accumulating sentiment in the industrial world, that as a safety-first and efficiency measure booze must go.

Fourth, the changing attitude of the public press, both the great dailies and the scientific and technical journals, which are speaking with ever increasing frequency on the desirability of the early abolishment of alcoholic drinks including beer.

Fifth, the disintegration of the financial assets of the liquor traffic as shown by the falling value of its stocks and bonds and numerous failures of both breweries and distilleries.

Sixth, the rapidly spreading power of prohibition as witnessed by the fact that nine states have adopted state-wide prohibition in the last six months and that majorities against the liquor traffic from small towns and municipalities up to larger units are constantly growing in size.

The cumulative effect of all this is practically certain to so forcibly impress the minds of the members of congress who did not vote "aye" as to insure the necessary two-thirds vote in congress when the Hobson resolution is again submitted.

Could anything be more significant than the fact that not a member of either House would defend the saloon as an institution? Those still opposed to prohibition measures base their opposition on specious pleas in every instance. Bartholdt of Missouri is no longer in the House; Underwood has gone to the Senate where he will find two or three prohibition senators to offset his vote against prohibition, which, if it come, will be in defiance of the prohibition sentiment and laws in his own state.

Disciples Table Talk

Pastor Refuses Flattering Offer.

K. F. Nance, of Hutchinson, Kans., has refused a flattering offer recently of a salary of three thousand dollars as an associate to E. E. Violett. In addition to his evangelistic work, Mr. Violett conducts a travel bureau with headquarters at Kansas City, and he would have used Mr. Nance in this work to a considerable extent. Mr. Nance recently had a lively tilt with a lawyer of his city, but he seems to be very strong with his church and intends to remain and complete what he believes is his mission to Hutchinson.

C. G. Brelos Addresses Men.

Disciples in Waukegan, Ill., are in much better standing since the recent conciliation of the two churches, with which C. G. Brelos of First church had much to do. Mr. Brelos was recently invited to address the men at First Congregational church on "The Duties of the Nations of the World Relative to Bringing About Peace Between European Countries." The address was well received by the men of the sister church.

Young Farmers Graduate.

T. E. Trimble preached the baccalaureate sermon to a class of young farmers at Mt. Auburn, Ia., recently, graduates of the agricultural course. This is the first class of this kind to graduate from the Mt. Auburn high school and so far as known the first in Benton county. This course is arranged for boys from the country who are able to attend school only during the winter months and includes the following subjects: Bookkeeping, English, farm accounts, political economy, algebra, agriculture, general history, geography, commercial law and a review of the common branches.

New Teacher for Texas School.

E. C. Wilson, former attorney, a Disciple minister in the south for many years and at present a student at Clark university, Worcester, Mass., has been elected Texas Christian university professor of education. He will succeed Prof. John W. Kinsey, who has resigned to enter upon a course of study at Columbia university. A letter from G. Stanley Hall, Clark university president, to President F. D. Kershner of T. C. U. speaks of Professor Wilson's attainments and ability in the highest terms. He received his A. B. degree at Milligan college, in Tennessee, in 1887. He practiced law for eight years and then became a minister. He held pastorates at Collierville, Tenn., Sherman Heights, Tenn., and Knoxville. He was in Knoxville about ten years. Prof. Wilson will receive his Ph. D. degree at Clark university this spring and will begin his work at Texas Christian university next fall.

Tells Peorians Their Faults.

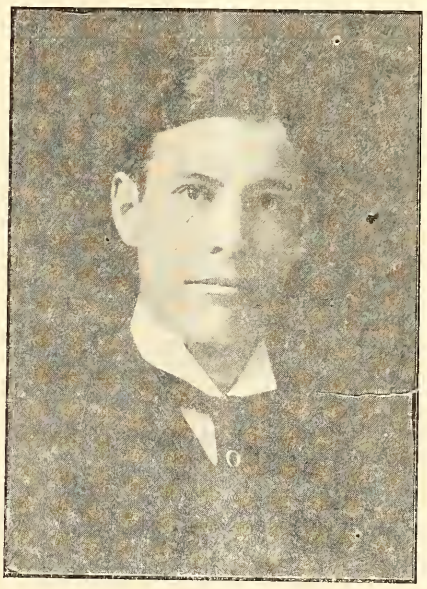
Homer E. Sala is not waiting to get acquainted before he tells the people of Peoria, Ill., of their municipal sins. He has recently preached a temperance sermon in which he charged that booze costs Peoria three millions a year. "If the money which goes over the bar in this city in two years could be saved, we could build a million dollar water plant, a million dollar court house, a million dollar city hall, a half million dollar light pant, spend half a million on play grounds, give the Association of Commerce half a million more to bring new industries to Peoria to take the place of the old, and have a million left to care for the poor devils who are now walking the streets without employment," said Mr. Sala. The substance of the address was that the "booze business' is economically a destroyer. The speaker gave statistics showing that only 2 per cent of the capital invested in the distilling business goes to labor while the average in other lines is 24 per cent.

Will Erect Tabernacle.

Park Avenue church, Des Moines, will erect a tabernacle to seat between 1,000 and 1,500 people. It is estimated that this tabernacle will cost about $700. A number of the churches of Des Moines are having large audiences since the Billy Sunday meetings. Norman Brighton is pastor at Park Avenue church. He was a Salvation Army captain in Canada before he studied for the ministry among the Disciples.

Eureka Gymnasium Coming.

The trustees of Eureka college met recently and engaged Architect A. L. Pillsbury of Bloomington, Ill., to draw plans for the new $30,000 gymnasium for the college.



President H. O. Pritchard, who is rejoicing at the prospect of a new $30,000 gymnasium at Eureka and in addition a new home for himself and family.

The money for the building has been raised in Eureka as part of the Men and Millions campaign. The trustees have also decided to build a house for the president, President H. O. Pritchard, who is on the road with the Men and Millions team while they are in Illinois.

Gets a Salary Raise.

J. A. Stout has had a very successful year at Bowling Green, Mo., and the church has called him for another year and increased his salary by three hundred dollars.

Secure a Parsonage.

The congregation at Erie, Pa., recently raised money and purchased a property to be used as a parsonage by the Erie pastor, M. S. Spear.

J. R. Perkins Discusses the Church.

J. R. Perkins, Sioux City, Ia., believes that the church will endure but is concerned that it be efficient. He says: "One of the seven churches mentioned in the book of Revelation, the church in the ancient city of Philadelphia, was a church of the open door. More accurately, an open door was set before it. Already had it won a place in that city. That is, this church had held its own; it had repelled attack. But like an intrenched army that had fought off a desperate assault this church seems to have crouched fearful and with baited breath, not leaping from its breastworks to follow up victory. It was purely a defensive church. An open door, which no man could shut, was before it, but nothing indicates that this church had passed its own portals in a larger life and service. A patient, thoughtful study of the narrative of the Philadelphia church with an open door will picture the astonishing strength of the modern church in its own intrenchments and its singular inefficiency outside. First, nothing is more foolish than the assertion that the church cannot endure. But how about the church's offensive strategy today and tomorrow? Will it leave its intrenchments and move to an attack? And by this I do not mean to sound a militant note, but simply wonder if the church will mold society into a vital Christianity. For the test of a religion is not in the cloister, but in the market place. We often become so fearful of religion operating in the state that we imprison it in the church. If our religion will not endure the shock of life it will hardly endure the contact with eternity."

Ladies' Aid Gives a Play.

The Ladies' Aid Society of Jamestown, Ind., are soon to present the play, "The New Minister." In this play the new minister is discussed by the various members of the congregation, and the foibles and peculiarities of church folks are set forth in side-splitting farce.

Austin Hunter Defends Capital Punishment.

Governor Dunne's proposal to abolish capital punishment in Illinois has been considerably discussed by ministers in this city. Dr. James M. Gray, of Moody Bible Institute, opposed abolishing the sentence on account of the Scripture, "Whosoever sheddeth man's blood, by man shall his blood be shed." Austin Hunter, of Jackson Boulevard church, is quoted as being against the proposal of the governor for prudential reasons. He said: "The substitution of a life sentence for that of capital punishment will be an act of taking away one of the greatest deterrents of crime. A criminal fears death and will therefore hesitate before committing murder."

Holds Spelling Bee.

Clinton, Ill., church had an old-fashioned evening recently. The Ladies' Aid Society was sponsor for a spelling bee and two sides were chosen "to spell down." The words were pronounced by T. C. Wampler, formerly superintendent of schools. The spelling contest was followed by a social hour and light refreshments.

Chicago Russian Mission Work

The Russian Christian mission of Chicago is being conducted under the joint auspices of the American Missionary Society and the Chicago Christian Missionary Society. They work among the great Slavic nation—the Russians—in this city. In connection with this enterprise, there are several different kinds of activity. A night school for immigrants teaches them the English language in three sessions a week. There are religious services three times a week and an adult Bible class each Sunday afternoon. Lectures on different hygienic and temperance topics are also given. The best attended meeting is on Sunday afternoon, which is a combination of Sunday-school and preaching service. At this meeting, frequently there is not enough seating capacity. The present building is hampering the work greatly because it is in a bad location, and because it is an old, miserable looking frame structure. The owner will not allow a Bible school for children to be conducted because of a fear that they will damage it. The Russians are anxiously waiting for the institutional building the boards have promised. Then better and more efficient work can be done.

The situation as regards the projected building is as follows: the American Christian Missionary Society has ready for use $10,000; Illinois Disciples outside Chicago propose to raise $5,000; the Church Extension Society is asked to donate $5,000. All this is on condition that the Chicago churches raise $5,000. The Chicago brethren have decided to raise the necessary sum by May 1. At the present time, the Men and Millions Movement campaign is on in Chicago. Their efforts will doubtless help the cause among the Russians of this great and fruitful field.

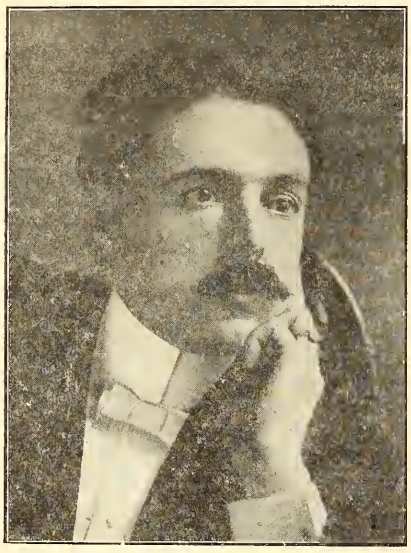
Bruce Brown in Evangelistic Success.

Bruce Brown, Southern California evangelist, has been in a remarkable campaign in the great Imperial valley, since January 1. When he concludes, he will have held a meeting in all the churches in the valley, save one—Imperial. At El Centro, where W. G. Conley ministers, there were 49 accessions; at Seeley, he held a thirteen-days' meeting for a union congregation, which is served by George A. Ragan, reaching twenty-seven people, 18 of whom have been immersed, and all are co-operating with the people of the community in the support of a minister. A great victory was achieved at Holtville, where 58 were added, and J. A. Shoptaugh, minister, is leading this congregation in a great forward movement. Real pioneer work is now being done at Seeley, one of the new towns in the valley, which numbers only about 250 souls. They report every child in the town enrolled in the Sunday-school. J. E. Maguire serves this little congregation at a great sacrifice. From Niland, Mr. Brown will go to Brawley for a short meeting before leaving the valley. This church, which is served by F. G. Roberts, has been co-operating in a great union meeting conducted by Evangelist French Oliver. At the close of the meeting at Holtville, a conference of representatives of all the churches in the valley was held. This meeting was attended by F. M. Rogers and Mrs. G. M. Anderson, State Secretary of the C. W. B. M. Mrs. Anderson organized an auxiliary at Holtville, and started a movement for an organization at Brawley. At this conference, "The Imperial Valley District of the Christian Missionary Society of Southern California" was organized, with W. G. Conley, of El Centro, president; F. G. Roberts, of Brawley, vice-president; A. L. Sebille, of Brawley, secretary.



Rev. Bruce Brown

A Successful Pastor.

Since the beginning of the present pastorate at Oskaloosa, Ia., about a year ago some progress has been made. There have been 149 responses to the invitation at home, and 73 elsewhere. All departments have raised about 6,493.61. Besides this about $500 has been given for missions in the budget. A Junior and Intermediate Endeavor Society, also a Girls' Circle, have been organized and all are thriving. Chas. S. Earley is the pastor at Oskaloosa.

Cotner Students Reject Title.

Ministerial students at Cotner recently held a meeting to discuss the momentous question as to whether it was right for ministers to use the title of "reverend." It was solemnly voted that this name belonged to the Almighty inasmuch as the single use of it in the Bible applied it to deity, and resolutions to this effect were sent to the religious press. Whether these students will continue their word studies in some other directions remains to be seen, but the method will produce some astonishing results if followed.

In and Around Chicago

The observance of Wednesday as "Church Day," is one of the new ideas at Memorial church. All the women's meetings are held on Wednesday during the day, including Ladies' Aid, C. W. B. M., W. C. T. U., and any other organization of similar character. In the evening a simple luncheon is served for twenty cents, and right after the dinner the company breaks up into conferences and committee meetings. Those not interested in these matters gather into a current events class and discuss topics of the day. The whole group reassembles at eight o'clock and joins in the prayer-meeting. Under this plan, the prayer-meeting has grown until there is now an attendance of eighty people. All the machinery of the church, including the meetings of the official board, is taken care of at this time, so that it is not necessary to make more than one mid-week trip to the church except it be for the socials and entertainments. There were five confessions of faith at Memorial on March 21 as a result of a special class conducted by Dr. H. L. Willett, the pastor.

Dr. H. L. Willett and family have been spending the holiday week of the university schedule at the home of Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Thomas of Evanston, but Dr. Willett has come to the city for two funerals during the week and other duties have proved heavier than was anticipated, so that the vacation week will not yield as much rest as this over-worked leader needs.

There were eight accessions to Evanston church, March 28, 6 by confession of faith. This was the beginning day of a week of special meetings.

Chicago Heights church announces that it will have the Vawter Evangelistic Company next fall, and active preparations are already under way for this enterprise. A. I. Zeller is preaching during Holy Week.

C. G. Kindred spoke at the Evanston division rally of the Christian Endeavor organization, held in Rogers Park Presbyterian church March 23. This division is one of the most active in the city.

The Sunday-school forces of Chicago are planning another big evening in April. The International Sunday School Association is bringing some great leaders to the city, and these are invited to speak at a dinner in Memorial church the evening of April 9. The following men will probably be present and make brief addresses: Prof. Walter S. Athearn, Drake university; Prof. W. C. Bower, Transylvania university; P. H. Welshimer, Canton, O.; and Robert M. Hopkins, national Bible school superintendent. There is also a possibility that Myron C. Settle of Gary, Ind., and C. L. DePew, state Bible school superintendent, will also be present. The leading stars of the Disciple Sunday-school firmament will be on the program.

Maywood church continues with its services in a dwelling house and Victor F. Johnson, a former minister, now an insurance man, preaches every Sunday. The members bought a lot for a church site last year and this will soon be paid for. Efforts will be made to erect a building with the help of the Church Extension society.

The death of Charles R. Henderson, chaplain of the University of Chicago, has brought a sense of loss to the whole university group. Dr. H. L. Willett has been given a temporary appointment to fill Dr. Henderson's place in the university as chaplain.

The month of March has been a time of ingathering at Hyde Park church. There have been ten accessions the first three Sundays of the month.

Chas. M. Sharpe is back in Chicago from a long trip through the South in the interests of the Divinity House.

Mrs. Elizabeth Ross and her son, the missionary, Emory Ross, are remaining in Chicago for a time in connection with the work of the Men and Millions movement. They spoke at the five o'clock service at Hyde Park on March 21 and the same evening went to Sheffield Avenue to attend a service.

C. G. Brelos, of First church, Waukegan, has received a call to Harvey church which he has under consideration.

The Ministers' Association held a symposium on March 29 on the subject, "What We Have Gained From the Men and Millions Movement."

Memorial church conducts a Sunday evening club in the church now which is making a good impression in the community.

Herbert Hines, whose address to the ministers was recently reported, spoke at the Evanston church on March 28, at the evening service, and he is announced for Memorial church on the evening of April 4.

F. A. Carlisle, who has been the efficiency expert of the Western Electric Company, and who has been preaching for the West End church, has resigned as his firm is sending him to another city. During his ministry, progress has been made in paying off the Church Extension mortgage.

The Men and Millions Team were at Monroe street church on March 28 at the morning service and were greeted by a fine congregation. In the congregation were some of the representatives of the Methodist denomination who are now engaged in raising ten millions of dollars for the Conference Claimants, or as Disciples would say, for Ministerial Relief. The Methodist visitors were studying the methods of the Men and Millions Movement.

Southern California Notes

John T. Stivers is aiding Frank G. Tyrrell and First church, Pasadena, in a meeting.

At the close of an appeal by the State Secretary for Missions, at Holtville two weeks ago, four consecrated young people volunteered for the ministry and the mission field. This is a direct result of the Bruce Brown meeting. Those thus dedicating their lives are Mr. and Mrs. Jankins, Mr. McDaniel, and Willian Lott.

In a follow-up meeting at the close of the Brown-Curry meeting at Long Beach, First church received about 60 accessions, J. N. Crutcher, the supply pastor, doing the preaching, and Mrs. Princess C. Long and L. L. Hoskins leading in song. During Mr. Crutcher's four months of supply work, 81 have been received into the church. George P. Taubman, called to serve the church as regular minister, began his work April 1.

Thomas G. Picton and East Side Church, Los Angeles, began a series of special services March 28, the other ministers in the city assisting. This church occupies one of the most promising fields in the city.

A new addition to Pico Heights Church, Los Angeles, will be ready for use by Sunday, April 4. The minister, S. M. Bernard, has invited the secretary out to put on the "finishing touches' that day.

Much of the work at State headquarters nowadays, has to do with preparations for the coming International Convention. Those who are planning to come should write the chairman of the Entertainment Committee, J. G. Warren, 1017 Wright and Callender Building, relative to accommodations.

Reports made at this conference show a membership of approximately 600 in the valley, distributed among six congregations. There are also Disciples in Dixieland and Westmoreland. The preachers in this valley are laying the foundations of what will be great churches a few years hence.

F. M. Rogers.

Secretary Rains Is Traveling.

F. M. Rains, the indomitable money raiser of the Foreign Christian Missionary Society, has felt the drain on his energies this winter, and his board has ordered him to take some rest after the March offering. He and Mrs. Rains have gone to Florida and from there they will travel in Cuba, Texas, New Mexico, Arizona, and California. Mr. Rains will rest by inspecting the mission work in Cuba and by making missionary addresses wherever he goes. He is probably incapable of taking any other kind of rest.

C. E. Morgan Gives Commencement Address.

Carey E. Morgan, in his capacity of president of the American Christian Missionary Society, is in demand for special addresses. He has been engaged recently to deliver the commencement address at Phillips Bible Institute, Canton, O.

Shall the Churches Be Taxed?

The question of the taxation of church property is up in various sections of the country, and a bill is now pending in the California legislature which would provide for the taxation of ecclesiastical property. S. M. Bernard recently addressed the Disciples of Los Angeles on the subject. D. R. Dungan was present at this meeting and added some personal reminiscences.

Preaches in Wisconsin.

Chas. A. Stevens, Edinburgh, Ill., has just returned from a preaching tour among the scattered churches of Wisconsin. He visited the churches at Sabin, Richland Co., and Sugar Grove, Crawford Co. There were no additions, but the spirit of good fellowship was increased and the larger purposes of Christianity as presented were greatly appreciated. Both these congregations are strictly rural, and have people of sister communions worshiping with them and assisting in the support of the work in every way. "These people should be taken into fuller fellowship formally," writes Mr. Stevens, "and made to feel at home, for there is no room for more congregations. Both churches have a fine group of young people looking to the church to furnish them with wholesome pleasures and labors." Each congregation has urged Mr. Stevens to accept a pastorate with it, but no definite reply has yet been given.

An Iowa Train to the Convention.

Already special trains to the Los Angeles convention are being arranged. The state of Iowa will go for the most part on the special being arranged by George Jewett of Central church, Des Moines. It is announced that F. W. Burnham, Secretary of the American Christian Missionary Society, and Peter Ainslie, of Baltimore, will be aboard. The train will stop for a day at the Grand Canyon.

Will Lecture at Drake.

Peter Ainslie, of Baltimore. will lecture at Drake university this year the week following Easter. Among the themes which he will treat will be World Peace, Christian Unity and the Church. He will fill the pulpit in Central church, Des Moines, the Sunday following the lectures.

Motion Pictures During Passion Week.

First church, Berkeley, Cal., has a motion picture machine and the pastor has secured motion picture films for every day during Passion Week. Pictures will be shown both afternoon and evening.

Tokens of Esteem for Pastor.

Jay E. Johnson, Bend Fork, O., has resigned from the ministry of three and a half years and is moving to Tappan. Before leaving his field of labor, he was made the recipient of some very substantial tokens of esteem. A reception was held at the home of one of the members to pay respect to the labors of this efficient minister and his wife.

Has Numerous Accessions.

E. K. Van Winkle is pastor at Mishawaka, Ind. There were 72 accessions in that church during 1914. A total of $3,311.39 was raised for all purposes. The amount given to missions was $287.28. The pastor is continuing another year.

Thriving Rural Work.

Allen C. Trusty has been called to a third year of ministry with Odon, Ind., church. He has inducted 48 people into the Odon church the past year and there have been 12 accessions at Burns City. The Sunday-school at Odon has an enrollment of 304. Mr. Trusty preached 94 sermons during the year and had 3 weddings and 3 funerals.

Will Try Continuous Service.

Hamburg, Ia., church, where B. H. Coonradt ministers, is trying the continuous morning service with a view to shortening the time spent at the church on Sunday mornings and to encourage the children to remain for the church service. The attendance at present is 150.

Grills Congressmen At Portland, Ind., Church.

An interesting evening was that on which Sam Small, the popular evangelist and lecturer, collided with Congressman Adair in Portland, Ind., church. The lecturer grilled all the congressmen who voted against the Hobson Amendment for national prohibition and the statement of the lecturer brought Mr. Adair to his feet. Under the leadership of John Hull, the Sunday-school at Portland has been growing until it now has nearly four hundred in attendance.

Disciple Governor Signs Prohibition Bill.

Some Disciples were pained some years ago when their own Governor Drake signed the Mulct Law, bringing the saloon back into Iowa, but another Disciple governor has recently signed a bill repealing the Mulct Law. Liquor forces all over the state besieged Governor Clark to stand by them, but he absolutely refused to be counted among the friends of the saloon.

A Live Federation Head.

The Church Federation of Los Angeles, of which the pastor of First church, Russell F. Thrapp, is president, is promoting an evangelistic campaign, culminating on Easter. Meetings are being held in various parts of the city in public auditoriums and on the streets. It is confidently expected that more than five thousand people will be received into the various churches on Easter Sunday. Thousands of members in the churches are pledged to personal work, and the campaign has done much to stimulate spirituality and service in the churches. Prof. B. C. Hagerman, formerly of the Campbell-Hagerman College, Lexington, Ky., recently spoke before the Council meeting of the Federation.

Rural Church Commission Reports

Alva W. Taylor, who teaches sociology in the College of the Bible at Columbia, Mo., has given special attention to the rural church problem in recent years, and in order to know things at first hand, he has lately served as pastor of a country church in connection with his other duties. The country church movement has developed a significant literature of a score or more books. Mr. Taylor has digested these books, and from all his experiences has brought out the first number of the Bulletin of the Commission on Social Service and the Rural Church of the Disciples of Christ. This commission is supported by the American Christian Missionary Society.

The first thesis in the Bulletin is that the Disciples of Christ are pre-eminently a rural people. He declares that 7,700 out of the 9,900 churches are rural. Only a little over eleven per cent of the members are in cities of twenty-five thousand or over. This creates a special obligation for the Disciples of Christ to meet and solve the rural church problem, if possible.

It has been made clear by previous surveys that forty-five per cent of the rural churches of the country are losing membership, while only thirty-two are gaining in membership. The reasons for this decline in many sections are to be found not only in the economic causes of the situation, but also in the bad methods employed by the churches.

Chief among the evils of country church management, Mr. Taylor declares, is the system of non-resident pastors who do nothing but preach once, twice or four times a month and draw their salaries. These men often travel long distances and spend their money on the railroads on account of the failure to co-ordinate the churches of a county in a group with a resident pastor serving them.

Among the influences changing the character of country communities and making the problem of the church difficult is the increase of absentee landlordism. Statistics show very clearly that the tenant may not be depended upon to maintain the church with the same degree of persistency as the land-owner who lives upon the land. The tenant feels shifty and uncertain and is also poor and struggling so that he cannot afford to contribute largely to the maintenance of the community church.

The remedy proposed is that the competition of rural churches shall be eliminated by combination where possible. The church must ally itself with the country life movement and be the friend of all that goes to uplift rural life. The church in the open country must learn habits of co-operation with similar churches.

The Bulletin furnishes a good bibliography of the live books in the field. The document is well illustrated with charts and diagrams which present to the eye at a glance an impression of tendencies and movements in the country. Some good half-tones are also interpersed so that the booklet attracts and interests the most casual reader.

The Commission of Social Service and the Rural Church has not decided to establish a circulation list for the Bulletin but each issue will be mailed on request to those who are interested in the particular subject treated. The separate issues of the Bulletin will be sold for ten cents and orders may be sent to the secretary of the commission, Prof. A. W. Taylor, Columbia, Mo.

Aged Disciple Passes Away.

Thomas Jefferson McQuiddy was a native of Woodford county, Ky., and died recently at his home in Hanford, Cal., at the age of 87 years. He made his confession of faith under the preaching of Alexander Campbell. During the Civil War he served the confederacy. He was twice wounded, and was taken prisoner. He served also in the secret service. His life was so thoroughly respected that the local G. A. R. attended his funeral. Mr. McQuiddy was elder in the local church and was much loved by his church associates.

Will Live With the Mormons.

J. N. Crutcher, who has been supplying the pulpit at First church, Long Beach, Cal., has accepted a call to the church in Salt Lake City, Utah. The Disciples have only one church in the state, so Mr. Crutcher will be a long way from any ministerial neighbors. The "Gentile" Christians of Utah are but a feeble folk altogether. The state is being given attention by the home mission leaders.

Missionary Writes On Way to Field.

Mrs. C. H. Plopper has just gone out to Japan as the Living Link of First church, Long Beach, Cal. She has arrived in Japan and while waiting for the quarantine officers, wrote her impressions of the voyage across the Pacific. Mrs. Plopper described the journey as one that was made pleasant by very beautiful weather, and her anticipations of the joys of missionary service are very eager.

Vigorous Life at Spokane School.

Spokane University is the new school of the Disciples of Christ which is located in the great northwest. Dr. I. N. McCash is president. The electric line has been extended out to the university grounds and a large number of new houses are going up around the university this spring. The baseball men have let the contract for their uniforms and as soon as the frost disappears they will be practicing to make one of the swiftest teams in the Inland Empire.

Establishes Calling Hours.

For the convenience of his people, Henry W. Hunter and wife, of Wellington, Kans., stay at home Monday afternoon to receive callers from the church. While the parishioners are welcome at all times, the pastor agrees to be at home at this particular time.

Year-Book of Berkeley, Cal., Church Appears.

Berkeley, Cal., church has issued a very attractive year-book containing the membership of the church and the officiary. The annual reports of the church and its organizations are also given. It is to be noted that in the five years of the ministry of H. J. Loken, there have been 356 accessions to the church, of which 74 were by baptism. This report will compare favorably with those issued from other cities not presenting the difficulties of the San Francisco district. The church raised over six thousand dollars last year for its various purposes. This includes the money of the Christian Union League, most of which came from the Berkeley church.

Woman Preaches In England.

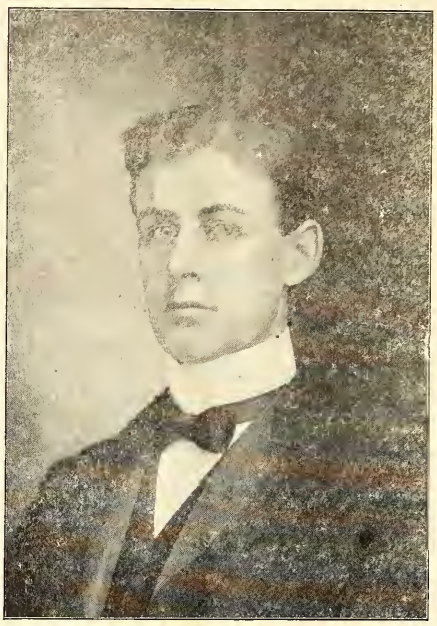
Conservative England is not so much accustomed to woman ministers as is this country, where a number of the communions have them giving regular service. During the absence of G. W. Buckner in America, where he helped his sons to evangelize, Mrs. Buckner preached in the church at Southport, Eng. This fact was heralded throughout England in the secular press. Her preaching was very well received.

English Brethren Will Have Tea.

Having tea is a very important and serious social function in England, having many connotations of friendship not suspected on this side of the water. The English Disciples will be at the meeting of the National Free Church Council at Manchester, and they will hold a tea between sessions. Among the questions discussed will be this one, "Should we go beyond the Free churches in our appeal for union with churches outside our borders?" The prayer life and questions of community service will also receive attention.

Birkenhead Has Great Missionary Day.

Birkenhead, Eng., church had a great missionary day last month. Wm. Remfry Hunt, a missionary of the Foreign Christian Missionary Society in China, who is spending his furlough in his native land, spoke at the conference. Another speaker was Mr. Kirkham, the founder of the Chinese Christian church of Liverpool, the only institution of its kind in England. The congregation learned the Chinese version of the chorus to the song, "Jesus Loves Me." Mr. Hunt lectured in this church on March 4, on "The Red Cross In China."



Rev. P. H. Welshimer, of Canton, O., who will address Chicago Sunday School workers on April 9.

Sunday-school Plays Baseball.

The Sunday-school at Norwood, O., has some live young men who play baseball every summer. The manager of the team, Tom Smith, is sending out a call early in the season for preliminary practice. The boys' class, called the "Valiant Knights," arranged for a hike with their teacher on a recent Saturday afternoon. The teacher has found out that a sure way to keep boys quiet on Sunday is to go out with them for vigorous physical exercise on Saturday.

Old Maids Will Hold Convention.

The old maids of the Sunday-school at Norwood, O., will hold a convention. On closer scrutiny, we see that the "old maids" are really quite young maids who are giving a play, "The Old Maids' Convention." It is announced for April 13.

Refuses College Presidency.

H. E. Van Horn, pastor at Oklahoma City, Okla., was called recently to the presidency of Phillips University, at Enid of that state. After meeting the board of trustees, and taking time for a consideration of his life investment, Mr. Van Horn has decided not to accept the presidency of the Oklahoma institution. He is being congratulated by many people of his state for not forsaking the work of the pulpit.

W. H. Waggoner Will Lecture.

W. H. Waggoner, of Eureka, Ill., is the missionary map man. He has made more maps than anyone among the Disciples of Christ. He also holds missionary institutes and is starting now on a tour through Oklahoma on his own responsibility.

An Opportunity for Chicago Disciples

The "Men and Millions Movement" is giving to our Chicago people a vision hitherto unknown; the spirit of a deeper consecration and of Christian union is becoming more real to our own people in this city.

Our Sunday-school forces should feel inspired and much encouraged; new life should be injected into our every activity.

Another great privilege is ours: On Friday evening, April 9, at Memorial church, Oakwood boulevard, near 39th street, the following leaders will be present and speak: Prof. Walter S. Athearn, of Drake university; Prof. W. C. Bower, of Transylvania university; Rev. P. H. Welshimer, of Canton, Ohio; Mr. Robt. M. Hopkins, our National Bible-school superintendent, and probably Myron C. Settle of Gary, Ind., with C. L. DePew, our own state superintendent.

What a rare opportunity this is for our Chicago workers to hear these recognized educational leaders of our day; and we should insist upon every one of our Sunday-school teachers and workers attending this meeting, with all superintendents and all pastors.

Please mark the date now, and save April 9 (Friday evening), for this occasion; urge all of your young people to be present.

The ladies at Memorial will serve supper (35 cents per plate) at 6:30 p. m., for all those who can be there at that time.

We want to start early with our program, which we promise will be full of interest throughout.

Keep this before your people; have a large delegation present from your church and school.

O. A. Rosboro.

From Foreign Mission Fields

H. A. Eicher, of Harda, India, reports that he has been down with another attack of fever, but is now up and well again. He is pushing on the work of clearing and leveling the land for the new athletic field for the high school. The government has made a grant of nearly $300 towards this field.

Ray E. Rice writes from Damoh, India: "We are now at our station in India. This is a great country and Damoh is a very interesting place. The missionaries here are doing a great work."

Herbert Smith, of Lotumbe, Africa, reports seventy baptisms. He writes, "Very nearly all of our outposts had good reports to give at the January conference. Some of them were very enthusiastic. Some inquirers had to be left at their posts because the canoes would not hold any more. One teacher reports that in his town the only people who have not become Christians are the children and the very old people."

Dr. Pickett of Laoag, Philippine Islands, reports the total receipts of the medical work for the year amount to $3,281.35. The receipts exceeded the expenditures by $59.83. The General Assembly appropriated $2,500 for the work among the poor. This has enabled Dr. Pickett to greatly enlarge the sphere of his labors.

Dr. Frymire and Herbert Smith, of Lotumbe, Africa, made a seventeen-day trip to some of the outposts in December. Dr. Frymire will write an account of this later.

Dr. Jennie Fleming of Harda, India, writes: "Last week Miss Thompson and I, with Mrs. Shah, went to Rahetagaon for three days. We worked in the villages on the way both going and coming. We had such good crowds and they listened so well. We divided into two parties and altogether visited ten villages. Miss Thompson and I gave a dinner to all the Christians, including the servants, as they were all Christians."

Mrs. L. B. Kline writes from Baguio, Philippine Islands, where she and the children were spending a few days' vacation: "This good, pure air is doing us a world of good. Our two children are healthy all the time, but lost their color soon after arriving in the tropics. It took just a couple of days up here to bring their roses back and now they are certainly pictures."

S. J. Corey, Sec'y.

Oldest Church in Illinois.

The oldest church of the Disciples of Christ in Illinois is said to be Barney Prairie church, with a postoffice at Friendship. This church was established in 1818, and was at first connected with the Barton W. Stone movement. The congregation has had a continuous existence since, and at the present time has 103 members and a Sunday-school of 100 members. It is not rich in this world's goods, as is evidenced by the fact that its total offerings last year amounted to only $400, but it is in full accord with the movement as is indicated by the fresh and up-to-date reports of the work being sent out. The church contributed to the various missionary societies last year.

Burglars Steal the Collection.

The reputation of the prosperity of First church, Berkeley, Cal., has spread so widely that even the burglars have heard of it and have grown covetous. Forty dollars was left overnight in the church recently, this being the day's collection of the Sunday-school, and some of the gentry with the jimmy effected an entrance to the church, and removed the surplus wealth. A number of the larger churches of the city have suffered similar depredations.

Nearly Three Thousand at Church.

University Place church, Des Moines, had 2,700 people out to a morning service on a recent "Go-to-Church" Sunday, this being the largest congregation in the city. Central church had a record-breaking crowd and there were over a thousand people at Capitol Hill church. Grant Park church had 150 people in an overflow meeting in the near-by school-house. The total result of the campaign in Des Moines is a very favorable one.

May Give a Pipe Organ.

Bellefontaine, O., church suffered the loss of its edifice recently by fire, and plans are now being made for rebuilding. Recently the pastor, Traverse Harrison, communicated with Andrew Carnegie with regard to providing a pipe organ for the church, and he has received a reply that gives ground for hope. The secretary of the steel king advised the pastor to write again when the building is a little nearer completion.

Big Missionary Days for Western Churches.

Bert Wilson, western secretary of the Foreign Christian Missionary Society, is arranging some great missionary days for the western churches. Recently at Mankato, Minn., Mr. Wilson spoke from the same platform with Dr. C. C. Drummond of India, and Mrs. Leslie Wolf of the Philippines. Mr. Drummond had a good collection of curios to illustrate his talk.

Wins New Members.

Albert R. Adams is pastor at Chicago avenue church, Columbus, O. During the last five months there have been an average of three converts for every service held. Mr. Adams has shown great genius in organizing the local church for work.

Dr. Mathews Visits Disciples.

R. D. McCoy of Tokyo, Japan, writes of the visit of Dr. Shailer Mathews to Japan in most enthusiastic terms. He says: "One of the leading Tokyo dailies spoke thus in regard to the welcome given to Dr. Mathews, 'No more important Christian convocation ever gathered in Japan than that which met to receive the message of Christian greeting and goodwill from 16,000,000 Christians in America to the one million Christians in Japan.' The whole nation has been impressed as never before by the goodwill of the American people, and the mutual bonds of friendship have beyond doubt been strengthened immeasurably. Dr. Mathews favored the Disciple educational institutions with a visit and two hundred students listened to him with great profit. To the missionaries who have been in his classes in the University of Chicago, his addresses revived pleasant memories of delight and profitable hours spent with him there. We only regret that his stay among us has been so short. Three young men were added to our college church recently. The baptismal service was an interesting international event. All three were students, one from Japan, one from Korea and one from China. The pastor of the church being absent, it devolved upon an American to administer the rite. The leader of the service used this incident to impress upon the audience anew the idea of brotherhood through Christ."

Will Care for Young Men.

Feeling that the young men of the church needed more care, Massillon, O., church has excavated the basement under the building and established quarters for social evenings and certain athletic features. This congregation enjoyed an address recently by L. G. Batman of Youngstown, O., on "The Working Church." The church has set a goal of a hundred accessions during this year at the regular services and six were received on March 21. The every-member canvass has greatly increased the interest and participation in missionary work. H. E. Stafford is the aggressive pastor at Massillon.

Rev. H. E. Stafford, of Massillon, O., who is undertaking a special campaign to care for the young men of the community.

District Convention Announced.

The third district in Missouri, which includes the Ozark country will hold its convention this year at Aurora, the home of the celebrated anti-Catholic paper, "The Menace." The program this year will have such men as S. J. White, Joplin; L. Z. Burr, West Plains; B. T. Wharton, Springfield; D. W. Moore, Carthage; R. B. Briney, Kansas City; V. R. Walker, Buffalo; W. F. Funderburk, Neosho; Prof. A. O'Rear, of Springfield State Normal and others.

Mission Church Doing Good Work.

First church, Indiana, Pa., is partly supported by the home missionary board. The congregation is enlarging the basement of the edifice and putting in a new kitchen for use in the social work of the church. One of the young men, George Rickard, has gone to school to study for the ministry.

College Professor Goes South.

O. G. Hertzog, of Hiram college, has spent a considerable portion of the winter in the south. He has been in Jacksonville, Ocala, Zanesville, and some other cities. He preached a few times during his trip. He is returning to Hiram very much refreshed.

Church Doubles In Four Years.

Iola, Kans., church numbered 217 members four years ago when Otho C. Moomaw became the minister. There have been 71 accessions to the church and the present membership is 463. There is a junior congregation and the church uses the continuous service in the morning. The Third district convention will be held in this church, April 12-14.

Lectures On the Reformers.

G. J. Chapman has been giving a series of Sunday evening lectures in South Lawrence church, Wichita, Kans., on the great Reformers. He has spoken for four consecutive Sunday evenings on Martin Luther, John Calvin, John Wesley and Alexander Campbell. Large audiences have testified to the popular interest in the subjects treated. Mr. Chapman will speak each evening during Holy Week on subjects appropriate to the day in the last week of Jesus' life.

Coast Church Goes Forward.

Gilfrey Memorial church, Creswell, Ore., held an annual meeting on March 5. There was a roll-call of the membership and a business meeting at which the annual reports were presented. The total membership of the church is 84, of these 54 being members; this fact speaks eloquently of the shifting conditions on the coast. The congregation was organized three years ago with fifteen members. Jasper Bogue is the pastor.

Efficiency Standards Are Adopted.

First church, El Paso, Tex., adopted efficiency standards for the month of March, for the church and its auxiliary organizations. These set forth in considerable detail just what ought to be accomplished to bring the various organizations up to proper standards of working efficiency. The standards for the church demanded ten per cent increase in the morning audience every morning for six weeks, over the previous week. The standard asked for the same increase at prayer-meeting, and a packed house for Easter. Thirty-eight new members should be received into the church. Among the efficiency tests were these: "House clean, warm and ventilated; adequate publicity for each service; full corps of ushers at each service; full corps of elders and deacons at each communion service; full chorus choir at rehearsals and at every Sunday service; promptness on the part of everybody; 90 per cent of pledges to current expenses and missions paid in full to March 31; 500 calls made and reported; reading the gospel of John by every resident member of the church; daily prayer for God's blessing on the church." Each of the organizations had a similar list of goals to be achieved.

Raymond Robins Evangelizes Drake.

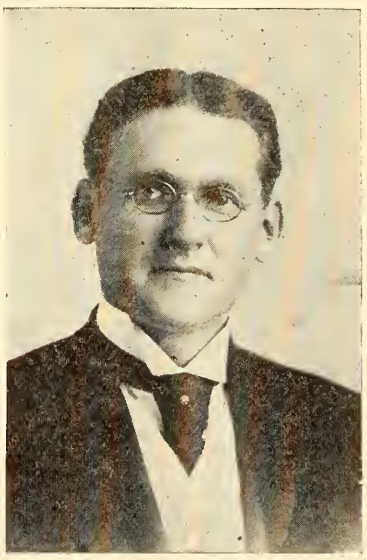
Raymond Robins, the celebrated social worker of Chicago, was engaged to hold a number of evangelistic meetings among the students of Drake University recently. His addresses were received with great interest by the students of that institution.

High School Students Study the Bible.

Two classes have been formed of the Paris, Ill., high school students who attend the Disciple Sunday-school. These are to study the Bible seriously as a high school enterprise and pass examinations on the material covered. In four years, two credits may be won in this way. The Sunday-school in Paris now has monthly conference meetings in which the religious significance of current events is considered and in which Sunday-school methods are studied.

An Institute for Religious Educators.

First church, Pomona, Cal., is alive to religious education interests. This church has recently held its spring institute for religious workers, and 33 teachers and officers of the Sunday-school have been studying better methods to increase the efficiency of the school. Frank B. Ward taught a course in Athearn's "The Church School." C. R. Hudson, the minister, taught a class in "The Maccabean and Roman Periods of Jewish History."



Rev. C. R. Hudson, of Pomona, Cal., whose Sunday School, under the leadership of Frank B. Ward, is taking high rank as an institution of religious education.

Baracas Will Give a Play.

The Baraca class of Norwood church, Cincinnati, O., will give a dramatic evening soon at which will be presented: "A Trial by Jury." The school of which this class is a part is keeping well ahead of Covington First school in a contest, although the latter school has been promoted actively by the whole force of a Cincinnati publishing house.

Adopt Vested Choir.

The chorus choir of First church, Los Angeles, Cal., Russell F. Thrapp, pastor, which is considered one of the best musical organizations in the city, appeared a few Sundays ago, robed in white vestments. The robes were furnished by Mrs. S. M. Cooper, a member of the church. Formerly, members of the choir appeared in dresses of various colors which did not add much to general appearances. Some also were dressed better than others. In the interest of uniformity, the vestments were adopted. The change has met with the entire approval of the congregation.

Another Victory For Eureka.

The many friends of Eureka College will be glad to learn that both of her debating teams were again successful in the annual debate with Illinois Wesleyan and Milliken Universities, Friday evening, March 19. This is the third year since the formation of this debating league and in that time Eureka has won five out of the six debates. The result is a splendid testimony to the quality of the literary work done in Eureka, and to the ability of Pres. H. O. Pritchard, who has trained the teams last year and this. Four of the members of this year's teams will graduate in June, but there are a number of promising young people in other classes who expect to continue the fine record of their Alma Mater. Eureka is planning a great celebration at commencement this year. The fact that this class closes sixty years of continued service by the college and the successful campaign for a new gymnasium, which will be erected this summer, combine to make it an opportune time for the friends of the college to gather and renew old acquaintanceships.

DISCIPLES PUBLICATION SOCIETY, PROPRIETORS, : 700 EAST 40th ST., CHICAGO

Disciples Publication Society

The Disciples Publication Society is an organization through which churches of the Disciples of Christ seek to promote undenominational and constructive Christianity.

The relationship it sustains to the Disciples is intimate and organic, though not official. The Society is not a private institution. It has no capital stock. No individuals profit by its earnings. The churches and Sunday-schools own and directly operate it. It is their contribution to the advocacy and practice of the ideals of Christian unity and religious education.

The charter under which the Society exists determines that whatever profits are earned shall be applied to agencies which foster the cause of religious education, although it is clearly conceived that its main task is not to make profits but to produce literature for building up character and for advancing the cause of religion.

The Disciples Publication Society regards itself as a thoroughly undenominational institution. It is organized and constituted by individuals and churches who interpret the Disciples' religious reformation as ideally an unsectarian and unecclesiastical fraternity, whose common tie and original impuse are fundamentally the desire to practice Christian unity with all Christians.

The Society therefore claims fellowship with all who belong to the living Church of Christ, and desires to co-operate with the Christian people of all communions as well as with the congregations of Disciples, and to serve all.

In publishing literature for religious education the Society believes a body of such literature prepared by the co-operative effort of many communions reaches a much higher level of catholicity and truth than can be attained by writers limited by the point of view of a single communion.

* * *

The Sunday-school literature (The Bethany System) published by this house, has been prepared through the Society's association with the writers, editors and official publishing houses of the Methodist, Presbyterian, Congregational and other communions. In its mechanical and artistic quality, its low selling-price, its pedagogical adequacy, and, still more, in its happy solution of doctrinal differences it is a striking illustration of the possibilities of the new day of unity into which the church is now being ushered.

* * *

The Christian Century, the chief publication of the Society, desires nothing so much as to be the worthy organ of the Disciples' movement. It has no ambition at all to be regarded as an organ of the Disciples' denomination. It is a free interpreter of the wider fellowship in religious faith and service which it believes every church of Disciples should embody. It strives to interpret all communions, as well as the Disciples, in such terms and with such sympathetic insight as may reveal to all their essential unity in spite of denominational isolation. Unlike the typical denominational paper, The Christian Century, though published by the Disciples, is not published for the Disciples alone. It is published for the Christian world. It desires definitely to occupy a catholic point of view and it seeks readers in all communions.

Our Success Depends Upon You!

The Christian Century and the Disciples Publication Society belong to the Disciples of Christ, not to private individuals. With the steady enlargement of the volume of its business the Society will ultimately be on a self-supporting basis and its earnings will go to the cause of Christian education and missions. At present it depends for its existence upon gifts offered by friends who believe in the work it is doing and wish to see its ideals prevail among the Disciples and in the larger Christian world.

You are one of the friends of this great work.

Our success depends upon you!

The list of our supporters has been steadily growing. A few generous men and women have shown especial devotion by making large gifts. Every layman and minister who cherishes hopes for the success of such an enterprise will wish to make a gift to its support.

In addition to your own gift, you know of others in your congregation who, if the matter were brought forcefully to their attention, will find pleasure in making a gift. We depend upon you to secure their support.

The usefulness of The Christian Century and the Disciples Publication Society can be extended immeasurably by the prompt assistance of our generous friends.

We depend upon you to stand behind us! And we need your support now!

Do not let our call pass unheeded but fill out this blank and mail to us at once.

The Life Call

THE DOMINANT NOTE IN THE MEN AND MILLIONS MOVEMENT IS THE CALL FOR THE INVESTMENT AND CONSECRATION OF LIFE TO LEADERSHIP IN THE KINGDOM OF GOD.

This is one of the surprises in store for those churches to which this movement is yet to come.

Most people have conceived the movement as primarily a call for money. The Millions have overshadowed the Men; the Men are regarded as a sort of after-thought, a by-product of a big campaign for the gathering of a huge sum of money.

If you have that notion it might as well be gotten rid of first as last. When the Movement reaches your town, cautious pastor, and the leaders begin to talk with you about their program, here is an excellent and much rehearsed speech we earnestly advise you not to make:

"Of course I am glad to have you distinguished brethren come to our town and our church, but really we have very little grist for your mill here. There are only three or four persons it is worth your while to see. Our local financial burdens have been so heavy that our people can hardly be expected to join in very generously in raising this six million dollars. Besides, the times are unusually tight here and some of our most able givers have been pretty hard hit."

Don't make that speech!

In the first place, you could be arrested right there on the spot for self-evident plagiarism. These men have heard that speech in exactly those words at least once before, and they can prove that it is not original with you.

In the second place, they have a response to make that will bring confusion and embarrassment to the man that talks that way.

And in the third place, such a speech betrays the fact that you have seriously misconceived the Men and Millions Movement, and that your misconception has cut you out of making adequate enough preparations for taking advantage of the visit of these Church leaders to your town.

Get this clearly fixed in mind, that Men and Millions bestows incalculably more than it asks!

It takes away for the cause of Christ an offering of money, but it leaves behind a rare deposit of spiritual treasure that will enrich the life of your congregation through all time.

The Men and Millions "team" comes into your town primarily to sound the life call, to urge the claim of specific Christian leadership upon young people who are at the deciding point in the matter of their life vocation.

"Men" is their essential object.

"Millions" is a by-product of their quest for "Men."

This being true, the humblest church is important enough to claim their services. In Chicago the modest mission congregations received the same attention that was bestowed upon Englewood and Jackson Boulevard and Hyde Park and Memorial.

From some of these humbler congregations it was known in advance that not a dollar could be expected. But the presidents of two colleges, three distinguished missionaries, the president of the American Missionary Society, two missionary secretaries whose names are household words in the length and breadth of the land, and all the members of the "team" spent themselves with impartial unselfishness upon mission churches as upon the more resourceful congregations.

The result of it all is that scores of young men and women are prayerfully weighing the claims of a life of unselfish Christian leadership in foreign and home mission fields as against the attractions of a business or professional career in the conventional and overcrowded fields near at hand.

The urgency of the call for the investment of life in tasks of Christian leadership, as presented by the Men and Millions Movement, does not presuppose any ethical superiority of such a career as compared to the career of the conventional business or professional man.

The call does not represent a reversion to the false distinction between sacred and secular vocations.

It implies nothing invidious as to the Christian character of other callings. One is impressed with the delicacy and skill with which the members of the "team" treat this point.

It would be very easy to fall into the false assumption that missionary work is more "Christian" work than merchandizing work, or professional work or industrial work. But it seems to have become pretty well established now, theoretically, at least, that all honest work is religious, is partnership with God, and is to be undertaken in the fear and guidance of God, just as it is presumed a minister or missionary undertakes his work in the fear and guidance of God.

The life call of the Men and Millions Movement is not a call to invest one's life in Christian WORK but in Christian LEADERSHIP.

And the motives urged are the motives of opportunity, of human need and of the strategic hour.

It is clear to persons of Christian discernment that the Kingdom of God is facing in these days the most colossal opportunity since Christian history began.

Equally manifest is the fact that this opportunity has developed to the point of crisis—this is the decisive hour for vast non-Christian civilizations and for Christendom itself, the hour in which what we do or fail to do will tell on ages.

In this hour the call goes forth for Christian leaders, for teachers and preachers and physicians and agriculturalists and nurses, to invest their lives not in commerce or in the well-worked fields of the conventional professions but in the unworked and needy fields of foreign lands and city slums and undeveloped frontiers.

No church will face its spiritual task in terms that involve the investment of life and at the same time fail to invest its money. In a church whose young people renounce the attractions of business or profession and consecrate themselves to the work in the particular field to which the will of God seems to guide them there will be a surprising outpouring of gifts of money from those who cannot themselves go.

Responding to the same call that searches the hearts of young men and women who have a life to give, those of maturer years will come forward with the fruitage of the life they have already lived or are yet actively living and will consecrate this fruitage in thousands and tens of thousands of dollars to the support of Christ's work.

Thus the whole call of Men and Millions is a life call. Whether the full six million dollars will be secured or not—though there is less reason today than ever to doubt that it will be secured—it grows increasingly clear that the spiritual uplift to the churches through the call for the investment of life will abundantly justify the whole vast endeavor.

At Lu Chow-fu

Great Opportunity for Medical Missionary Service at Strategic Center.

BY VACHEL T. AND CATHARINE F. LINDSAY.

There is a particularly strong appeal in the call Dr. and Mrs. Lindsay are here making for funds with which to start the equipment of the hospital at Lu Chow-fu. They visited their daughter, Mrs. Olive Wakefield, wife of Dr. Paul Wakefield, the medical missionary at Lu Chow-fu, last fall and came away with a profound sense of depression, not at the limitation of circumstance surrounding the home life of their daughter and grand-children, but chiefly at the pathetic limitation of equipment with which Dr. Wakefield was compelled to face a magnificent opportunity for Christian service. Here was a highly trained Doctor, thoroughly scientific but bare-handed. Here was an ample hospital building, but bare of furnishings and equipment. And hither were hundreds and thousands of sick people coming for aid in a constant stream throughout the year. Dr. and Mrs. Lindsay have the approval of the office of the Foreign Society in soliciting funds to provide this equipment and will report to the Society all gifts received by them at their home in Springfield, Ill.

IN THE allotment of missionary territory to the various Christian bodies we Disciples have been providentially given heart centers in China.

People living in the Lu Chow-fu hospital in the morning. Over 35,000 treatments per year are given in this institution.

Without exception those assigned to us are strategic. Our chain of stations lies in the Yangtse Valley, which rich section is to China what the Mississippi Valley is to the United States.

Nantungchow, Chu-chow and Lu Chow-fu are all important centers in the midst of the very heart of the country. At Nanking and Wuhu we have also a large part in union work.

Lu Chow-fu is in the center of the most populous eastern half of China, not far north of the Yangtse river, northwest of Wuhu, a river port. The surrounding district includes many other important cities, thus far untouched by our missionaries. The population is dense, and includes about 3,000,000 inhabitants, a large proportion of whom have never seen a Christian. We have had mission work here during many years. The city has about 75,000 inhabitants, and though now only an inland Chinese town, is destined soon to be a large commercial center.

IMPORTANCE OF LU CHOW-FU.

The English have laid out and partly built a railroad through the province, connecting on the west with the one great western road from Hankow, "the Chicago of China," to Peking, the capital, a distance of about 750 miles northwest through a very rich country. On the east it will connect with the equally important road, the eastern outlet for China, recently completed, between Tientsin, the Pacific port of Peking, and Nanking, the educational capital, over 700 miles south. Thus Lu Chow-fu will soon become the commercial center for that part of China. It will be the place of export both west and east for the products of that fertile district, rice, tea, vegetables, silks, linen, cotton, and whatever industries these enterprising people may find profitable. They are on the keen lookout for opportunities. The country for a long distance is flat, and marvelously productive. Almost every foot of ground appears to be under careful cultivation. In their industry and their power of endurance the people are marvelous.

The climate is hot in summer, but the people have been acclimated through untold generations. In winter some kinds of vegetables remain green, and some of the hardier flowers bloom while we still have cold weather. In the parks and gardens we saw many tropical trees and plants that we could not name, besides such familiar ones as palms and banana trees.

In Lu Chow-fu are government schools for boys, and classes in industrial and vocational training, as well as in art. Even the poorest of the people have a great love for the beautiful and are fond of flowers. Their common decorations are unique and charming, but seldom barbaric.

LU CHOW-FU LI HUNG CHANG'S HOME.

Li Hung Chang, the great statesman, cotemporary and friend of General Grant, lived here, owned a great deal of property, and had very wide influence. His heirs still have large estates here and in the vicinity. His tomb is only a few miles away, and is the mecca of many pilgrims. His nephew, who is supposed to have been the compiler of his noted autobiography, was buried while we were there. His body was borne in state by the same boat that took us to Lu Chow-fu. Dr. Wakefield once operated on Lord Li.

We have three substantial missionary homes in Lu Chow-fu, built of brick, a strong wall enclosing the premises of each. This includes an ample yard and garden. These are necessities for Americans in China. Our homes are located near each other in the west end of the city, where there is room and fresh air. The new church building is in the town, but not far away. The hospital is in a large compound which includes the home of the physician in charge. The ground already purchased by the C. W. B. M. for the girls' school joins the home of the evangelist, Justin E. Brown, and is beautifully situated in the suburbs near the city wall. Better surroundings could not have been chosen. The Foreign Society has had for several years a girls' school, conducted in a Chinese building up in town, now in charge of Miss Minnie Yantrin, of Illinois. She is doing very faithful and effective work with the girls in the school and as many classes of women as she has time for. She does a variety of work, all that her cramped surroundings will permit, and more than we would suppose the strength and time of one woman could accomplish. This school will be the nucleus for the C. W. B. M. work. Two teachers, Miss Williamson and Miss Collins, now in the College of Missions, expect to go out in a few months.

SOME WORKERS AT LU CHOW-FU.

F. C. Buck has been on the field about seven years. He teaches a school for boys, in a Chinese building, with scant supplies and many discouragements. He has also inaugurated a more extended work similar to that of the Y. M. C. A. in other cities. He is well qualified and popular with the natives. About a year ago he was married to Miss Van Cleve, of Illinois, an unusual woman, with attractive personality, both cultured and forceful, and destined to have a large influence.

The hospital building is an excellent structure, substantial, commodious, convenient, with all the room necessary for a very large work, and fine grounds for the recreation of students, convalescing patients, and visitors. It has one hundred bedsteads, no bedding whatever, not one bath-tub (excepting one especial Japanese vessel for certain diseases), no heating facilities, no sterilizer, no laundry equipment, absolutely nothing of those furnishings that we consider necessary for comfort or even decency.

Time was when the Chinese were so anxious for medical aid that they came by thousands and from great distances, even to this empty place, for treatment by the foreign doctor, bringing their own often disease-infected and vermin-laden clothes and bedding. But there has been a great revolution in their ideas during the last few years. The demands now make it urgently necessary that we equip this hospital somewhat after the manner of a similar institution in America. The beginnings of such an equipment would require at least $2,500. Dr. Wakefield, the one missionary in charge, has a class of students, sincere devoted young Christians, anxious to be trained, and willing to work their way as assistants, but the equipment must be sent, or the students disbanded. The time is near when there can be no alternative.

"WHAT CAN WE DO?"

The pathetic eyes of these students haunt us in the night time, as they asked, "What can we do?" The Boards, owing to the limitation of funds, are unable to make any advance, and some are compelled to cut the already inadequate salaries of their present forces.

It is a critical hour for our work in Lu Chow-fu. We must equip and man this station quickly or we ought in honor to surrender it to some other Board. We have undertaken, with the knowledge and approval of the office of the Foreign Society, to collect the fund necessary for this minimum of equipment and have it ready to be sent by July 1. We will gratefully receive whatever gifts are offered. Let no one give that which has been set apart for any other good cause. But if, by especial self-denial, this sum can be secured and the hospital equipment sent forward it will be in time for the arrival of the second doctor whom the Foreign Society is now in search of to work with Dr. Wakefield.

President Wilson Lauds the Church

The Nation's Executive Declares That the Church of Christ is a "Stabilizer" Making for Peace.

PRESIDENT WILSON appealed to the nation recently in an address to the Baltimore conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, in annual session at Washington. Bishop Warren A. Candler of Atlanta, Ga., in introducing the President, declared that the members of the conference were behind him as patriots. The President said:

"I have the feeling as I look upon you that I have had in many other church conferences—that I am looking in the faces of men and women who are not interested in the temporary things, but are interested in the permanent things; who give little thought, I hope and believe, to the things that separate us and give a great deal of thought to the things that unite us—things that are good for the healing of this nation not only, but for the healing of all the nations.

"I value the churches of this country as I would value everything else that makes for the stability of our moral processes. There are a great many people—not so many that they give me any particular concern—but nevertheless a great many people who in the language of the day are trying hard 'to rock the boat.'

"The boat is too big for them to rock. They are of such light material that they cannot rock it very much, but they are going through the motions, and it is just as well for them to look around once in a while and see the great steadfast body of self-possessed Americans not to be hurried into any unconsidered line of action, sure that when you are right you can be calm, sure that when the quarrel is none of yours, you can be impartial; sure that the men who spend their pas-

"The Plan of Peace."

"This is a council of peace not to form plans of peace, for it is not our privilege to form such, but to proclaim the single supreme plan of peace, the revelation of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. Because wars will never have any ending until men cease to hate one another, cease to be jealous of one another, get that feeling of reality in the brotherhood of mankind, which is the only bond that can make us think justly of one another and act righteously before God Himself."

sion most will move the body politic the least; and that the reaction will not be upon the great body of American citizens, but upon themselves.

"So that I look upon you in the present circumstances as a great part of the stabilizer of the nation. You know that somebody has just invented a thing called a stabilizer that is used in connection with aeroplanes, and by some process the mechanics of which I have not had explained to me, and perhaps could not understand if I had, this corrects the erratic movements of the machine, so that it, when adjusted, determines the plane upon which the machine is to move and the machine cannot depart from it. So something like that is the function of the great moral forces of the world, to act as stabilizers even when we go up in the air.

"I have come to you tonight, therefore, may I say, for reassurance, to look upon an undisturbed body of men who have their compasses and know the moral charting of the world. We know what haven we are bound for. We know the only legitimate processes by which one can work his way against the trade winds of evil in the world to the haven desired. So I am sure that I shall go away from here re-enforced.

"I need not tell you that the President by himself is absolutely nothing. The President is what the American nation sustains, and if it does not sustain him, then his power is contemptible and insignificant. If I can speak for you and represent you and in some sense hand on the moral forces that you represent, then I am indeed powerful. If I cannot, then I am indeed weak. I shall hope and believe that I go away from here sustained, as Bishop Candler has so generously said, by your prayers. I hope you shall feel that I am also sustained by your confidence."

IN MY FATHER'S CARE.

I would I were a child,
That I might look and laugh and say,
My Father!
And follow Thee with running feet, or rather
Be led through dark and wild!
How I would hold Thy hand,
My glad eyes often to Thy glory lifting!
Should darkness 'twixt Thy face and mine come drifting,
My heart would but expand.
If an ill thing came near,
I would but creep within Thy mantle's folding,
Shut my eyes close, Thy hand yet faster holding,
And soon forget my fear.

—George MacDonald.

In the German Trenches

JOHN REED IN THE METROPOLITAN.

Blazing Rockets Connect French and German Trenches.

THERE runs the laufgraben.'' The lieutenant pointed to what appeared to be a small canal. We passed through a great breach in the wall which encircles the park, and sank to our ankles in the sucking mud of the open sugar-beet field. For miles a monstrous arch of blazing rockets linked the French and German trenches together.

''You see, they quite destroyed part of our laufgraben with shell-fire, and then one lucky shot hit the bank of the Ypres canal and let the water in on us. That is the Ypres canal—that broad, dark line that parallels the laufgraben. Wait for another rocket and you can see the bridges.''

We staggered forward in the mud ten feet apart.

''There go our guns again,'' he went on. ''The French guns aren't working tonight. Bullets snapped and crackled like a forest fire, splashing us with mud. The rockets shone reflected on the black waters of the canal, which marched northward straight as a Roman road. The laufgraben here turned away from the canal and zigzagged up a little hill. We scrambled down into it, plunging up to our knees in soft mud, and struggled on staggering, falling, thrusting our arms to the shoulder in the wet slime of the trench side. The rain continued to fall. The trench mounted, became shallower so that we had to stoop, and the ground was harder beneath our feet. A rocket burst into diabolical radiance straight above and settled slowly down on us, cascading sparks.

''Out of the way,'' grunted a voice, and we flattened ourselves against the muddy wall as a stooped man staggered past carrying a limp body on his back. Then, in the pitch black, we were among dark forms slouching about and talking guttural Bavarian; the secondary trench opened to right and left—to the right marching unbroken like the Great Wall of China to the North Sea; to the left joining the ''Unter den Linden'' thirty miles south, and then three hundred miles to the Swiss frontier.

Living on Bullets and Beer.

THE darkness deepened; the drizzling rain fell. Something went whi-i-i-i-st! and we suddenly became conscious of a droning in many keys, like the wind in telegraph wires. Snap! A bullet hit the fence quite near. Plopp! Little stinging pellets of mud showered up from the road.

''Yes,'' said one of the soldiers, ''we lose four or five a day along here. But you get so you don't think about it at all.''

Those correspondents who had wives and children began to think of them with a peculiar tenderness.

''It's easy to tell the difference between the spent bullets and the ones that are meant for us,'' explained the soldier. ''The spent bullets sound tired, but the ones with the vicious whine—they've got the stings in their tails. This part of the road from now on the French can't see, even in the daytime; but they tell off a squad to keep up a fire on it day and night. . . .''

We climbed up into the rain again and walked across to the house. Strange, lurid, blue lights flamed suddenly in the dark behind the trees, intensely illuminating for a second the whole drizzling arc of sky.

''Rockets,'' explained one of the officers, ''so they can see what they're shooting at. . . .''

We dined in the old kitchen of the farmhouse, a great square room with an enormous curved fireplace and heavy-beamed ceiling black with smoke. In one corner a jagged shell-hole was stuffed with rags.

The menu consisted of soup from the field-kitchens, canned ox-tails, cheese, bread, white wine and exhaustless bottles of Munchener.

Artillery Fire at Night.

THEN, immeasurably deeper, whacking the air, the great guns opened. Far away a mighty lightning split the night, and the roaring, accumulated thunder of a bursting big shell smote our ears and sent us reeling. Behind us the German howitzers began again, and we could see the blasting flame leap from their Granaten half a mile behind the French trench. The ground shook, and we were conscious of no rifle fire, so deafening was the heavy roar of the cannon. Shrapnel were bursting quite near us now. We found ourselves floundering along in a staggering run toward the secondary trench, our one confused idea to get back into the lieutenant's dugout. A heavy thing hurtled into the earth two hundred meters ahead and blew up like a world exploding. For minutes, it seemed, the air was full of hissing mud and singing steel. . . .

''No use in here,'' grinned the lieutenant when we were under cover, ''if anything comes this way.''

''What is the chance of getting out of here?'' I asked.

''Oh, you had better wait until it is over.''

He sat down with a grunt of relief and began pulling off his boots. ''I do hate wet feet,'' he remarked, parenthetically. ''No; when they are turning the artillery on you, the safest place in the world is a trench. It's narrow, you see, and almost impossible to drop a shell in—they can't get the range by night, and the recoil of the gun shifts it a little eventually. They don't keep it up long.''

Almost as he spoke the tremendous noise chopped suddenly off. Such a silence rushed down!—a silence in which the never-ceasing rifle-fire sounded like crickets in a pasture.

The Dead Bury Themselves.

AND now, suddenly, we were in the front trench. Leaning against its front wall men stood shoulder to shoulder, shielded by thin plates of steel, each pierced with a loophole through which the rifle lay. Sodden with the drenching rain, their bodies crushing into the oozy mud, they stood thigh-deep in thick brown water and shot eight hours of the twenty-four—nor slept the rest of the time. For three days they kept this up—and these men had been there three days, for they were to be relieved at four o'clock. The shooters paid no attention to us. Through their loopholes they stared, absorbed, alert, into the blackness, waiting until the next rocket should show the least movement above the edge of the French trenches. By its light they got the range and took a sight on a few meters of heaped-up earth, and when it went out they kept on firing in the dark. The lieutenant ordered one of the soldiers to stand aside and invited us to look through the loophole.

''We are going to send up two or three rockets for you so you can see the French trenches. They are only eighty meters away, and if you will look about twenty yards from here you will see the bodies of the French who fell in their last attack. They came on in columns, four abreast, as the Prussians did at Liege, and our machine guns got every one.''

The rocket-pistol cracked. A twinkling point of light spiraled up, became a blinding, ghastly sun, and fell slowly. Before it was out another followed, and then another. For a minute it was as bright as day. Up a gentle hill straggled the French trench, a black gash pricked with rifle-flame. Between lay flat ooze, glistening like the slime of a sea-bed uncovered by an earthquake. Only a little way off lay the huddled, blue-coated bodies of the French in three thick, regular rows, just as they fell a week and a half ago, for there had been no cessation in the firing.

''Look,'' cried the lieutenant, ''how they have been slowly sinking into the mud! Three days ago you could see more. See that hand, and that foot, sticking up out of the ground; the rest of the bodies have sunk.''

We saw them, the hand stiff, five fingers spread wide like a drowning man's.

''No need of graves there. They are burying themselves!''

Studying "Ben" Lindsey

BY FRANKLYN P. ADAMS.

Judge Ben Lindsey, of the Juvenile Court of Denver, has been undergoing a perfect whirlwind of persecution at the hands of certain devilish influences in Colorado which do not seem to vibrate sympathetically with the Judge's reform ideas. It is a foregone conclusion that this modern David will escape the stones flung by the Goliaths of corruption in the Rocky Mountain state; and further, that both the reputation of the Judge and the moral condition of the commonwealth will be bettered by the present revelations. The following is from the pen of Franklyn P. Adams, of the New York Tribune. Mr. Adams is making a tour of the West, and coming to Denver he sought out the Juvenile Court presided over by Judge Lindsey as the point of greatest interest in the city.—The Editor.

WHEN I told a Denver man that I wanted to see Ben Lindsey, he said that Lindsey was no good and a menace and a worker of great harm to Colorado, and a circus-player!

Ben Lindsey has been elected or appointed to his office, we are told, ten successive times in twelve years, and was elected to his present term by the largest majority ever received by a candidate for local office. He has many enemies in Denver, but he has more friends, and they have given proof enough that "Denver wants Lindsey."

Ben Lindsey is short and thin. He is growing heavier, they say, and he now weighs, I should guess, about 103 tubside. He is between forty and fifty years of age. Except for a pair of remarkably clear, searching eyes, the kind known as "sympathetic," he is a commonplace-looking little man with a black mustache. And he is commonplace and a "man of the people," precisely as Lincoln was these things.

HOW LINDSEY DOES THINGS.

As I came in the Judge was hearing a complaint against a man who had been hiring young girls to go on the stage. The girls who went, it was charged, were taken out to the rough towns in Colorado and exposed to dangers they were too young to contend with. The manager who hired them was talking to the Judge.

"I tell the girls, I always tell 'em, Judge, that they got to see you first," he was saying.

"These girls' parents tell me," said Lindsey, "that you say this court indorses your show. I've never seen your show, for one thing; and I don't indorse it, for another."

"No, Judge. I never tell 'em no such a thing, Judge. I tell 'em they ought to go to you to get permission to work. They say they will, but they don't. They're liars, most of 'em. They're just crazy to get on the stage."

"What kind of show do you give?"

"Minstrel show, Judge. Been in show business for fifteen years. Always been on the level and never been in jail in this state."

"What do girls do in a minstrel show?"

"It's a female minstrel show."

"Leg show?"

"N-no, sir. The girls wears short dresses, that's all. Singin' an' dancin'. We play the little towns around here."

"Well," said Lindsey, "I'm going to send a man around now to look at one of your rehearsals; and maybe we can tell more about it then. If you're all right, we won't interfere with you. But it's worth while looking into, if we can keep a lot of little girls from being foolish and then regretting it the rest of their lives, eh?"

"Sure, Judge. Thank you."

And the man went out. He and his actions will be watched. And the likelihood is that his next "minstrels," if he have any, will be girls of an age beyond the jurisdiction of the court.

THE CASE OF "LENA."

On a sofa at the side of the room lay Lena's mother, brought from the hospital. Next to her sat Lena's sister, married and deserted. At the back was Lena's father, old, very ragged, and with the unmistakable air of a veteran in vagrancy. Beside the father sat Lena's brother, aged twenty-one. Near to him was Lena, fourteen in years, three in mentality, ageless in woeful experience. Lena had been in the hospital. Her disease was as bad as it could be, and she was to be sent to the State training-school, where she might get decent and regular medical care and, in the event of cure, be fitted to earn a living. To this the father was objecting.

"I want her to come home with me, Judge," said the father, whining.

"Why?" asked the Court.

"Well, Judge, I think that's where her place is, by her father. I want to take care of her."

"Have you earned anything in the last two or three years?"

"I done my best, Judge, to build up a little home, Judge," in an alcoholic whine.

The sister, an intelligent girl of twenty-five, then told how she practically had supported the family since she had been nine; how her mother had helped, going "out" by the day; how her father had always mistreated the mother; and how when she—the girl testifying—was having a baby, the father cursed at her inability to work, and said, "Another twenty dollars gone to hell!" (She was getting $5 a week.) Then the brother, who worked in a livery-stable from 4 a. m. to 8 p. m., he said, and made "my $40 a month," showed how there was no place for Lena to go. You couldn't blame Lena for anything that had happened to her, getting a glimpse of the "home" influence.

"Lena," said the Judge, "we're going to send you to a nice place where you can get well and have a good time while you're doing it, and come back glad you went."

"I won't go. So there! I ain't done nothin', an' I won't go. So there! I'm goin' with my papa. An' there ain't nothin' the matter with me, either. So there!" Lena's ignorant petulance was rather becoming. She had a good deal of beauty. Her hair was ornamented with some cheap combs, and on her fingers were six rings—perhaps a dollar's worth. She went on: "I know a girl went there an' she says they treat you terrible. I won't go. So there! She (the sister) said all that about me because she's jealous because a fella boardin' with us took me to a pitcher-show an' she wanted to go. An' she always tells lies about me. An' there ain't nothin' the matter with me. So there!"

"Lena," said the Judge, "read the first four lines of this letter." And the Judge handed over a letter that had just come telling of the death of a boy twenty years old who had died the day before. "He was stronger than you, Lena," said Ben Lindsey, "and he didn't go in time to get cured, and now he's dead." Lena began to cry. "I don't care," she said. "I'd like to die. I don't want to live. So there! An' if I go up there I'll hate it. So there!"

"No you won't, Lena. You write me in a month and see. I'll bet anything you'll like it."

"I won't. I'll hate it." From the back of the room came the whimper of the father. "Lena, don't be so sassy to the gempman."

"Well, Lena, you write me in a month and tell me how you like it, and how you're feeling. I don't promise anything, but if you don't like it, maybe we can fix it some way you do. You've had your way a long time; come ahead and let us have ours for a month."

The hospital ambulance came for Lena's mother. As she passed Lena's chair, she stooped to kiss the child, the first time I imagine, in a long time. Lena melted and went away. . . . There are six or eight novels in Lena and her family. Yet people insist that I go and rhapsodize about one-twelfth dozen Grand Canons!

"MYRTLE, WHO STAYED OUT AT NIGHT."

Myrtle's mother was worried because Myrtle went out nights and stayed out late sometimes, and one night she didn't come home at all, though she had only gone to a friend of the mother's. It was a plain case of too much stepfather, it seemed. Myrtle was a good girl really, and her mother was over-indulgent. The Judge asked the mother to leave the room.

"Now, Myrtle," said the Judge, "your mother loves you, doesn't she?"

"Yes, sir."

"I don't blame her. But maybe she's too good to you."

"Yes, sir. I think maybe she is."

"Well, Myrtle, I want you to promise your mother that you won't ever go out without telling her where you're going. Will you do that? And promise her in front of me. And if you break that promise you'll make a liar out of me, Myrtle, because I've promised your mother that you're going to do what she wants. And she's promised me that she won't ask you to do anything unreasonable. You don't want to make me out a liar, do you, Myrtle?"

"No, sir."

And mother and child left the court better friends than they ever had been before; and with new understanding and mutual appreciation.

THE VICTOR.

By Thomas Curtis Clark.

Falsely you have said he failed—
  He whose strong, faith-founded soul
Never faltered, never quailed;
  He for whom the longed-for goal
Never vanished; he for whom
  There was never hopeless wrong;
He who at the brink of doom
  Felt his spirit grow more strong.
Failure? No, to him be glory!
  Let the verdict fair be spoken:
Life and death and battles gory
  Found him true, his faith unbroken.

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY

"TEAM WORK."

ONE'S ecclesiastical sensibilities wince not a little under the use of that new word "team" which has found its way into the vocabulary of present-day religious "campaigns."

The Christian Century has striven to avoid its use as much as possible, and we noted that in one of the Chicago churches visited by the Men and Millions leaders the group was referred to on the program and in pulpit statements not as a "team" but as the Men and Millions "Commission."

We have time and again been prompted to offer a prize for a word that would take the place of "team," that would possess its strength, its suggestion of hearty co-operation, its purpose, its balance of individuality with group loyalty, but we doubt if there is a word in the language that will serve the purpose.

"Team" suggests the image of work horses pulling at a heavy load, straining every muscle, and vying with each other in getting the load over the hill.

It also suggests the image of an athletic organization, a baseball or football team, each member having a definite position to fill and filling it not with an eye on his own self-glory, but on winning the game. "Team-work" is the term that hits off better than any term known to our vocabulary the ideal balance of individual and social effort.

As an illustration of team-work the Men and Millions workers actually invest the term with dignity.

Here are a dozen men accustomed to leadership "on their own hook," holding high positions—college presidents and professors, secretaries and presidents of missionary societies, distinguished foreign missionaries—yet these men organize their individual personalities into a real "team," and no man seeks to make a "star play," but all seek to advance the common enterprise to which they are consecrated. It as often requires "sacrifice hits" as home runs.

One feels that these men in following leadership themselves are giving one of the best possible evidences of their fitness to lead others.

EUROPE'S RELAPSE INTO BARBARISM.

NOT long ago the story was told of a young man, a full blooded Sioux Indian, who graduated from Carlisle, packed his dress suit and his books, and started for home in the far northwest.

Arriving at the station nearest his village he secured a pony, traded his belongings for the blanket, moccasins and other equipment of his tribe, and declaring that he was done with civilization forever, plunged in a single day back into the squalor and abominations of the old life from which supposedly his education had lifted him.

When one looks at the condition of affairs in Europe today it seems to imply a similar reversion to barbarism. After all that science and skill have done to build up the value of human life by the prevention and cure of disease, the care of little children, and the amelioration of the condition of the poor and the unfortunate, it is unspeakably shocking to mark the reckless disregard of the value of life revealed by the conduct of the warring nations.

One wonders if the world has not plunged back again into the barbarism of primitive times, only with tenfold greater disregard of human life. Mankind seems to have gone naked in a day.

And yet this is too sinister a view of the matter, as a hundred facts prove.

A deeper analysis of conditions makes clear the fact that it is commercialism and not savagery that is for the moment ascendant. It is perhaps the best proof that commercialism can be savage and bloody when left to do its work undisturbed.

There needs but the revival of the stronger principle of friendliness and reverence for life to push again the forces of barbarism into the abyss from which at the present moment they seem to have been released.

Peace cannot be long delayed.

The price of war in life and treasure is too great to permit of long continuance. The nations have gone naked, they have lost for a moment their sanity and plunged into a brief orgy of savage passion induced by self-interest. The dark time will pass and the humbling day of reflection and repentance will come ere long.

Let us hope it may be very soon.

THE EVERY-MEMBER CANVASS.

ONE of the most significant features in the work of the Men and Millions Commission is the promotion of the every-member canvass in all the churches.

It is difficult to secure active service from all the men in any church. The pressure of common duties in the daily vocation leaves little time for religious work, unless one is genuinely concerned for the welfare of the church.

The average man in the congregation consoles himself with the thought that he has contributed something to the support of a minister who is the servant of the church, to perform its religious activities, and has thus absolved himself from the necessity of any such labor.

Until that fallacy is exposed, and the lay members of the church realize that the minister is a director of their religious activities and not the scapegoat of their inactivity, the church cannot genuinely prosper.

The obligation to be occupied in Christian service lies upon all members equally, whether ministers or laymen. The only difference is that some members of the church acknowledge the obligation and make the effort to fulfill it, and others do not.

For example, the amount of work done by church treasurers, financial secretaries, Sunday-school workers and other helpful and necessary participants in Christian service is incalculable and puts utterly to shame the easily satisfied complacence of those who attend the services when convenient and think that such attendance and the contributions they make are a sufficient share in the work which Christ left for his people.

The every-member canvass is an opening of the door, small to be sure but significant, to a larger participatiou by every man in the work as well as the worship of the church.

It is a great thing to have the men of the congregation go out on a Sunday afternoon, two by two, to call upou every member of the church left at home, to speak with them concerning the activities of the church and to secure from them the promise of participation in its financial, missionary and philanthropic work.

Such a ministry blesses those who participate and those upon whom they wait. No church can afford to ignore the value of the every-member canvass.

THE FAITH OF THE CHRISTIAN.

SPRING seems to be the time when a large number of aged people pass away. It is strange that it should be so. One would suppose that the departure of winter and the awakening of the earth would bring a revival of vitality to all who have reached advanced age.

Yet it seems otherwise in many instances. With the coming of spring there is perhaps a relaxing of those energies which have kept life intact through the long winter, and with the first outburst of nature iuto the joy of the advancing year there comes release from the weakness of mortality.

Whether or not this is the real reason, there is no doubt that the number of deaths among the aged is greatly increased at this time of the year and the present season has witnessed an unusually large number of such instances. Nor can it be denied that there is a certain beauty and appropriateness in this order of nature. At the best the present life is only a beginning and an experiment.

It passes through its cycle of spring time, with its awakened life; summer, with its first fruits and sunshine; autumn, with its maturity of color and its iugathered harvests; and winter, with its slackening of energy and its white mystery of snow.

What could be more appropriate then than the awakening to an eternal spring-time out of the age and weakness of life's winter and the entrance into a new and more vital experience of happiness in the gardens of God?

There is nothing more stimulating than speech with one of these aged servants of Christ whose life has been passed in the quiet faith of the gospel, and who looks forward to release from the body as a flower seed might awake with confidence and satisfaction its outcoming into the glory of the spring.

It is not without significance that the hope of the life to be has always associated itself with the coming of spring. And those who leave us at the close of long and useful lives point the way to that larger experience of the Father's presence in "the house not made with hands."

THE CALL FOR VOLUNTEERS.

THE spectacle now witnessed in Europe of hundreds of thousands of young men, the most precious possession of the nations at war, offering themselves with enthusiasm and uncalculating devotion to the governments for service at the front is both inspiring and depressing.

It is inspiring because it proves the presence in modern life of those qualities of heroism and sacrifice which have always been appreciated as among the most priceless qualities in humanity.

It is depressing because, as all concede, the present war is entirely unnecessary and it cannot settle conclusively any of the issues raised.

But if it be possible to inspire this great host of youths with a sense of consecration to national interests, how much more ought the call of the cross to quicken the pulses of an army of young men and women to lives of devotion to Christian service in the mission field.

There are many vacant places in the battle line of the kingdom of God. The posts at which the heroes of the faith have fallen in days past have never yet been adequately manned. No one yet has taken the places of Livingstone, Moffett, Carey, Marshman, Morrison, Judson, Paton, Wharton, Garst, Eldred.

Other workers have taken up some parts of their unfinished tasks, but the ranks are as yet far from full.

Not only in the foreign field is there urgent call for workers, but on our southern and western frontiers, in the depths of great cities, in social settlements, in colleges and training schools, and in many other places where consecration and heroism are required.

There is no self-sacrificing duty open to the soldiers in the trenches of Europe which may not be duplicated in responsibility and heroism in missionary service.

The number of those who are volunteering for missionary service among the Disciples of Christ at the call of the Men and Millions Movement is proof of the fact that a new and greater period of missionary zeal and triumph is ahead, and the effects of this new spirit of consecration will be felt not only in the mission fields, but among the home churches for generations to come.

THE MOTHER'S PRAYER.

Lord, if some little children of our day
  Must spend their lives beside our factory wheels,
Watching the endless hours drag away,
  Must learn how heartache feels, how hunger feels,
If they must toss and mutter in their sleep
  Too tired to rest, when fevered rest might be,
I care not. Lord, I only ask to keep Mine safe with me!

Lord, if the street's unwholesome noise and mirth
  When the day's poor-paid drudgery is done
Must draw the wearied little maids of earth
  Into a hell that waits them, one by one;
If, scarred and starved, like fall'n leaves helpless blown
  These must the shame of living still endure,
I shall not murmur. Lord, but keep mine own
    Guarded and pure.

And Lord, if there be many who complain
  In bitter poverty and toil and tears,
Who know their loved ones hungry and in pain,
  And faint beneath the burden of the years,
Keep Thou mine eyes from sight of such as these,
  Keep Thou my mind from knowing this must be,
And, gracious Lord, still grant Thou wealth and ease
    To mine and me!

Recompense

BY GEORGE KLINGLE.

We are quite sure
That He will give them back—
Bright, pure, and beautiful—
We know that He will but keep
Our own and His until we fall asleep,
We know He does not mean
To break the strands reaching between
The Here and There.
He does not mean—though heaven be fair—
To change the spirits entering there,
That they forget
The eyes upraised and wet,
The lips too still for prayer,
The mute despair.
He will not take
The spirits which He gave, and make
The glorified so new
That they are lost to me and you.
I do believe
They will receive
Us, you and me, and be so glad
To meet us that when most I would grow sad,
I just begin to think about the gladness
And the day
When they shall tell us all about the way
That they have learned to go—
Heaven's pathway show.
My lost, my own, and I
Shall have so much to see together by and by.
I do believe that just the same sweet face,
But glorified, is waiting in the place
Where we shall meet, if only I
Am counted worthy in that by-and-by.
I do believe that God will give a sweet surprise
To tear-stained, saddened eyes,
And that His heaven will be
Most glad, most tided through with joy
For you and me,
As we have suffered most.
God never made
Spirit for spirit, answering shade for shade,
And placed them side by side—
So wrought in one, though separate, mystified,
And meant to break
The quivering threads between
When we shall wake, ...
I am quite sure, we will be very glad
That for a little while we were so sad.

Free Churches for Prohibition.

The delegates of the free churches of England, 1,300 strong, who assembled in the National Free Church Council at Manchester recently, voted "unanimously and enthusiastically that they would back up the government in any action that Mr. Lloyd-George, or other members of the government, or the whole cabinet together, might inaugurate for dealing with the drink traffic up to the point of prohibition." It has been reported that many rich Christians in England own brewery stock. To this Dr. F. B. Meyer replied, "However it may apply to other churches than our own, that allegation is not true of the Free Churches."

Dr. Aked In New Building.

The First Congregational church of San Francisco has recently dedicated a new building which will seat 1,500 people. Dr. Aked is the pastor. He came from England but a few years ago, and though he was not regarded as in any sense a radical spirit in England, he has been the subject of many attacks on the coast for his supposedly progressive views. The First Congregational church was organized in 1849 with eight members, but is now one of the strong institutions of the city.

Prof. Rauschenbusch Advises Socialists.

The Christian Socialist Fellowship recently held a conference in Baltimore and while its members were in session there, Prof. Rauschenbusch sent them greetings. Among other things, he said in his letter: "I believe that when the Christian temper and spirit are added to clear economic knowledge, the mixture is better than either ingredient alone. We must break with the denunciatory traditions of Socialism, and teach our truth in a friendly and persuasive spirit. 'He shall not strive, nor cry aloud, neither shall anyone hear his voice clamor in the streets. A bruised reed shall he not break, and smoking flax shall he not quench, till he send forth justice unto victory.' That characterized the propaganda methods of Jesus, and I believe they have the acid criticism and the bitter invective beaten twice over for effectiveness and real persuasiveness."

Advertisers Would Aid Ministers.

The Advertising Club of Chicago is getting interested in church work and its leaders have offered to the churches of the city their ability without expense if it is desired. Mr. Albert Joerns, chairman of the educational committee of the club, says: "The motive of the advertising men is purely altruistic. The minister needs a church full of people in order to preach a full sermon. The churches are as worthy of patronage today as they ever were. They simply have fiercer competition in moving picture shows, easy means of travel, late hours of work or pleasure seeking, which prevent early rising. But it is poor advertising for a minister to bemoan in the pulpit the small attendance either at church or prayer-meeting. The antiquated rule followed by many churches is 'All things come to him who waits.' We believe that church advertising ought not to be used simply to increase attendance at the churches, but also to preach to those who do not go to church. We purpose to confer with the representatives of such churches as desire our help. If we are called on we will detail a man who will seek by personal study to ascertain the needs of the particular church, and to outline a plan of advertising adapted to the conditions. We will prepare copy for the newspapers and for advertising matter put out in the neighborhood. We will work with any church or any organization of pastors or laymen who are interested. We will offer trained brains, open hearts, willing hands." Mr. Joerns holds that persistent and intelligent advertising would fill the churches..

Persians in Mourning.

Rev. Haidow Ablahat, pastor of Carter Memorial Assyrian-Persian Presbyterian church of Chicago, has received bad news from Persia and the two thousand Persians of the city have gone into mourning. Their relatives live in territory controlled by Russia which has been subject to attacks by the Turks. The Kurds have been committing many barbarities in this section of Persia.

Tract Society Offers Prize.

With funds derived from the George Wood Premium Fund, the American Tract Society has offered a first prize of $250 and a second prize of $100 for the best and second best manuscripts of a book not over 75,000 words in length which shall have a strong Christian motive. In addition to the cash prizes, the authors shall have the usual book royalties.

Religious Workers Hold Social Congress.

The Committee of One Hundred for Religious Work during the Panama Exposition arranged a "World's Social Progress Congress," which is being held April 1 to 11. Among the speakers are Governor Hiram Johnson, Chancellor David Starr Jordan, Bishop McConnell, President Benjamin Ide Wheeler, Hon. J. Stitt Wilson and others.

Flourishing Y. M. C. A. Among Turks.

The Y. M. C. A. in Constantinople has 600 members, of whom ten per cent are Turkish Moslems. This is a sign of the opening wedge that enlightenment is driving into Islam, and is a striking testimony to the worth of the Y. M. C. A. as a wedge driver for Christian ideals. The Greek Archbishop of Constantinople is teaching one of the Bible classes—another morning sign of better things.

World's Convention Advertised.

Through the effort of Mr. Harry Morton, of the Executive Committee of the World's Sunday-school Association, and the courtesy of the Japanese Commissioners of the Panama-Pacific Exposition at San Francisco, there will be set up in the Japanese Building a Sunday-school booth in which to advertise the world's Sunday-school Convention at Tokyo in October, 1916. The Japanese Exhibit will be one of the most interesting and picturesque features at the fair, and the World's Sunday-school Association is fortunate in having a "Tokyo Booth" in such favorable surroundings.

Evangelism In Japan.

The Christian churches of Japan have joined in a common evangelistic campaign to last for three years. This idea resulted from the visit last year of John R. Mott in connection with the work of the continuation committee of the Edinburgh conference.

Does "Billy" Sunday Use Hypnotism?

A careful analysis of the psychical principle at the root of "Billy" Sunday's great success is found in The Presbyterian Advance. The editor characterizes Mr. Sunday's power as primarily hypnotic. He says: "Students of psychology, especially if they have given careful attention to suggestion and hypnosis, will remember that there are certain facts pretty well established. These are:

"1. That hypnosis is induced by fixity of attention. 2. That there is a strong hypnotic influence in a crowd, especially when swayed by similar emotions, and practically all persons are subject to this influence. 3. That in the hypnotic or semi-hypnotic condition the person is to a large extent anesthetic; that in this condition he is very susceptible to the suggestion of another, provided that suggestion is not repugnant to his moral nature. In the light of these facts it is possible to explain why people are impressed by the truth of Mr. Sunday's preaching and his appeal to conscience and will without being repelled by occurrences which ordinarily would disgust and antagonize. The methods of advertising, promoting and conducting the Sunday meetings tend to produce a condition akin to hypnotism. They fix the attention upon the central figures and bring people 'en rapport' with the speaker. Being in a semi-hypnotic condition, people are also semi-anesthetic; that is, they do not feel as they would feel under normal conditions the effect of things which normally would offend their esthetic natures. They become indifferent under such conditions to words which ordinarily would be considered offensively vulgar. But this lack of feeling in hypnosis seems not to extend to the moral nature. Indeed, the moral nature—the Sub-consciousness or Suggestive Mind, as it is called—appears to be more alert in hypnosis than at any other time, and it is inclined to receive most favorably any suggestion that is not repugnant to the moral nature itself.

While Mr. Sunday may offend the esthetic, the refined sensibilities of his hearers, he does not teach anything that is opposed to man's innate sense of what is right and good and pure in character. On the contrary, he hurls into their unguarded souls, so to speak, the fundamental truths of God, and the soul, or Sub-consciousness, responds to these 'suggestions' even while what is sometimes called the 'Objective Mind' is frolicking as at a circus.

"This is at least a possible explanation of what seems inexplicable. Many of us who could not in good conscience even try to do things in the way that 'Billy' does them can understand, nevertheless, how it is possible through such methods to make a way for the Spirit of God into a human soul which ordinarily is preoccupied with superficial things and will not fix the attention upon the deep things of life." It is something new in Christian thinking to tolerate hypnotism as a means of converting men to the gospel.

Protest Envoy to the Pope.

The Protestant Truth Society of London has drawn up twelve reasons why British Protestants should protest the appointment of a government envoy to the Vatican. The society is soliciting funds with which to publish these reasons in every London paper and in the provincial newspapers in the empire. The movement is not altogether non-conformist in its support, for the Churchman's Magazine has recently published an article on "Are We in the Pope's Web?" Some of the reasons offered for not having diplomatic relationships with Rome are these: The sending of a representative violates four hundred years of unbroken tradition. England's own contention in the First Hague conference was that the governments of Europe should refuse to have diplomatic representatives at the Vatican. The sending of any envoy is a recognition of the temporal sovereignty of the Pope which has been denied for four hundred years, and is an insult to Italy. The allied powers of France and Russia, who are not represented at the Vatican, will regard this step on the part of England unfavorably. It is charged that the Kaiser is "the darling of the Vatican," and that his portrait has a place of honor in the Pope's gallery, and that his birthday is celebrated each year with Te Deums at St. Peter's. The Protestant Truth Society further charges that the present war had its beginning in Roman intrigue in Serbia. The sending of an envoy to the Vatican is regarded as a violation of the war truce in England by which the members of all parties were to unite and work together for the common cause of the empire.

Methodists Protect Exposition Pilgrims.

In spite of agreements to the contrary, it is said that hotel-keepers have already begun "kiting the prices" for accommodations at San Francisco during the World's Fair in progress at the coast city. The Methodists have a bureau on the fair grounds where accurate information is provided concerning hotels and boarding houses that have not raised their prices. This bureau provides the pilgrim with every kind of information that is useful.

Good Friday a Legal Holiday.

The Senate of the state of Delaware has passed a bill to make Good Friday a legal holiday. This action is in line with present usage in a number of states and will commend itself to a great many Christian people. The bill in Delaware was opposed by the Methodist Ministers' Association. In many cities, however, Methodists ministers have observed Holy Week with the same respect shown by many other bodies. The stock exchanges in New York and Chicago have observed Good Friday many years, without any law requiring their closing.

Bishop Has a Bar-Car.

The Bishop of London stated, when dedicating a Church Army motor "bar-car" for supplying the troops at the front with refreshments, that he had applied for permission and hoped to go to Flanders and France to conduct special services with the army at the Easter time.

Bishop Thirkield in Kansas.

Bishop Thirkield returned from his five weeks' inspection of Methodist mission work in Porto Rico, March 8, and is now in Kansas, presiding over the Southwest and Northwest Kansas Conferences. He was in Kansas City for the Methodist Preachers' Meeting, Monday, March 15, and gave a report, his first, on his observations and efforts in the Pearl of the Antilles. His administration of the conferences, his addresses and presidency have been very satisfactory to the Methodists.

Welsh Disestablishment Delayed.

An agreement seems to have been entered into between the Government and the conservative leaders in England by which the disestablishment of the English church in Wales shall be postponed until six months after the war. The bill provides for further financial gains by the Welsh church. The Welsh members of parliament are very much incensed over what seems to them a betrayal of their interests by the party in power, and Lloyd George, the chancellor of the exchequer, is much embarrassed over the incident, as he is a most loyal Welshman and a nonconformist. The religious papers of England are giving much space to this controversy which has broken out afresh by reason of the action of the British leaders.

Will Help Make Chicago Dry.

William Jennings Bryan, secretary of state, will come to Chicago sometime in the autumn of the present year to fire the first gun in the opening of a campaign to make Chicago dry. The largest auditorium of the city will be used and the Philadelphia meeting, so widely discussed, will be duplicated in Chicago if possible. There will be something going on every minute from that time until the spring election in April, 1916, when Chicago will vote itself either wet or dry. The Federal Council of the churches of Christ in America is interested in the Chicago plans.

For Lord's Day Observance.

Among the numerous demands made for "special Sundays," there is a growing tendency to concede the demand for a day in which Christians shall emphasize the importance of the proper observance of the Lord's Day. This day is the Sunday following Easter, since Easter gave rise to the Lord's Day. An organized movement is now fighting successfully the encroachments of the worse than continental Sunday which has made its appearance in certain sections of America. The Episcopalians in New York have a special committee, which issues literature on the day of rest and worship. Rev. Wm. P. Swartz, 31 Bible House, is in charge of this work.

The Pope and the War.

The magazine writers are having much to say about the relation of religion and the war. In a recent issue of Fortnightly, Robert Dell writes on "The Vatican and the War." A recent encyclical of the Pope is reviewed. The Pope traces the war to the "absence of respect for the authority of those who exercise ruling powers." In our day "the poor who strive against the rich as though they had taken part of the goods of others not merely act contrary to justice and charity but also act irrationally, particularly as they themselves by honest industry can improve their fortunes if they choose." Brotherly love will not do away with classes but it will lead those in higher positions to "bring themselves down to those in a lower position and treat them not only justly but kindly and in a friendly and patient spirit, and the poor on their side will rejoice in their prosperity and rely confidently on their help." This language, Mr. Dell justly remarks, "sounds like the utterance of an elderly gentlewoman of about the year 1830: 'Bless the squire and his relations and always keep your proper stations.' The encyclical confirms other evidence that the papacy is whole-heartedly on the side of Germany and Austria. It is a scarcely veiled attack on France, and, in a lesser degree, on England and Belgium. Its whole burden is that the crimes of democracy are the 'root cause' of the war; the democratic countries engaged in the war are France, England, and Belgium. . . . On the other hand, Austria recognizes the Catholic Church as the religion of the State, and, although Germany does not, the relations of German Catholics with the government are very close and the Centre party has been one of the chief supporters of militarism."

Persian Christians In Trouble.

The Turks and Kurds have invaded Persia, and the Persian Christians have fled in the deep winter to Tiflis, to the protection of the American consul and of the missionaries of Tabriz and Uramia. The American consul has cabled for money, as well as the missionaries, for 50,000 people have been affected by the devastation of war. The exiles must be returned to their homes where they can rebuild their ruined properties. It is estimated that a hundred thousand dollars will be required. The Persian War Relief Committee in this country is headed by Robert E. Speer. The committee has offices at 43 Exchange place, New York.

Promoting Social Service.

The Protestant Episcopal communion is prominent among the religious denominations that sympathize with the ideals of the modern social movement. The Social Service Commission of the diocese of Central New York has prepared a circulating library containing highly specialized books along those lines which may not be in the public library. Any book in the list prepared by the commission will be sent postpaid on request made or endorsed by a priest in charge of a parish in the diocese. The books may be kept two weeks, the borrower paying the return postage. The circular announcing the library contains the inquiry: "Are you progressive enough to make this library pay the diocese and yourself?" The Rev. R. S. Gesner of Oswego, is in charge of the work.

Federal Council Will Issue Books.

The Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America is issuing some significant new volumes and it has already enriched the literature of social service and Christian union. It announces three forthcoming volumes under the imprint of the council: "A Report of an Investigation of the Japanese Situation in California," prepared by Prof. H. A. Millis, of the University of Kansas, for the commission on relations with Japan; a volume entitled, "The Fight for Peace," setting forth a world organization of the churches in this cause, by Sidney L. Gulick, associate secretary of the Federal Council Commission on Peace and Arbitration; and a hand book describing the distinctive characteristics, in historic form, of the thirty denominations in the Federal Council, setting forth their mutual relationship, edited by the general secretary of the council.

Here and There

On Reading Good Men Out of the Brotherhood.

Some of those who are now engaged in this attempt were once the victims of other readers. Time was when Thomas and Alexander Campbell were read out of some ranks, and no places provided for them at divers and sundry tables. That was when we were a struggling people, regarded as heretics, fools, visionaries, etc. Now we are strong, and we think to defend our interests by the methods which were in vogue when the Campbells were heretics. Suppose those methods had prevailed then? What is the use of all this bluster about our differences anyway? What has it accomplished in twenty-five years? How far has it helped us on the way to Christian union? Everybody knows that the "reading out" method has totally failed and is now bordering on collapse. All heresy is error, but not all error is heresy. Let us keep in mind how gradually even the "readers out" are being influenced by the changes which have come over the religious world in even ten years, and be patient and tolerant toward all differences. If Mr. Campbell could endure "all men preaching all sorts of doctrines," why cannot we do the same? Doctrines like men find their level when the false is opposed by the true. Intolerance and insolence have dignified some errors that would have sunk into decay if better methods had prevailed. Let us keep our denunciation for those who care nothing for the truth, and not for those who desire to know the truth as earnestly as we do.

The Need of a New Emphasis.

We Disciples need to get a new point of view, and to turn our eyes outward for a time. There is so much good that we can do that we ought to be attempting it today. Our intense individualism has worked a great injury. Let us say nothing about who has been to blame for our Thirty Years' War, and turn over a new page of history. We can't regulate each other's beliefs, but we can all join hands in the work of missions, evangelism, social service, Sunday-school work, the work of teaching the church and the community, and in the larger issues which are now before the Christian world. In every parish the men who are succeeding have put the soft pedal on doctrinal differences and are going forward in a real unity to accomplish the mission which Christ came to announce. The bickerings and strife of sects are now quite generally confined to the remote rural districts, while the fruits of the gospel are ripening in many of the cities and towns. In denominational papers the old feuds are kept alive, but in the practical work of the world even some of the saints of our day think it a matter of credit that they have forgotten them. So why not all agree to surrender the many differences of opinion, and unite on the spiritual enterprises which are challenging the best within every one of us? Maybe the unity of common endeavor would cure the heresies of all who are under suspicion. Nothing injures the cause of heresy as much as good treatment, and nothing does it as much good as bad treatment. There's a difference between heaping coals of fire on an enemy's head, and heaping the aforementioned coals under him. What we need is the gift of saying some old church things in a new way, and of doing some new things in the good old fashioned way, heartily as unto the Lord and not unto men.

The Husband of One Wife.

We heard a man say a few days since that this qualification for office in the church must be insisted upon. So be it. But who ever heard of the "apt to teach" qualification being insisted upon? Thus thoughtlessness or something else makes miserable exegetes of us all. It is easier to be the husband of one wife, even if the wife is the better man of the two, and is able to keep the house in good order, than it is to teach with profit to the hearer.

Paying the Pastor.

We presume that many of the present generation never heard that there was a book in the literature of the Disciples entitled, "Paying the Pastor; Unscriptural and Traditional." It was written fifty or sixty years ago by an eminent lawyer who never felt the pinch of poverty until late in life, if at all. The theory of the Eldership was carried out to the letter in the congregation over which this good man presided. It is needless to say that almost everything portable in that church has been carried out also. There may be a church there at this writing, but its light has never touched the more remote corners of the earth.

Knowing human nature fairly well, we have often wondered why the theory didn't take. Imagine a man helping to pay the pastor's salary when the custom was both unscriptural and traditional! What an opportunity that book afforded to the parsimonious to die before they would be false to the Word! The book ought to have been a great money saver to those brethren who conform their lives to what they read in the Scriptures! The fact is that the notion that men could be pastors and carpenters or blacksmiths or masons at the same time was preposterous even to a generation that was so literal that an "upper room" was the only proper place to worship.

Origin of the Disciples of Christ.

This is the title of a small volume by Prof. W. H. Whitsitt, once a prominent controversialist among the Baptists. It is "a contribution to the centennial anniversary of the birth of Alexander Campbell," and purports to show the sources of Mr. Campbell's theology. The volume is among the last of those irritating controversial works which were common fifty years ago. With a certain setting of facts to start with both Thomas and Alexander Campbell are presented to us in an uncomplimentary manner. It is really an attempt to discredit the ability and the attainments of both men. As a Baptist production it no doubt ranked high in its day, a sort of "Campbellite killer," as it were, but now of little interest save to the antiquarian.

That class of "killers" is not yet extinct. We have one or two in this state, and one particularly among the Baptists who ought to be muzzled for the sake of the Baptist church.

Our New A. C. M. S. Secretary.

Of course everybody knows him or soon will know him. He is a very modest man and therefore it will not be amiss to say that he is making a splendid start in his field. He is just now doing a royal service in the Men and Millions campaign. You will find Frederick W. Burnham, when you want him, ready to "boost," cautious and dignified as becometh a secretary, a fine speaker, a genial friend, and well fitted for his difficult office. One of our seasoned veterans remarked that if he were thirty years younger he would like no better office than the secretaryship of the American Christian Missionary Society, and this man's opinion has great weight, for he has held many important offices in our ranks and filled them all with credit. So with all the discouragements that may come to one recently inaugurated, and they are bound to come, there is reason to believe that the prospects of success are much more inviting than they have been in recent years. Some day we will discover a better time for the May offering than between the two great offerings of the year, the March offering and Children's Day. But as that May opportunity will soon be here, we hope it will be one of the greatest days the office has had in many years, that the best efforts of all predecessors may be crowned with success this year. Mr. Burnham is a worthy incumbent in the apostolate of the American Christian Missionary Society.

"It Can't Be Done."

It works well other places but not here. "You know we are different from most places." Gentle reader, did you ever hear anything like that? Well, when we are different it is generally to our own hurt. From the earliest dawn of creation down to the present time there have always been those who said, "It can't be done." But someone has always been able to show the Missourians.

How did the the world get started, son?
Why, some one said, "It can't be done!"
That settled it. The troglodyte
Came out of darkness into light.

"It can't be done?" somebody said,
And lo! the green fields gave us bread.
With that taunt ringing in his ears
Has man gone upward through the years.

You should have seen the mill wheels run
When some one said, "It can't be done!"
"It can't be done!" they said before
A sail put out to sea from shore.

Since world's remote and dismal dawn,
Those magic words have spurred us on.
It drove Columbus where the sun
Went redly down, "It can't be done!"

"It can't be done!" the doubters said,
And lo! the Wrights flew overhead.
"It can't be done!" was what they cried
When Fulton offered them a ride.

They said it, and Marconi sent
His message through the firmament.
That is the way it happened, son,
Praise God for this, "It can't be done!"

In the Enemy's Country.

A stranger was looking over the tracts in the vestibule of the Church of the Unity (Unitarian), but did not find what he wanted. There were new publications by Dr. Charles W. Eliot and Rev. A. P. Record, but they did not attract. Then a regular attendant asked if she could assist him. "Oh," he said, "I was looking for something by Billy Sunday."—Springfield Republican.

DAVID AND GOLIATH.

INTERNATIONAL UNIFORM LESSON FOR APRIL 25.

Golden Text: If God is for us, who is against us? Romans 8:31.

1 Sam. 17:1-54. Memory Verse, 45.

American Standard Bible.
Copyright, 1901, by Thomas Nelson & Sons.
(Used by permission.)

(38) And Saul clad David with his apparel, and he put a helmet of brass upon his head, and he clad him with a coat of mail. (39) And David girded his sword upon his apparel, and he assayed to go; for he had not proved it. And David said unto Saul, I cannot go with these; for I have not proved them. And David put them off him. (40) And he took his staff in his hand, and chose him five smooth stones out of the brook, and put them in the shepherd's bag which he had, even in his wallet; and his sling was in his hand: and he drew near to the Philistine.

(41) And the Philistine came on and drew near unto David; and the man that bare the shield went before him. (42) And when the Philistine looked about, and saw David, he disdained him; for he was but a youth, and ruddy, and withal of a fair countenance. (43) And the Philistine said unto David, Am I a dog, that thou comest to me with staves? And the Philistine cursed David by his gods. (44) And the Philistine said to David, Come to me and I will give thy flesh unto the birds of the heavens, and to the beasts of the field. (45) Then said David to the Philistine, Thou comest to me with a sword, and with a spear, and with a javelin: but I come to thee in the name of Jehovah of hosts the God of the armies of Israel, whom thou hast defied. (46) This day will Jehovah deliver thee into my hand; and I will smite thee, and take thy head from off thee; and I will give the dead bodies of the host of the Philistines this day unto the birds of the heavens, and to the wild beasts of the earth; that all the earth may know that there is a God in Israel, (47) and that all this assembly may know that Jehovah saveth not with sword and spear: for the battle is Jehovah's, and he will give you into our hand. (48) And it came to pass, when the Philistine rose, and came and drew nigh to meet David, that David hastened, and ran toward the army to meet the Philistine. (49) And David put his hand in his bag, and took thence a stone, and slang it, and smote the Philistine in his forehead; and the stone sank into his forehead, and he fell upon his face to the earth.

(50) So David prevailed over the Philistine with a sling and with a stone, and smote the Philistine, and slew him; but there was no sword in the hand of David. (51) Then David ran, and stood over the Philistine, and took his sword, and drew it out of the sheath thereof, and slew him, and cut off his head therewith. And when the Philistines saw that their champion was dead, they fled.

Verse by Verse.

BY ASA MCDANIEL.

38. Saul clad David with his apparel. This was the garment worn under the coat of mail.—Helmet. A metal cap used to protect the head of a warrior.—Coat of mail. The coat of mail reached to the knees or lower, and was made of overlapping metal plates. The occasion demanded the best, and this was found in possession of the king.

39. David girded his sword upon his apparel. His own sword is the natural meaning.—He assayed to go. He tried to walk with this equipment.—He had not proved it. He had not tested them. David was not accustomed to such weight. His strength lay in ease and rapidity of movement.—I have not proved them. He had no experience with such implements of war, and could not use them to advantage.—David put them off. He desired the equipment with which he was accustomed to fight.

40. His staff. Club. A very ancient weapon, and still in use among the Bedawin.—Five smooth stones. These would be more accurate than any other kind.—Brook. Or, Torrentbed, RVm.—Even in his wallet. The name by which the shepherd's bag was called. It is a technical term for the slinger's box or bag in which he carried his ammunition.—His sling. The sling was made of leather. The sling gradually narrowed toward the ends, so that it could be handled. Common in Egypt and Palestine.

41. The Philistine. Goliath, see verse 4.—The man that bare the shield. His trusted servant. The verse is not found in the Septuagint.

42. Looked about. He expected a more pretentious combatant.—Disdained him. Despised. Goliath felt insulted when the unarmored youth presented himself for the combat.

43. Am I a dog? To call a person a dog indicated the greatest contempt, see 2 Kings 8:13.—With staves. The club which the shepherd carried to protect himself and his flock against wild beasts.

45. Then said David. David begins his part of the conversation before the contest.—Thou comest. Goliath expected from his sword what David looked for from Jehovah.

51. And slew him. The stone had just stunned Goliath, and David completed his task by the use of his sword, see verse 39. —Champion. Or, mighty man. RVm.—Was dead. When the Philistines saw their champion fall they fled.

Giant Killers, Ancient and Modern

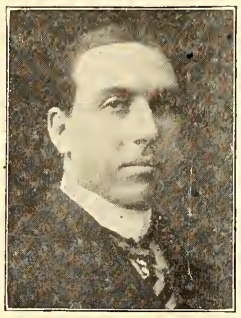
BY JOHN R. EWERS.

There is a victory which precedes this lesson which is of much interest. When the elder brothers ridicule David, when they say exasperating things to him, he controls his temper. There would have been no victory over Goliath unless David had been, as he was, master of himself. How quietly and effectively he answers the incisive words of those overbearing brothers. This victory should not be overlooked in the study of the more spectacular one which follows.



SAUL'S ARMOR.

Again he would have courted defeat had he ventured forth in the armor of his king. How awkward he would have been! And yet not more ridiculous than many a modern who tries to fight in the armor of another. There are plenty of present-day Don Quixotes. Billy Sunday is the most prominent man in the religious world today. He is sincere and can "put across" his sensational stunts. He is a burning and a shining light. He is wearing out his life to preach with such mighty power. His armor fits him. He came by it naturally. He knows baseball. He knows men. He is a great success. But here comes another who tries to wear his armor. He yells, throws himself on the platform, takes off his collar and his coat, uses crude slang, attempts impersonations, uses familiarity in addressing the Most High, and succeeds only in becoming a cheap imitation. A mere ape.

"BE YOURSELF."

Down at East Aurora, N. Y., where the Roycrofters make beautiful things, I saw, one evening, carved upon one-half of a big, ash log this motto, "Be Yourself." I stopped, in that stone chapel, reared to the god of things as they ought to be, and brooded over these words, "Be Yourself." Billy Sunday says that he used to preach to small crowds when he used the conventional, traditional methods and held himself in check. But one day it dawned upon him that he should be himself and from that moment the crowds came. Too many men are like caged lions. The iron bars of custom hold them in and keep them from being dangerous to sin. "Be Yourself." God has a plan for you—find it and live it. Now you are a poor, pathetic, harmless Don Quixote. Wake up and be yourself. David, with the shepherd's sling, is a thousand times more effective than with the borrowed armor of a king.

DAVID'S BACKING.

"That venture will fail," said a man in my hearing the other day. "O, no, it will not," said another, "it is backed by the ..... estate." That was enough. No enterprise backed by such a powerful interest could fail. I remember when, for the first time, the thought came to me that Almighty God was back of me so long as I was engaged in His business. One of my young men was employed by the biggest law firm in Pittsburgh. When his health broke down a year ago that firm sent him to a sanitarium and has continued his full salary ever since. He comes home cured in a few weeks and a better position awaits him in the same firm. They took care of him. The man or woman who gives his or her life unreservedly to God's work has the guarantee of the backing not of a bank, not of a corporation, not of the richest man in the country, but of ALMIGHTY GOD. It does us good to think of that. Moreover, God's business is not going to fail. It may seem to fail. Christ had to go to the cross. As Stalker says, "He failed to become the king of the Jews in order that he might become King of kings and Lord of lords." In reality there is no failure in God's cause. Men may be sacrificed in the struggle but no life is lost and no effort is wasted. David went into the battle backed by Jehovah. He won.

A MODERN GOLIATH.

Said Lloyd George, "We are fighting three enemies: Germany, Austria and Drink, and the greatest of these is drink!" Workmen are striking in England for no other reason than the blurring of mind by drink. The saddest condition I know is that of a country where bishops own brewery stock! War and drink will not mix with religion—not with the Christian religion. Drink is the modern Goliath. What a big, insolent, bragging, armored, coarse monster he is! He has the average church member bluffed into fear. Some of my men have had a grand time this past week fighting a saloon. It is great business. Your men like a real fight. Let them keep at it. But I found out that there are a lot of men who have "engagements" elsewhere when the battle wages hot. David's three big brothers had cold feet. Sitting in their tents they mouthed great sounding words about the Philistines. But David, putting his faith in God, sent the stone crashing into the skull of the frightful enemy. If it was only a superstition that David indulged it was a mighty good superstition, for it worked. Commend me to some more of the same brand. That which fires a man and nerves his arm to overthrow evil is good stuff.

THE LION TAMER.

This was not the first venture for David. He had made good before. Several bears had been put out of business by that fearless lad and more than one lion had died at his hands. Killing giants is not kindergarten exercise. It is not a pastime for precocious infants. It is not an "indoor sport." But he who has proved his nerve with bears and who has tested his arm with lions may know the thrill of putting Goliath out of the running.

Was organized in 1849. It "blazed the way thru the wilderness" to our present specialized organizations. Its work is basic. Upon foundations it lays is builded our world wide work. Upon its activities depend the prosperity and ability of "the home base." Its footprints are local churches and its continent-wide trek is observable in Boston, New York, Philadelphia, Buffalo, Pittsburgh, Chicago, Minneapolis, St. Paul, Winnipeg, Billings, Spokane, Calgary, Vancouver, Seattle, Portland, San Francisco, Salt Lake City, Los Angeles, Phoenix, El Paso, Houston, Galveston, Denver, Topeka, Wichita, Omaha, New Orleans, Birmingham, Jacksonville, Savannah, Atlanta, Washington, Baltimore, etc., etc., and hundreds of communities between.

In 66 years it has organized 4046 churches, more than one-third of our total number and helped to greater efficiency another one-third.

Men and Millions Team Leaves Chicago.

After three weeks of strenuous campaigning, the Men and Millions Team left Chicago for a week's rest. Immediately following Easter they planned to make headquarters at Burlington, Ia., and begin operations in the western portion of Illinois. The gifts to the Men and Millions fund in Chicago total between forty and fifty thousand dollars, which is a very satisfying result. One man of outstanding liberality contributed twenty-five thousand dollars and designated the gift for the work in China, in the district where the famed Chinese leader, Cheng Chien, lives. The gift was conditioned on the Foreign Society and the C. W. B. M. unifying their work in China, and the condition was met. The team found the Chicago churches hospitable to its appeal, and these leaders have gone away with many expressions of their warm appreciation of the reception given them in the big city.

Dr. Powell Preaches on Social Purity.

Dr. E. L. Powell, Louisville, Ky., was recently made the head of a social purity commission appointed by the mayor. Once a month his sermon is reported in full in the Courier-Journal, and this month the sermon had to do with the subject of cleaning up the city. He said in part: "Now this vice commission, which has been recently appointed by our mayor, can do another thing. It has not one little bit of power to save anybody; it has not the power of the little finger of your right hand to drive out the lust of drink, or the lust of appetite, or to make one single wicked thought the less. It cannot get into the realm of the conscience, of the motives, of the affections, of the will. It cannot touch the interior life of a single individual or of a community of individuals, but if given the proper authority it can remove physical hindrances and thus make possible the entrance of the gospel of Jesus Christ, which alone can do the saving."

Encourages Missionary Reading.

The C. W. B. M. auxiliary at First church, Beatrice, Neb., is creating much interest in a plan of missionary reading. Each member of the society hands to the secretary each month a list of books read. These include also periodicals which count as a book or part of a book. The Missionary Tidings and the Missionary Intelligencer each count as a book each month. Four copies of the Nebraska Tidings count as one book. Four copies of the Christian Reporter count as one book. It is also regarded as meritorious to hand in a report of others who have been enlisted to join in the monthly readings.

Prayer-Meeting Before Sunrise.

Pryor, Okla., had a service before sunrise on Easter morning and the congregation waited for the appearing of the sun. It was the culmination of a series of Holy Week services which had been held. Each day of the week the memories of our Lord were revived. Since there was no record for Wednesday, no service was held that night. Byron Hester is the pastor.

A Love Box for the Missionary.

First church, Beatrice, Neb., is very fond of its Living Link missionary, Dr. Mary Longdon, of India. She will visit the church this summer and the church is getting together a "love" box to be given her upon her arrival. The box will contain gifts of value for her personal use, or for her hospital, and with each gift will go a sentiment or a verse of poetry to express the mood of the giver.

Attendance Doubled in a Year.

A year ago First church, Indiana, Pa., had a Sunday-school attendance of 108. This was the largest attendance in the history of the school. On March 28, this year, there were 210 present, which is nearly double that of a year ago.

Members Coach the Pastor.

A unique morning service was held in Massillon, O., church recently, where H. E. Stafford is pastor. He invited fifteen of his people to give two minute talks on the subject, "What I would do if I were pastor of this church." Such questions as the following were discussed: "What I Would Not Teach." "One Thing I Would Emphasize," "The Most Needful Thing in the Church," "The Neglected Thing," "Can the Pastor Afford to Spend his Time Thumbing Index Cards and Licking Postage Stamps?" At this meeting there were some very fruitful suggestions given and many of the plans have been put in operation. One of the most helpful to the pastor has been the forming of a stenographers' committee of volunteers who are experienced stenographers. These come during the evening and do any office work that may be needed.

Dr. Willett Receives New Honor.

Dr. H. L. Willett has been made a full professor in the Semitic department of the University of Chicago. Instructors in each department have four ranks and Dr. Willett can attain no higher honors in the Semitic department, unless he should be made head of the department.

Cotner University Has Choir.

Cotner university has a chorus choir which recently gave a concert, assisted by the Male Glee club, and the Cotner orchestra. The program showed that the director, E. S. Luce, during the time he has been in charge, has accomplished wonders in training these organizations to efficiency.

In and Around Chicago

Easter in Chicago this year was a time of very special rejoicing in the churches. Incomplete reports show that 128 were added to the churches, and the full report will make a much better showing. There were twenty-four received at Memorial church, where Dr. H. L. Willett ministers, two as associate members from pedo-baptist bodies, and fourteen made confession of faith and were baptized. One infant was presented in the church for the dedication service. Englewood had a service that overflowed into the Sunday-school rooms and there were thirty-five confessions of faith. Irving Park church had prepared for Easter with a pastor's class under the direction of W. G. Winn, but many others presented themselves, and there were thirty-nine accessions, all but two by confession of faith. J. H. Mohorter, Secretary of the National Benevolent Association, spoke at Ashland Avenue church and secured a good offering from the membership. A number of the churches reported cantatas given by the choir, at the evening service, among them Evanston and Englewood. Easter at the Russian mission proved a disappointing day, the only spot in Chicago with a bad report. Many Russians of the neighborhood, outside the church membership, were reported drunk, and this cut down the outside attendance to a minimum. A feature of Easter for the young people of Memorial church was that they joined in a union sunrise prayer-meeting with the other young people of Oakland at the Trinity Episcopal church.

Dr. H. L. Willett, who has been advanced to a full professorship in the Semitics department at the University of Chicago

The Easter congregation completely filled Hyde Park church. Seventeen were received into the fellowship of the church. Among these were Methodists, Congregationalists, Lutherans, Unitarians and the Reorganized Church of the Latter Day Saints.

Jackson Boulevard had a great day Easter. There were thirty accessions to the membership of the church. Among these were eleven Chinese, ten of whom presented themselves for baptism. The church had a "chest of "Joash" in which was collected money for a special purpose. Into this was cast $450.

Dr. Willett is going to Springfield, Ill., this week, Friday evening, to lecture in the largest auditorium of the city. He makes his lecture trips under the Redpath Bureau.

At the ministers' meeting on March 29, the executive board of the Chicago Christian Missionary Society was present. F. W. Burnham, president of the American Christian Missionary Society, was also present, and spoke on the question of the future relationship of his society to the Chicago City Missionary Society. The possibility had been mentioned as to the home board conducting work in Chicago independently of the organized work in the city. The ministers spoke frankly concerning the suggestion and without a dissenting voice recorded themselves as opposed to it. Following this, there was a motion passed expressing entire confidence in the present board of the Chicago Christian Missionary Society and requesting that the home board continue its co-operation in Chicago with the organized work as in the past. Mr. Burnham was made bearer of this resolution to his board in Cincinnati.

Will Locate School In Los Angeles.

The leaders of southern California have had another conference over the educational situation in their section and have decided to launch an institution to be called the Los Angeles Christian Training School. The institution will not undertake to do regular college work but will train ministers and church leaders of various kinds. It will probably find quarters in First church, Los Angeles, for a time. The fees of the school will be nominal and the instruction will be in the Bible and in certain definite forms of Christian service.

California Ministers Hold Retreat.

Southern California ministers will hold a "retreat" at Claremont for three days following Easter. They will make a trip to Mt. Baldy during the period.

Woman Preaches in Country.

Belle Reid Yates is a rural preacher in Kansas, with Grenola church. She has been using the agricultural figures of the Scripture for sermon topics. Special services have been held in which scientific agriculture has been set forth by members of the congregation. One series includes talks on "Botany of Corn," "Types and Classes of Corn," "Corn as Food," "Cultural Methods."

A New Parsonage at Denny, N. M.

Good houses are not so numerous in a new country, and growing communities sometimes have but little room for the newcomer. Denny, N. M., church is building a parsonage for its pastor, S. P. McClure.

Des Moines Church Nears Completion.

Capitol Hill church, Des Moines, is building a new fifty thousand dollar building. It will soon be completed. This added equipment will enable the congregation to enlarge its work greatly. T. F. Paris is pastor of this church.

Disciple Takes Degree at Oberlin.

C. A. Hanna, a Disciple student who has been preaching at Kipton, O., has completed his studies to take the degree in the theological department of Oberlin college this spring.

Episcopalian Becomes Disciple.

H. F. W. Trulove is a young English Episcopalian who has been investigating the religious position of the Disciples of Christ and has become convinced that this is the platform on which he wishes to stand. He was received into the Wichita Falls, Tex., church recently by the pastor, F. F. Walters. Mr. Trulove has gone to preaching and he recently organized a new congregation of thirty members at Jolly, Tex.

Chamber of Commerce Compliments Pastor.

The Chamber of Commerce of Gainesville, Tex., invited E. C. Mobley to its rooms on a recent evening and presented him with a handsome gold watch. Mr. Mobley is leaving Gainesville after six years' service. The watch had tied to it the following inscription: "To Rev. E. C. Mobley; not the preacher, but the man. Not from the members of his church, but from just men who love, honor and respect him for his manly qualities."

Two Thousand Calls Are Made.

One of the most significant features of the evangelistic meetings held recently in Kenton, O., church has been the organization of the church for home visitation. Two thousand calls have been made in the vicinity of the church, and mostly in homes not previously visited. There were thirty accessions in the special meetings. The pastor, Leon H. Couch, did the preaching, and the music was in charge of Harvard S. Saxton and wife. The reports from Kenton are full of happy optimism.

Holy Week Services at Paris, Mo.

E. B. Shively preached each evening during Holy Week at Paris, Mo., using the letters to the church mentioned in the opening chapters of the book of Revelation as topics during the week. Each afternoon there was a special meeting held by the C. W. B. M. auxiliary of the church.

A Newcomer at Centralia, Mo., Parsonage.

There have been many callers at the parsonage at Centralia, Mo., recently with mysterious little packages. These were meant for Mary Eugene, the new daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Charles H. Swift. The newcomer has been received with a warm welcome by the whole church.

Men Who Will Make the Convention

The personnel of the committee on arrangements for the national convention at Los Angeles will be of interest to the readers of The Christian Century:

C. C. Chapman, chairman of the General Committee of Arrangements, is the owner of the largest individual orange grove in the world, a leading business man of California and a large giver to the cause of Christ. He was one of the makers of the Jackson Boulevard Church, Chicago, and has dedicated over thirty churches in California.

F. M. Rogers, secretary of the General Committee, is the state secretary of the state missionary interests, coming to that work last fall from a long and notable ministry at Long Beach, where he raised a debt of $20,000 and doubled the membership. He came to California from the West Side Church, Springfield, Ill.

S. M. Cooper, treasurer, was for many years identified with our national missionary interests in Cincinnati, and now controls a land and construction company in Los Angeles.

R. F. Thrapp, who is chairman of the Committee on Buildings and Exhibits, is minister of First church, Los Angeles, and is making that congregation one of the most active in the brotherhood. His previous ministries were at Jacksonville and Pittsfield, Ill.

Mr. W. F. Holt, maker of the great Imperial Empire, who will manage the finances of the Convention

J. P. McKnight, chairman of the Reception Committee, serves Wilshire Boulevard church. He came to Los Angeles from Peoria, Ill., and began, with a little group of people, to lay the foundation for the Magnolia Ave. church, which will remain as an enduring monument.

J. G. Warren, chairman of the Entertainment Committee, is a well-known capitalist and business man. He is president of the company owning the Auditorium building, and is a leading factor in First church, Los Angeles.

M. D. Clubb, chairman of the Registration Committee, served as state secretary for four years, and gave an impetus and program for our missionary interests that doubled the income and effectiveness.

W. F. Holt, chairman of the Finance Committee, came to California, eighteen years ago, comparatively a poor man. He is the maker of the great Imperial Empire, railroad president, banker and president of the Holton Power Co. that controls many public utilities. Every interest of the kingdom commands his prayers, service and wealth.

C. R. Hudson, chairman of the Bible-school Committee, came to the great church at Pomona from Frankfort, Ky. He is recognized throughout the state as one of the most efficient Sunday-school experts.

C. H. Windham, chairman Transportation Committee, is one of the best known real-estate men of the coast, recently mayor of Long Beach and candidate for Congress.

Mrs. Anna Paul Cason, C. W. B. M. Committee, is our State C. W. B. M. president, teacher of one of the largest Sunday-school classes in California and one of the representative women of the state.

S. J. Chapman, Committee on Ushers, directs the company which owns Chapman Park, the most exclusive residence section of Los Angeles. He was one of the founders of the Magnolia Avenue Church, and the new work on Wilshire Boulevard is largely due to his faith and generosity.

The other members of the Executive Committee are Lloyd Darsie, chairman Communion Committee; R. W. Abberley, chairman Pulpit Supply Committee; Mrs. W. C. Harris, Committee on Decorations; F. M. Dowling, Publicity Committee; Dan. Trundle, Local Press Reports; R. H. Crittenden, Music Committee; C. F. Hutslar, Banquets; T. G. Picton, Telegraph and Telephone; C. G. Gerheart, Christian Endeavor; N. L. Browning, Secretary; E. H. Kellar, Information.

Missionary Writes from Thibet.

Mrs. Minnie F. Ogden has written from Thibet to her supporting congregation, Norwood church, Cincinnati, an interesting account of the work in that far-off land. She says: "Today we four families, with the help of some natives, fed 200 poor people. As they were eating dinner, Mrs. Shelton said: 'I wish that I could set this crowd of people on the rostrum of every church in America today. There would be no more people opposed to missions.' I only wish you could have seen them. We gave them tickets and only those with tickets could come. We had them in Dr. Shelton's yard, sitting on the ground. Each person brought his or her bowl stuck back in their dress some place. We first served Tibetan tea with plenty of butter in it, then Dsamba (parched barley meal), then a rich beef soup with the beef chopped up fine; in it were noodles, turnips and onions. This was the best meal that they had enjoyed in a long time. Many are doing well now to have Dsamba to eat. War times here have certainly made it hard on the people. We sang to them, preached to them and all seemed to enjoy the morning very much. Just to be able to help others means very much to us all. Tomorrow we have the school children and their parents. Also have my Tibetan S. S. class. If you could hear the school children sing 'Silent Night,' I am sure you would enjoy it."

Christian Endeavorers in Visiting Campaign.

The Endeavor society of Central church, Youngstown, O., made the first day of Christian Endeavor week visiting day. There were forty-five Endeavorers divided up into four sections, and working in pairs, and they called on 400 young people of the church and Sunday-school and urged the claims of Christian Endeavor. The result was a splendid meeting in the evening and pledges amounting to $58 for the foreign mission work of the society.

Endeavorers Raise Money.

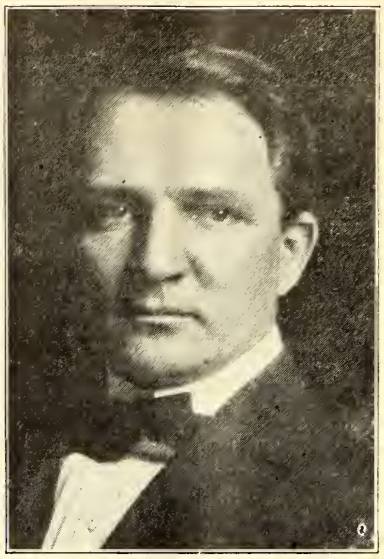
Bethany, Neb., church has an Endeavor society that does things. This organization pledged two thousand dollars on the new edifice and has paid $1,500 on the pledge to date. The efficiency chart and standards provided by the Christian Endeavor movement are used in the campaign.

Dr. Garrett Tells of Chinese.

Dr. Frank Garrett, who has been a missionary of the Disciples to China for the last seventeen years, says that the first thing you have to do is to get the Chinese viewpoint. Like many of their customs, it seems to us upside down. In the United States, if you call a man a liar, you are likely to get into serious trouble. In China, the man would be rather complimented than insulted. A missionary had established a little church somewhere in the interior, and put a native preacher in charge while he visited some other mission points. When he returned he missed one young man from the congregation. The native preacher said they had put him out of the church. "Why, what was the matter? What did he do?" asked the missionary. "He stole a bamboo rod," returned the preacher. "Why," answered the missionary, "a bamboo rod is worth only about ten cents. Don't you think you were a little severe?" "No, no," and he shook his head indignantly. "We can't have a thief in the church. The Bible says a thief can't go to heaven, and we couldn't have anyone in the church who couldn't go to heaven. Besides, it would give us a bad name in the community." "Well," returned the missionary, "the Bible says a liar can't go to heaven. Are you going to turn the liars out, too?" "Oh," cried the preacher, "that's different! Entirely different! We all lie."

German Talks on the War.

C. G. Brelos, pastor of First church, Waukegan, Ill., is a German who has not forgotten his extraction. He was engaged recently to speak before the Men's Club of First church in Waukegan on the topic, "What the Non-combatant Nations Should Achieve." He said in part: "Then there remains but one upon whom to fasten this diabolical crime—the responsibility for this deluge of blood must rest upon the Kaiser, and as Dr. Jefferson declares: 'This is the conclusion at which many Americans have arrived.' He also thinks that there is some reason for this assumption among a class of people who have only chance information, such as they find scattered through the daily press or drawn from other unreliable sources. Reference is made to the Kaiser's general bearing with his fondness for a spiked helmet and army overcoat and display of military decorations. His great army, the most magnificently equipped and organized of all time and countries, a navy second only to that of Great Britain. Then it was he who declared that Austria must be allowed a free hand with Servia and when Russia refused to cease mobilizing he issued a declaration of war against that country. This may seem like sufficient evidence to convict the criminal without further controversy. Yet it must appear that the premises are too trivial to warrant so sweeping and far-reaching conclusions. It ought to be borne in mind that while France has been at war several times and England has had at least four wars, Germany has not been at war with any people for nearly fifty years."



Raymond Robins, Social Service Promoter, of Chicago, who recently held evangelistic meetings in Des Moines

Fellow Pastors Aid During Holy Week.

East End church, Pittsburgh, observed Holy Week this year and each evening of the week some fellow pastor assisted John Ray Ewers with the service. Among the pastors assisting were Wallace Tharp, W. A. Lyne, W. S. Cook and J. C. Mace. The Sunday-school at East End had 343 in attendance on March 28.

Church Unity At Berthoud, Colo.

In order that they may accomplish greater results in their church work the church members of Berthoud, Colo., which with a population of 800 supports seven churches, are seriously considering combining the different religious organizations into one church. Berthoud has about $20,000 invested in houses of worship, and thousands of dollars are raised annually for the support of the various organizations. It has been pointed out that it would be far less expensive to maintain one large church than to support seven different denominations, as at present. R. A. Schell, pastor of First church of Boulder, has been asked to accept the pastorate of the proposed church if the union is formed.

Success at Denver, Central.

G. B. Van Arsdall, of Central church, Denver, is entering upon his sixth year with that congregation, as pastor. A report of his five years' work follows: Seven hundred and thirty-seven people have united with Central church in that period—of this number 299 have moved away; 26 have transferred their membership to other Denver churches; six have died; 19 are so irregular in their attendance and support of the church as hardly to be reckoned members any longer, leaving a net gain of resident members of 387. The present resident membership is approximately 750.

Missionaries Wed on Board Ship

On Saturday afternoon, January 30, 1915, a most interesting wedding occurred on board the Pacific Mail S. S. "Mongolia," which sailed from San Francisco January 9.

Among the Mongolia's passengers were thirty missionaries who were in general agreement that the voyage was one of the most pleasant they had ever made. The missionaries distinguished themselves in the deck sports and in other ways, one of the ladies, Miss Alma Favors, taking as many as three prizes. To the great surprise of the passengers, it was announced at Yokohama that Miss Favors would be taken as a prize by a missionary in China before the Mongolia was out of Japanese waters.

A wedding had never been solemnized on the good ship Mongolia so the best of preparations were made for the unique occasion. Passengers went ashore at Kobe and secured an abundance of evergreens and flowers with which the music room was beautifully decorated. Promptly at six o'clock in the evening while the wedding march was being played, in the presence of the officers of the ship and all the cabin passengers, Rev. Clifford H. Plopper and Miss Alma Favors, missionaries of the Disciples' Board of Foreign Missions, were united in marriage. The civil requirements had been met at the office of the American consul at Yokohama, and Rev. James T. Franklin, a Baptist missionary, performed the ceremony aboard ship. Nothing was lacking to make the wedding complete. Rev. E. J. Lee, of the Episcopalian Board of Missions, acted as best man, while Mrs. Peeke, of the Dutch Reformed Mission, was matron of honor and Miss Baker of the Methodist Episcopal Board was bridesmaid. Flower girls scattered petals along the way. The officers and passengers presented the couple with a purse of gold while Captain Emery Rice of the Mongolia gave a really great dinner in honor of the occasion. Mr. and Mrs. Plopper will make their home in Kiangsu Province, China.

Lest a multitude of young people should engage passage on the Mongolia, it should be stated here that nothing like it ever occured before on that ship.

Indianapolis Notes

Seventh church observed Holy Week, and the pastor, H. Clay Trusty, preached each evening. The topics were: "The Authority of Christ," "The Promise of Christ." "The Retirement of Christ," "The Farewell of Christ," "The Suffering of Christ." There was no service held on Saturday evening before Easter.

The Federation in Indianapolis furnishes a bond of union for the women of all the Disciple churches. During Holy Week, two union meetings were held. On the afternoon of Palm Sunday, the women gathered at Central church for prayer and counsel. On Friday of that week, they met again at Columbia Place church. The topic for special prayer was the work of the Christian Woman's Board of Missions.

Seventh church finds the Sunday-school orchestra, which helps with the music on Sunday evenings, a great attraction.

The Christian Endeavor forces of Seventh church will hold the third annual banquet soon, and they have engaged Allen B. Philputt as the chief speaker of the evening.

Disciples Weak in South Carolina.

South Carolina has forty Disciple churches and not one of them has full time preaching at its own expense. There has been a state missionary society for thirty-five years but progress has been very slow under present methods. At the present time the state society is co-operating with the American Christian Missionary Society. Twenty-one of the forty churches are in the open country, one thirty miles from a railroad. Nine more are in towns of less than a thousand. There are eighty-five towns and cities in the state with more than a thousand population and in these there are nine churches in eight of the cities. These facts indicate how weak and struggling the cause of the Disciples is in this particular state.

What is an Ideal Young Woman Like?

Graham Frank, pastor at Liberty, Mo., has written letters to many of the young people of his town, asking what an ideal young man is like and an ideal young woman. From the replies, he is constructing some sermons to the young people. There is much interest in the series.

Pastor Addresses Normal School.

J. R. Rountree, who went to Tempe, Arizona, recently, has been in great demand for special addresses of various kinds. He has spoken at the normal school in the city a number of times.

Works Among Miners and Soldiers.

The life of W. L. Martin, pastor at Bisbee and Douglas, Arizona, is full of incident. His parish is in a mining country and there are also several thousand United States soldiers near. Among the latter is a Disciple, Chaplain Dixon, who works congenially with Mr. Martin. The slack times in the mines have created many moral problems among the miners in addition to the economic ones.

Chief of Police Is Christian Worker.

A. E. Westlake is chief of police in Bozeman, Mont., where A. D. Chapman is minister. He was educated for a school teacher but is now helping gather in the malefactors in his community. He never forgets he is a Christian and a deacon of the church, and with his other duties imparts much good advice to wandering boys that come under his care. He has the modern theory of the purpose of punishment.

Have Adopted Combined Service.

E. P. Wise, East Liverpool, O., reports that they have adopted the combined morning service with favorable results. A large number of children now stay for the church service. Thirteen have been added at the regular services since Feb. 1.

Convention Committee Meets in Chicago.

The Committee on Arrangements for the General Convention of the Disciples of Christ, for Los Angeles, met in Chicago March 23. Among those coming in from a distance was Graham Frank, the secretary of the general convention.

General Secretary Has Not Moved.

The parish paper of Liberty, Mo., explains that a weekly journal of St. Louis is wrong in giving the residence of Graham Frank, Secretary of the General Convention of the Disciples of Christ as Fulton, Mo. The secretary has not moved, but the paper mentioned was not well informed in making its statement.

State Board Meets.

The Missouri state board met in Kansas City recently to consider the situation in Missouri. President F. J. Yokley, of Missouri Christian college at Camden Point, and Secretaries F. W. Burnham and Grant K. Lewis of the American Christian Missionary society, were in attendance upon the meeting in behalf of their respective interests.

Church is Quarantined.

Windsor, Ill., is in the midst of an epidemic and schools and churches have been closed. Chas. Coleman, the pastor there, finds his work at a standstill.

"Joseph and His Brethren."

A cantata called "Joseph and His Brethren," will be given by the chorus of Central church, Buffalo, on the evening of April 27, in the Emblem theater, of the Eastern City, where ample stage room is to be found for the east. Some of the church's singers, aided by some outside talent, have spent much valuable time in preparation for this splendid cantata.

Mormon Preacher Becomes Disciple.

Not all Mormons are closed to evidence with regard to the claims of Joseph Smith to be a prophet. Wm. LaRue has been a preacher of the Church of Jesus Christ of the Latter Day Saints, and he has been reading the available literature opposed to Mormonism with the result that he has been convinced that Mormonism is still polygamous, and that the claims of the prophet were false. He has renounced Mormonism for the fellowship of the Disciples.

Class Organized for Railroad Men.

First church, Altoona, Pa., is organizing a class for railroad men and has set for its goal to reach five hundred men. Without any publicity, 35 came together and organized a class. The enrollment will soon reach a hundred, and the higher figure will still be insisted upon as a goal. W. Graham Walker is teacher of the class and pastor of the church.

Forward Steps in Sunday School Work

The Greater Cincinnati Bible School Association has been reorganized with the following officers: B. L. Humbert (Newport), president; S. L. Royer (Central, Cincinnati), vice-president, and Glen B. Murdock (Latonia), secretary. The annual rally for the schools will be held in Norwood, Sunday afternoon, May 16.

The National Team is holding schools of methods in the southeast, including Washington, D. C.; Norfolk, Va.; Wilson, N. Car.; Jacksonville, Fla., and Athens, Ga. They report fine interest.

Secretary R. M. Hopkins, who announces that new teacher-training methods are soon to be promoted.

The American Society will unite with the Western Pennsylvania Society in holding a joint state convention and school of methods with the Belmar, Pittsburg, church, April 26-30. This promises to be a great event for the workers of western Pennsylvania.

The spring season is quite widely used as a special decision time in the Sunday-school. A little leaflet is issued from the American office containing the "Plan of Salvation" that was prepared by the Troy, N. Y., Bible school.

Robt. M. Hopkins attended in Philadelphia, March 23 and 24, a meeting of the Sunday School Council Committee on Teacher Training. It is evident that new teacher training standards are soon to be announced that will awaken new interest in this most important field.

Miss Hazel A. Lewis is by invitation to be one of the specialists in the state convention of the West Virginia Sunday School Association to be held at Charleston, May 12 to 14.

Frank B. Ward, of Pomona, Cal., is doing an effective work as Director of Religious Education. He will lead a conference at the Los Angeles Convention for Directors of Religious Education and those interested in this phase of service.

Arrangements are being made to include reports from many foreign cities in the Inter City Exchange of Bible school reports from week to week. Practically every large city in the United States is now included in which we have a group of Sunday-schools.

P. H. Moss, our new field worker among the negro Sunday-schools, spent March in Virginia and will be in North Carolina and Tennessee during April. W. H. Brown, colored preacher at Mt. Sterling, Ky., writes of a recent visit to his school, "Prof. Moss is the man for the place and is putting new life into every department." This school hopes to be the first Front Rank school among the colored churches.

The offerings since January 1 have been coming nicely, but we are still $6,000 short of last year's record.

Robt. M. Hopkins,
Bible School Secretary.

Pastor Lets Church Talk Back

Charles H. Swift, pastor at Centralia, Mo., has given the town a chance to talk back. In collecting material for a sermon on "Jesus and the Community," he sent out letters to many of the prominent people of the community. The analysis of the replies is significant:

Questions sent to business men:

"1. Do you think our community is as moral as it might be? Why?"

85 per cent said it was not.

15 per cent were silent.

Reasons given for this are various. Some placed the blame on the churches as failing to let their light shine. Some said it was due to inconsistent Christian living. Some placed the responsibility on the parents and the homes. Several said it was because "we do not want it better or we would make it better." Some said the cause was due to selfishness and business greed.

"2. Why do our boys and girls go wrong?"

The answers were various. Parents seemed to be censured the most. Idleness seemed to be the one prevailing sin.

"3. Do open stores in evenings and on Sundays have a good influence?"

Some dodged this question by a "come-back," but 86 per cent said that open stores on Sunday had no good influence and many business men added that they wished all stores would be closed on Sunday.

"4. Do you think a common center for the recreation of the young people under strict management of Christian influence would be a benefit?"

88 per cent said yes.

6 per cent said no.

6 per cent were silent.

"5. Have you any suggestion to offer which will make Centralia a better town?"

These answers were interesting: "Quit knocking and be a booster;" "Elect Christian men as officers on town board, school board and church board;" "Rock pile for gossipers;" "Practice what you preach;" "See that our town ordinances are enforced," etc.

It's a Long Way to California!

But We Will Pay Your Fare!

IF you or any member of your congregation would like to secure a free ticket to the California Convention and the Exposition, we have a proposition that will surprise and delight you. Write for full particulars.

West Virginia's State Convention.

West Virginia has within its borders about fifteen thousand Disciples. The state convention of these churches will be held at Wheeling, May 4 to 6. The Ministerial Institute will be held in connection with the convention. There will be a consideration of the needs of the various districts of the state and then certain specific problems like the rural problem will be taken up. Orilas G. White is corresponding secretary.

Old Ministers Suffer Cut in Support.

Contributions to the Ministerial Relief fund have not been generous enough to keep pace with the increasing demands upon this organization. The meager pensions have been cut twenty per cent in size the past month and besides this the board has been compelled to borrow money. In view of the efforts of the Methodists to secure ten millions for their old ministers, this record is not one for Disciples to contemplate with any degree of satisfaction.

W. H. Kindred Closes Ministry.

W. H. Kindred has had a two and a half year ministry at Enid, Okla., which has brought results for the church. There have been 370 accessions, all but twenty-five of them coming at the regular services of the church. Mr. Kindred is going back into the evangelistic field at which he was very successful in years gone by.

Ohio Minister Dies of Pneumonia.

W. L. Neal has been a well-known figure in the ministry of southern Ohio. He preached at Sabina on March 14 as usual, with a day unusually full of duties. That evening he was stricken with pneumonia and by the time a week was past, he was dead. His ministry was one full of good works, and he will be long remembered among the Christian people of his state.

W. S. Priest in Fruitful Work.

Walter Scott Priest has been minister at Central church, Wichita, Kans., for five and a half years. His ministry has been greatly blessed in bringing new members into the church. There have been 1,002 accessions in the period.

California Disciple History Being Written.

The history of the Disciples in California is beng written up and will appear shortly in book form. E. B. Ware, minister at Healdsburg, Cal., and editor of a small state paper, is preparing the history for publication.

Nebraska Minister Breaks Down.

A nervous breakdown is responsible for an interruption of the activities of R. M. Dungan. He has been minister for some time at Cozad, Neb., but will close his work there on May 1.

Georgia Disciples Will Meet.

There are 151,560 Disciples in Georgia, and their leaders will gather at Griffin May 2 to 4. Georgia is peculiar in that the Sunday-school enrollment is less than half the membership of the churches. A number of states have a Sunday-school enrollment larger than the church membership.

Chinese Baby Finds Home.

"Who wants a Chinese baby?" was the query for a while at Boise, Ida. The baby has been placed in a good Christian home at last where it will grow up under right influences. There are five Chinese members of the church at Boise, and they are much interested in the work that is being done to bring China to Christianity.

Boy Expert Evangelizes.

A. W. Connor, of Irvington, Ind., has come to be known in many towns as "the kids' friend." He has held institutes in many cities to organize the boy life of the entire community. He recently held some old-fashioned evangelistic meetings at Wilkinson, Ind., which brought 62 accessions to the church. The Warrington, Ind., church voted to disband, and its membership has joined with the Wilkinson Disciples, making the strongest church in the county.

Basketball at Wichita, Central.

The basket ball team of Central church, Wichita, Kans., has played seventeen games this winter, and has won every one of them. The Y. M. C. A. offered a handsome loving cup for the best team, and this has gone to the Disciple boys. The lads are now looking around for more worlds to conquer.

A. W. Fortune is Commended.

The students of Transylvania who are going to be preachers are interested in watching a professor preach, as well as teach preaching. Prof. A. W. Fortune's evangelistic services in Broadway church, Lexington, have been attended by great throngs. Mark Collis, the minister, reports in a journal that once printed many uncomplimentary things about Mr. Fortune: "During the twenty-three years of my ministry to this church, we have never had a finer series of sermons. The old gospel was preached in its fullness. The sermons were characterized by clearness, force and beauty of expression." The meetings resulted in 57 accessions, 35 by confession of faith.

Union Meetings for the Japanese.

The Japanese churches of Los Angeles have united for union evangelistic services recently with very favorable results. The Japanese Christian Institute conducted by T. Kawai, received 39 new members. The work of the institute has educational, social and evangelistic features, all of which are making good progress.

The Best!

Many Sunday School classes will wish to study the life of Jesus THIS YEAR. They want the very best text for young people's or adult classes that can be found. This is simply to remind them that there has never been offered to the Sunday School world a Life of Christ so practical, so usable, so true to the best scholarship, so bristling with questions that wake up the pupils, so well proportioned, as Dr. Loa E. Scott's LIFE OF JESUS in Fifty-two Lessons. It is being widely used in Sunday Schools and Y. M. C. A. classes. It is being used in numerous leading Sunday Schools both of the Disciples and other religious bodies. This testifies to its popularity. You must have it in your school. Price 50c. In quantities of 10 or more, 40c each.

Bible Questions Answered by the Best Progressive Scholarship

Printed on India Paper. By printing on the best Bible paper the four large octavo volumes of the original edition are condensed into one. It is a library in one handy volume for the student's desk.

Correlation of Parts. By common consent the book as a work of reference is strikingly accurate and for convenience of use unsurpassed. The real value of the cross-references only now becomes apparent to the reader when at last he can use the whole work as a single volume.

International Character of Work. The work is international, having been written by 96 specialists, of whom exactly one-third wrote in a foreign language. Roughly it may be said that over a third of the writers belong to England, nearly a third to Scotland (13), Ireland (23), or America (12), and a third use German (28), Dutch (3), or French (1). This international character of the work has given the editors a free hand in selecting the scholars to whom to entrust the various subjects. The only rule has been—"the best available."

Un-Sectarian Character. In the next place, the work is un-sectarian. To say of a work which professes to be scientific that in the selection of writers ecclesiastical connection or independence counts nothing is really superfluous. It is interesting and encouraging, however, to note the result—that, as a matter of fact, among its writers in English are Jews, Episcopalians of various schools, Methodists, Congregationalists, Presbyterians, and Baptists, besides others who do not perhaps represent any specific religious communion.

Thoroughly Modern. No work of this kind is more modern or more authoritative than Encyclopedia Biblica. This is not a reprint from wornout plates but a beautiful piece of printing setting forth conceptions of biblical scholarship held in the great theological seminaries at this hour. Every seminary trained preacher of the past decade has used this work and knows its value.

Equal to 24 Ordinary Books. To secure the equivalent of twenty-four ordinary books which would sell at $1.50 each for a total of six dollars has brought the best learning to the door of the humblest man. Ignorance of biblical problems on the part of ministers and Sunday-school teachers has had one cause removed.

An Epoch-Marking Work. As a mere volume printed and published it admittedly marks an epoch in several respects—for example, in the fact that more than a million words were practically all in type at one time. As a piece of editorial workmanship it has few equals in respect of the skill with which the parts have been, not pinned together, but intimately and organically united. As a singularly weighty contribution to the biblical science of the time, its impulse is admitted perhaps most markedly by those who dissent most strongly from the views defended in some of its articles. It will be impossible to understand the movement of thought on biblical subjects during the next quarter of a century without taking account of the "Encyclopedia Biblica."

Disciples Publication Society

The Disciples Publication Society is an organization through which churches of the Disciples of Christ seek to promote undenominational and constructive Christianity.

The relationship it sustains to the Disciples is intimate and organic, though not official. The Society is not a private institution. It has no capital stock. No individuals profit by its earnings. The churches and Sunday-schools own and directly operate it. It is their contribution to the advocacy and practice of the ideals of Christian unity and religious education.

The charter under which the Society exists determines that whatever profits are earned shall be applied to agencies which foster the cause of religious education, although it is clearly conceived that its main task is not to make profits but to produce literature for building up character and for advancing the cause of religion.

The Disciples Publication Society regards itself as a thoroughly undenominational institution. It is organized and constituted by individuals and churches who interpret the Disciples' religious reformation as ideally an unsectarian and unecclesiastical fraternity, whose common tie and original impuse are fundamentally the desire to practice Christian unity with all Christians.

The Society therefore claims fellowship with all who belong to the living Church of Christ, and desires to co-operate with the Christian people of all communions as well as with the congregations of Disciples, and to serve all.

In publishing literature for religious education the Society believes a body of such literature prepared by the co-operative effort of many communions reaches a much higher level of catholicity and truth than can be attained by writers limited by the point of view of a single communion.

* * *

The Sunday-school literature (The Bethany System) published by this house, has been prepared through the Society's association with the writers, editors and official publishing houses of the Methodist, Presbyterian, Congregational and other communions. In its mechanical and artistic quality, its low selling-price, its pedagogical adequacy, and, still more, in its happy solution of doctrinal differences it is a striking illustration of the possibilities of the new day of unity into which the church is now being ushered.

* * *

The Christian Century, the chief publication of the Society, desires nothing so much as to be the worthy organ of the Disciples' movement. It has no ambition at all to be regarded as an organ of the Disciples' denomination. It is a free interpreter of the wider fellowship in religious faith and service which it believes every church of Disciples should embody. It strives to interpret all communions, as well as the Disciples, in such terms and with such sympathetic insight as may reveal to all their essential unity in spite of denominational isolation. Unlike the typical denominational paper, The Christian Century, though published by the Disciples, is not published for the Disciples alone. It is published for the Christian world. It desires definitely to occupy a catholic point of view and it seeks readers in all communions.

Our Success Depends Upon You!

The Christian Century and the Disciples Publication Society belong to the Disciples of Christ, not to private individuals. With the steady enlargement of the volume of its business the Society will ultimately be on a self-supporting basis and its earnings will go to the cause of Christian education and missions. At present it depends for its existence upon gifts offered by friends who believe in the work it is doing and wish to see its ideals prevail among the Disciples and the larger Christian world.

You are one of the friends of this great work.

Our success depends upon you!

The list of our supporters has been steadily growing. A few generous men and women have shown especial devotion by making large gifts. Every layman and minister who cherishes hopes for the success of such an enterprise will wish to make a gift to its support.

In addition to your own gift, you know of others in your congregation who, if the matter were brought forcefully to their attention, will find pleasure in making a gift. We depend upon you to secure their support.

The usefulness of the Christian Century and the Disciples Publication Society can be extended immeasurably by the prompt assistance of our generous friends.

We depend upon you to stand behind us! And we need your support now!

Do not let our call pass unheeded but fill out this blank and mail to us at once.

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY
CHARLES CLAYTON MORRISON, EDITOR HERBERT L. WILLETT, CONTRIBUTING EDITOR

A Great Citizen

TWO years ago at the Christmas season a company of Chicago people journeying westward around the world arrived at Rangoon, Burmah. The first important information that met them was to the effect that Professor Charles Richmond Henderson, of the University of Chicago, was then in that city delivering a series of lectures upon the Haskell Foundation.

They were fortunate in being able to hear the last of these lectures, delivered on the very day of their arrival. A great hall in one of the municipal buildings was completely filled by the most influential people in Rangoon. A distinguished native jurist presided. On the platform sat thirty or forty men representing the official and educational life of the greatest city in Burmah. Prof. Henderson was already speaking when the visitors arrived. He stopped at once and insisted on their coming to the platform. He then proceeded with his lecture, discussing some of the social activities of Christianity in western lands.

He held the audience in complete and absorbed attention during the hour and a half of his lecture. He pointed out the fundamental relation between the great works of public uplift and private philanthropy which were spreading through the nations of the West, and the Gospel of Jesus Christ which is now winning its way in the hearts of the peoples of the Orient. It was a noble appeal for the consideration of Christianity, not as a creed or ritual, but as a redemptive force in society.

At the close of the address one after another of the distinguished men present arose to move or second the vote of thanks which was unanimously passed, and to express their gratitude to the speaker for the message he had brought. None of those who spoke were Christians, though there were many Christians present. The warm words of commendation were the more significant because they voiced the attitude of leaders of the Buddhist community toward the man who had been interpreting to them the Christian faith in terms of social regeneration.

At that time Professor Henderson was on his way eastward through the Orient, delivering that course of lectures which has since appeared in the volume "Social Programs of the West." That very afternoon he hurried away toward China. The Chicago visitors, going in the opposite direction, came upon the evidences of the great work he had already accomplished in India. Men of all ranks and circles said that his visit was the most notable made in years, from the educational point of view. and the evidence of this is found in the fact that his book is now widely circulating through the Orient, and former works of his are being put into the vernacular of the Far East.

The death of this great teacher and citizen is a world loss. He was easily the first citizen of Chicago. He united in himself the highest values of university scholarship and public activity. He was a speaker of unusual power, and his personality was winsome and convincing. The University has lost many eminent scholars from its ranks during its quarter century of existence, but since the day its first President, William Rainey Harper, gave up his life at his post of duty, no death has brought a profounder sense of loss than that of Charles Richmond Henderson.

It was as a minister of the Gospel that Professor Henderson began his work. He was a graduate of the old University of Chicago, and the earlier years of his ministerial life were passed in Baptist churches in Terre Haute and Detroit. When the University was re-established under President Harper's leadership, he was called at once to the Chair of Christian Sociology, and was also chosen University Chaplain.

Dr. Henderson's anxiety to make himself the master of his subject showed itself at once. He set himself to the acquisition of French and German as indispensable instruments of his discipline. As soon as he could arrange an extended leave of absence, he went to Leipsig and pursued special work in his department, taking the degree of Doctor of Philosophy, an unusual and difficult thing for one of mature years and unfamiliar with colloquial German. Since that time Dr. Henderson has been indefatigable in the study of the vast literature of his subject, and has in the course of the years obtained a working knowledge of several other European languages. During the last year he was accustomed to devote odd hours to the study of Russian for this same purpose.

To his class room work he brought an astonishing fund of information and an enthusiasm which became contagious. He was never satisfied with the academic approach to the problems of sociology, but insisted that the only way in which his students could gain a real knowledge of the subject was through practical effort in social uplift. For this purpose he set them tasks of information and assistance in connection with the many charities and correctional agencies of Chicago. His students were frequent visitors at the police stations, the municipal courts, the city and county prisons, the houses of refuge, the juvenile court, the social settlements, and the institutional churches. Few young men or women passed through any of Dr. Henderson's courses without obtaining a first-hand knowledge of the redemptive work which this great town is undertaking with such prodigal effort and such wise direction of energy.

Thus drawn increasingly into social service, Dr. Henderson's large knowledge of similar organized effort in Europe and this country made him an indispensable counselor and leader in almost every effort at social reform. He was president of the Congress of Corrections and Charities. He was a prominent official in the National Prison Reform Association. He was a wise and helpful promoter of industrial insurance. He was the president of the United Bureau of Charities, an organization of immense importance in caring for the unresourceful in this city. He was a member of the Chicago Vice Commission, and as the last of his great public labors, he was appointed chairman of a Commission to investigate the distressing problem of unemployment, and report measures of relief. It is now believed that the excessive labor and anxiety resulting from this burden brought him to his death.

It is sometimes a matter of wonder that those who devote their lives to social reform are not crushed with the burden of sympathy and discouragement under which they are called to bend. It has been said more than once that the faces of our most prominent social workers bear the marks of their years of battle with organized greed and with public indifference. There were times when Professor Henderson gave evident proofs of the struggle he was waging in behalf of better laws and improved social conditions.

He met with frequent defeats and constant opposition at the hands of men who were willing to make profit out of the spoiling of the poor and the degradation of the exploited. He often spoke in Chapel when it was evident that the burning words he employed were lighted in the fierce fire of some contest in committee or council, in which he had been worsted. It is an open secret that some of his most cherished plans, the result of years of thought and labor, went down to defeat. Yet he never lost his optimism. He was most judicial in his mental attitude, and had fewer prejudices than are characteristic of most men who throw themselves with such ardor into great causes.

His face was an inspiration to those who met him in the day's work. His voice was deep, musical and inspiring. His faith in God and man was a rebuke to every form of pessimism and disbelief. To the religious and moral life of the students his counsels were a benediction. With the exactness of critical and scientific inquiry he applied the great truths of Christianity to the minds of wavering or cynical youth, and led them, half ashamed of their raw and fragmentary ideas, up to firmer ground in the light of Christian truth. And there was not one of his colleagues in any of the faculties of the University who did not feel the refreshing influence of Professor Henderson's deep and abiding trust in the moral order of the world and the basic truths of the Christian religion.

A great Christian scholar and citizen has passed into the larger life. In what nobler activities his great powers are now employed we cannot know. But he has made it easier for all of us to believe in God, to trust the leadership of Jesus Christ, and to affirm with confidence the redemptive potencies of our holy faith.

E. L. Powell: Man and Minister

An Appreciation of Louisville's Most Dynamic Citizen.

BY DENNY B. GOODE.

THE intensest man and at the same time the humanest preacher I know is the Rev. Dr. E. L. Powell, pastor of the First Christian church of Louisville. Nor is identification complete without extended reference to him as an integral and exceedingly unusual unit in the citizenry of a great city. Indeed, it is rather as man and citizen than as preacher that Edward Lindsay Powell is pre-eminent.

In any other walk of life than the ministry, Dr. Powell would have been marked out long ago for public preferment. Only the prejudice that exists (and very properly exists, if one who is entrusted with the preparation of this article may be permitted the expression of editorial opinion), only the widespread prejudice against ministers of the gospel serving in public office has prevented Dr. Powell from being mayor of Louisville, not once but many times; from being governor of Kentucky and perhaps United States senator.

"PAULINE EARNESTNESS" A CHARACTERISTIC.

I am invariably reminded of the Apostle Paul when I converse with Dr. Powell, or hear him speak. His predominant trait of character is his Pauline earnestness, not alone in the pulpit, but an earnestness of equal intensity at the banquet table, ball game, picnic, public reception, memorial service, pleasure, worship, play or work. I would not say that he stands head and shoulders above his fellows in intellect or scholarship or in everyday practicability, although even these qualities of his might make other men notable. He has forged to the very top of the citizenhood of Louisville by the sheer power of his personality, a personality that can be sifted down and analyzed in the simple phrase, "Pauline intensity." I hesitate whether to classify it as intense earnestness or earnest intensity, but I do not hesitate to put both adjective and noun in the superlative degree. He is the master, or slave as you may look upon it, of boundless energy and of unbounded enthusiasm, else he could not be so earnestly intense. From these qualities emanate and around them rotate his other virtues—virtues which, imperative though they be in a Christian pastor, seem of only secondary importance in the mental and moral fibre of Dr. Powell.

DR. POWELL AND THE NEWSPAPERS.

For the past twenty years the women of Dr. Powell's church have been the hostesses at an annual banquet for the men of the church and a few outside friends, the purpose of which is realized in the promotion of innocent recreation and genuine good-fellowship and fraternity. It brings together representatives from the social, financial, educational and professional circles of the city. These men's banquets have been the most democratic institutions in Louisville. They have come to be of city-wide importance and while the men of the congregation are invariably invited the outside friends rotate so that in twenty years a thousand or two outsiders have at various times sat at this annual banquet. The addresses delivered at that banquet have always been published in full in the Courier-Journal and thus it has come to be known and talked about throughout the entire country.

Another institution maintained for ten or eleven years under Dr. Powell's ministry was the month-end Macauley Theater meeting of his congregation. The leading theater of Louisville was during all those years filled to its capacity at every meeting, the sermons being reported in full in one or both of the morning newspapers. When the First Christian church congregation moved to its magnificent new home, however, the meetings were discontinued in Macauley's Theater, but the institution was continued, and the last Sunday evening meeting in each month at the First Christian church has come to be a public meeting rather than a mere denominational event of worship and Dr. Powell's sermons at these meetings continue to be reported in the daily press.

PARTICIPATION IN CIVIC AFFAIRS.

Under Dr. Powell's ministry his church has been brought, through its pulpit, into the most intimate association and active participation in all the civic and educational affairs of the city. No public movement of consequence has taken place in Louisville in the past quarter of a century in which Dr. Powell has not been called upon to take a leading part. Shoulder to shoulder with a political leader whom he might denounce the following Sunday from his pulpit, he has worked to build a $75,000 citadel for the Salvation Army.

Mindful that Louisville is a border city, recruiting its citizenry from the North and South, his congregation, as might be expected, is pretty evenly divided politically and it has required the highest type of courage for him to jeopardize his standing within his own denomination, if not his very ministerial employment, by taking a most active and unequivocal attitude in political campaigns. When the criticism that heaps up against such a stand on his part becomes sufficient to be noticed, he has in all loving kindness submitted his resignation as pastor to the congregation and without a dissenting vote it has been rejected; nor have his deacons ever felt called upon to rebuke his political partisanship, knowing full well that it was instigated not from any personal feeling but from the deep conviction on his own part, whatever may have been their individual views, that he was right.

When the question of changing the government of the public schools arose a few years ago, Dr. Powell threw his whole heart and soul into the fight to divorce the schools from politics, and with the co-operation of other men of equal earnestness and of greater power, their endeavor was crowned with success, and today the Louisville public schools are regarded as among the very best in the country.

REMARKABLE PERSONAL POPULARITY.

One of the most remarkable tributes paid to his personal popularity was a testimonial banquet given in his honor some ten or fifteen years ago. Five hundred of the leading men in every walk of life in Louisville—Protestants, Catholics and Jews, men of every political party, wage earners and millionaries—sat at the banquet table.

Dr. Powell has been intimately identified with the civic interests of Louisville and with her commercial organizations. The Commercial Club annually confers upon some one citizen a certificate of life membership in recognition of his exceptional service in behalf of the city and upon one occasion this signal honor was paid to Dr. Powell.

During the past winter, not through any fault of their own, several thousand men of Louisville found themselves out of employment, and when conditions throughout the city as well as throughout the country were otherwise distressing, Dr. Powell in conjunction with other philanthropic men established a voluntary committee which collaborated with the city government and provided employment throughout the winter months for all who sought work. Dr. Powell became the head of the committee and unquestionably the distinct relief in this section was due to its activities. In fact, Louisville gained throughout the country such a widespread reputation for creating employment on its public works that idle men from a radius of hundreds of miles flocked here. Dr. Powell's committee had this situation to contend with in addition to the problem of employment within the city.

RELIGION AND LIFE.

Dr. Powell has been recently called upon to serve as chairman of a public commission appointed by the mayor to investigate the conditions, causes and extent of commercialized vice and its kindred sins throughout Louisville, and to make whatever recommendations seem desirable.

Dr. Powell is intimately associated with a current movement to erect in Louisville an auditorium commensurate with our needs and aspirations. His invariable effort has been throughout the long years of his pastorate in Louisville to emphasize the great truth that religion has to do with all of life and not some sectional part of life; that nothing that means social, business, educational or political improvement is to be considered alien to the activities of the church; that citizenship is a sacred responsibility and made all the more sacred when Christian men assume to discharge its duties under the principles of Jesus Christ.

Confession and Baptism

BY FRANK E. BOREN.

CONFESSION and baptism are in fact one thing. In modern practice we have separated what were originally united. In so doing we have lost much of the significance and impressiveness of what the New Testament calls baptism.

Let us imagine a marriage ceremony divided into three parts. Suppose that on a certain date the lovers meet, and, in the presence of witnesses, make oral confession of their faith in one another and pledge themselves to fidelity in the wedded life. Suppose that at a later date, in the presence of other witnesses, their oral confession is symbolized in the beautiful ring ceremony. Suppose that at a still later date, and in the presence of still other witnesses, the minister should pronounce them husband and wife. It would be a strangely chopped up marriage ceremony. Many of the witnesses would see only a section of the ceremony, and thus the beauty and impressiveness of it would be lost.

The foregoing illustrates precisely what we have done with baptism. On one date the oral confession. On another date, what we call baptism, but what is in fact only a fragment of baptism. On another date, the giving of the hand of fellowship. Originally these three were one. The word baptism, as used in the New Testament, includes all of these in its meaning. It was a comprehensive ritual. It was a solemn confession of faith in Christ, a dedication of the life to Him, and a joyful entrance into the fellowship of the church. In modern usage, confession has become a confession of theological belief rather than a confession of faith. Baptism has become a physical act, valuable it may be for what precedes it, but not thought of as in itself essentially a spiritual act. The hand of fellowship, with the divided state of Christendom, is nothing more than a welcome into the local church, or into the fellowship of a sect.

Confession, which in the early church was a part of the ritual of baptism, was not a statement of theological beliefs, but a confession of faith, the expression of a purpose, the pledging of one's self to the Christian ideal and to allegiance and loyalty to Jesus Christ. There was no theological test of fellowship whatever in the early church. The test of one's fitness for membership in the church was one's faith. It was not long until the appearance of teachings that were considered heretical and harmful to the faith gave rise to the formation of doctrinal statements to safeguard the faith. These were brief at first, but in time grew into the elaborate creeds of Christendom,—often called confessions of faith, but in reality statements of belief.

HOW CREEDS GREW.

Of course the purpose of these creeds was, at first, to conserve the spiritual values which sound doctrine contained. It was never supposed that correct beliefs had any value in themselves apart from their bearing upon life. There can be no doubt that error is harmful to faith, and should be combated with truth. But as theological combat waxed warm, many things which were not of fundamental importance and many things of a speculative nature, which even if true, had no perceptible value for life, came to be incorporated in the creeds. And the worst of it was, that many people living on a very low moral level, living selfishly and meanly, with no fine idealism in their lives, fancied that they were going to Heaven when they died because they had subscribed to the orthodox creed. Doctrine was thus effectually divorced from life, and degenerated into dogma. Ignorant adults and even young children gave a formal assent to these creeds, without the slightest conception of what they meant, or with the remotest suspicion that they had any bearing upon life, and thought that in so doing they were assuring their soul's salvation. Even so simple and beautiful a confession as that ascribed to Peter may be so used as to become a bare theological statement, and may be as formally made, and with as little discernment of spiritual values, as the elaborate creeds of the churches.

Frank E. Boren

WHERE CONFESSION HELPS.

The necessity of confession arises out of our social nature. We cannot live our complete lives, we cannot even know what it means to be a man, apart from actual relationships with our fellows. The very existence, therefore, of religion in the heart, leads inevitably to the formation of religious societies—the church. We can conceive of no way in which one can enter into the fellowship of the church without making known in some way his desire. This may be done in the most informal way; but in whatever way it is done, it is a confession of faith. The importance and value of it is such that it is worthy of being made in the most beautiful and impressive way possible. It is a most solemn and significant hour in one's life when he feels that he is becoming a "fellow-citizen with the saints, and of the household of God." That hour cannot be made too impressive to himself or to those into whose fellowship he is entering.

What has been said about confession is all the more pertinent when we remember that confession and baptism were not separate things in the early church. Baptism was a symbolical and ritualistic confession. The oral confession was a part of the ritual of baptism.

WHAT IS BAPTISM?

Baptism is neither immersion, nor sprinkling, nor pouring. It is the entire ritual of confession, dedication, and entrance into the fellowship of the church. The Greek word, as used in the New Testament, means all of this. The word "baptizo" meant originally in classic Greek, to dip. But words have a history. They are subject to the laws of evolution. This word came to mean bathe, cleanse—the effects of dipping—and perhaps in many cases, bathe, cleanse, without close regard to the manner of cleansing. When the Hebrews, two or three centuries before Christ, came to speak the Greek language, this word became a substitute for their words having similar meanings. But the Hebrew words had acquired a ritualistic significance which now came to be a part of the meaning of the Greek word. Thus in time the idea of any particular physical act came to be almost a negligible part of the meaning of the word. It was not the physical act that was stressed, but the entire ritualistic significance. It was in this larger sense, with far richer spiritual significance, that the word was used in the New Testament.

Baptism is essentially a spiritual act, and therefore has an appropriate place in the spiritual welfare of men. When Peter said, "Repent ye, and be baptized—unto the remission of sins," he would have been utterly amazed if some one had said to him, "Do you really mean to tell us that we must be immersed in water in order to be saved?" He was thinking of baptism in its larger aspects. Such a question about the physical act would not have been thought of in that day, and would have had no pertinency whatsoever. But when we think of salvation in terms of life and character, and think of baptism as a spiritual act, we see the naturalness of the place assigned to baptism in the New Testament.

THE "ONE BAPTISM."

Much of the value of baptism is lost today because of the divided state of the church. Originally it was a putting on of Christ, and at the same time an entrance into the Church. But today when we press the question of church membership, some one is apt to ask, "What church?" A divided Church means a cheapened baptism. We may answer the above question by saying, "The Church universal, invisible, spiritual." This is a fine conception, but means little of practical value to the average man. We need actual, concrete fellowship with a visible Church, in order that the life may have spiritual culture and comradeship, and be made efficient in service.

We have yet to learn what Paul meant by the "one baptism." He may have had in mind the democracy of our faith. There was the same Lord, and the same spiritual privileges for master and slave, for Jew and Greek, for male and female, and therefore the "one baptism" for all. He may have had in mind also the tendencies toward division. As long as some were giving allegiance to Apollos, some to Peter, and some to Paul, there was effectually a divided baptism. Where there was only one body, and one Lord, there could be only one baptism. With the church split into two hundred sects today, we have effectually some two hundred baptisms. This is why baptism is so cheap to the average man. Some day the lost unity of the church will be restored, and we shall have the "one baptism."

A Socialist Studies Henry Ford

BY ALLAN L. BENSON.

If there is any place on the face of the earth where autocracy and paternalism permeate the atmosphere, it is the Ford automobile factory, in Detroit. A socialist visiting this famous institution would be expected therefore to carry with him an extremely critical point of view. It is somewhat surprising to learn the impression made by the Ford plant upon Mr. Allan L. Benson, author of "The Truth About Socialism." Here is Mr. Benson's verdict, after his investigation of the Ford ideas, the latest of which is to rebate to buyers of Ford cars, pro rata, eighteen millions of dollars, which amount is to be taken from the company's profits: "Let others decry him. I will not. He is doing more for the salvation of the working class than any Socialist. I do not care what his theories are. I care everything for his facts. And he has them!" Mr. Benson tells his story for Pearson's Magazine.

I HAPPENED to be passing the cashier's office, with Mr. John R. Lee, the Ford publicity man, when a line of men were ranged before the outside window waiting to be paid. Mr. Lee said: "Come in here—I want to show you something"—and rapped on the door leading to the cashier's office. We went inside, and there was a rack filled with pay-envelopes, set on end. At the upper end of each envelope was the employe's number and the amount of money due him for two weeks' work. I was asked to look over the envelopes and see how much money was marked on each. There were perhaps a thousand envelopes in the case. I did not look at every one, of course, but I looked at a good many—perhaps a hundred. I did not find one that contained less than $60 for two weeks' work.

Most of them contained sums ranging around $65 and $75, and some contained more. Nobody can ever make me believe that Ford is dishonest in his contention that he is sharing his profits with most of his men. I know better. I know he is doing what he says he is doing.

After I had looked at the envelopes, I stood for several minutes watching the men who were lined up before the window. They were just ordinary workingmen. Anywhere except in the Ford plant they would have been regarded as inferior creatures unable to earn more than $2 or $3 a day. They were precisely such men as could be gathered up with a net on the street-corners of any large city containing a large foreign population. Not one of them, probably, understood the tariff, the currency question, or knew who caused the war in Europe. But each of them knew enough to do his part in increasing the production of the Ford plant, in 1914, to the extent of 82,988 cars.

"EFFICIENCY" IN THE FORD FACTORY.

An outside manufacturer was given a contract to make 150,000—gasoline tanks, if I remember correctly. The price, at any rate, was to be $1.50 each. After the contract had been made, he said to Mr. Ford: "The price is so low that I can not make anything on it to speak of. But the contract will help pay my overhead charges during this dull time, and, if I should be lucky, I might make a profit of 4 or 5 per cent."

Mr. Ford replied: "If you do not make a good profit on this contract, it is your fault. If you can not make these tanks for 75 cents apiece, something is the matter with your methods."

The manufacturer declared that he could not come within gunshot of 75 cents. Mr. Ford told him that his plant was then not run on correct principles. "Let me send some experts to your factory," said Mr. Ford, "to report to me on conditions. I will study their report and will tell you how to change your methods and reduce your cost."

The manufacturer consented and the experts investigated the plant. As the result of their report, Mr. Ford suggested changes in manufacturing methods that would involve an expenditure of $15,000. The manufacturer made the changes, filled his contract for 150,000 tanks, and came around smiling. He said to Mr. Ford: "You said I should be able to make the tanks for 75 cents apiece. You were a little high. After I made the changes you suggested, I made them for 73 cents each. Not only that, but I have reduced the cost on all the other things I make in my factory."

NEW SHOP METHODS.

Old-fashioned shop-practise requires that in assembling the underbodies of automobiles, the men travel from bench to bench to do their work. Mr. Ford brings their work to them, while the men stand still. The work-bench is a moving platform as wide as an automobile, about knee-high, and a block long. The moving platform, it should be explained, is an endless belt. At the head of this platform is a pile of metal bars. Two of these bars are placed on the moving platform (which moves, by the way, perhaps two feet a minute) and the assembling of the automobile is begun. Joints are put together, a few screws are turned by two men, one at each side of the platform, and by the time the last screw is turned, the bars have moved along to two other men, who add something else.

When the time comes to put in the engine the platform has moved along to a point where an engine is suspended above the platform on a tackle-block. A few pulls at the chains of the tackle-block drop the engine into place. The drive-shaft is coupled to the engine-shaft and fastened with set-screws, and the machine has moved along to the next two men. A gasoline-tank containing a gallon of gasoline is dropped into place and fastened where it belongs.

Twenty-eight minutes from the time the assembling of the automobile began, it has reached the end of the platform and a workman jumps aboard and drives it, under its own power, down an inclined plane, and off into the next shop. Two automobiles are assembled every minute of a sixteen-hour day, the men working in eight-hour shifts.

EVERY MAN "ON THE JOB."

I never before saw such a body of men. As I looked into their faces, I caught a glimpse of the spirit in which men will approach their tasks when the capitalist profit-taker is removed from the back of labor and labor receives all it produces. No one went about his task listlessly, as if he were waiting for the whistle to blow. No one looked worried. No one looked as if he were discontented. No one looked as if he were saying to himself: "Oh, I drudge here for a bare living, while Ford has millions." Every one looked as if he were well nourished and contented in his mind. Every one was alert and "on the job." . . .

Mr. Ford has demonstrated that in seeking to buy labor as cheaply as you can, you defeat your own purpose. Instead of decreasing the cost of production, you increase it. Adversity may compel your employes to accept your low wages, but nothing can make them like low wages. Men know when they are being robbed. Men who know they are being robbed do not go about their tasks enthusiastically. They see you trying to get as much as you can for your money, so they try to give as little labor as they can give for their wage. Can you blame them? Do you expect them to be open-handed when you are tight-fisted?

HOW THE FORD PLAN AFFECTS THE WORKMAN.

Mr. Ford found a man (a foreigner) who, according to the custom of his native land, housed twenty roomers in his cottage. The roomers slept in two shifts, and the wife had nothing to do between midnight and 4 o'clock of each morning—at all other times she was working like a dog. When the Ford profit-sharing plan was put into effect, the foreigner was given a wage sufficient to enable him to support his family without keeping lodgers, but the foreigner continued to keep them. Ford, through his investigating department, found it out and called the man on the carpet. "I am paying you enough to live on decently," he said. "Now, you get rid of your lodgers and give your wife a chance to have more rest, or I will cut off your share of the profits."

Autocratic? Reeking with it. Right in principle? Absolutely not. Right in practice? Ask the wife.

THE WARRIOR'S PRAYER.

Long since, in sore distress, I heard one pray,
"Lord, who prevailest, with resistless might,
Ever from war and strife keep me away,
My battles fight!"
I know not if I play the Pharisee,
And if my brother after all be right;
But mine shall be the warrior's plea to thee—
Strength for the fight.
I do not ask that thou shalt front the fray,
And drive the warring foeman from my sight;
I only ask, O Lord, by night, by day,
Strength for the fight!
When foes upon me press, let me not quail,
Nor think to turn me into coward flight,
I only ask, to make my arms prevail,
Strength for the fight!

—Paul Lawrence Dunbar.

President Wilson on the War's End

In a speech before the Maryland annual conference of the Methodist Protestant church, in session at Washington, D. C., last week, President Wilson said it was his belief that no man was wise enough to pronounce judgment on the European war at this time. "But," he added, "we can all hold our spirits in readiness to accept the truth when it is revealed to us in the outcome of this titanic struggle." The president reminded the delegates that in transacting the business of their church they were like the men in charge of the nation's government, in reality, handling "the phases of the day." The heart of the recent executive pronouncement follows:

YOU are handling the affairs of the church as they stand under the treatment of the men of your generation. Back of them lie the eternal principles which you are trying to exemplify in the life of the work; back of us here in the government lie the eternal principles of justice and righteousness, which, in my conviction, at any rate, we do not derive from ourselves, but from the same source from which a great church derives its inspiration and authority. . . .

A GLEAM OF HOPE.

It seemed to me that it was worth saying something like this: These are days of very great perplexity, when a great cloud of trouble hangs and broods over the greater part of the world.

It seems as if great blind material forces had been released, which had for long been held in leash and restraint. Yet, and underneath it, you can see the strong impulses of great ideals.

It would be impossible, ladies and gentlemen, for men to go through what men are going through on the battlefields of Europe and struggle through the present dark night of their terrible struggle if it were not that they saw or thought they saw the breaking of light where the morning should come up, and believed that they were standing each on his side of the contest for some eternal principle.

THE WORLD TO SIT IN JUDGMENT.

Then all about them, all about us, there sits the silent, waiting tribunal which is going to utter ultimate judgment upon this struggle, the great tribunal of the opinion of the world; and I fancy I see—I hope that I see, I pray that it may be that I do truly see—great spiritual forces lying waiting for the outcome of this thing to assert themselves, and asserting themselves even now, to enlighten our judgment and steady our spirits.

No man is wise enough to pronounce judgment, but we can all hold our spirits in readiness to accept the truth when it dawns on us and is revealed to us in the outcome of this titanic struggle.

You will see that it is only in such general terms that one can speak in the midst of a confused world, because, as I have already said, no man has the key to this confusion. No man can see the outcome, but every man can keep his own spirit, prepared to contribute to the net result when the outcome displays itself.

That is the reason I said to a body similar to this only a few nights ago that I welcomed the atmosphere which these solemn assessments of the human spirit bring to Washington.

AT THE CENTER OF THINGS.

For this is the place of assessment. In one sense, Washington is not even a part of the United States. It is where everybody else comes sooner or later and speaks his mind about the United States and about many outlying parts of the world.

Mr. Bryan and I are constantly auditors to what I dare say is a large part of the opinion of the world; to judge by the time it takes to express it, I think a very large part, and to judge by the variety and contrariety of it, I dare say it is a fair cross section of what men are thinking about.

A PRAYER IN TIME OF WAR.
By Alfred Noyes.

Thou, whose deep ways are in the sea,
Whose footsteps are not known,
Tonight a world that turned from Thee
Is waiting—at Thy Throne.

The towering Babels that we raised
Where scoffing sophists brawl,
The little Antichrists we praised—
The night is on them all.

The fool hath said . . . The fool hath said. . .
And we, who deemed him wise,
We who believed that Thou wast dead,
How should we seek Thine eyes?

How should we seek to Thee for power
Who scorned Thee yesterday?
How should we kneel, in this dread hour?
Lord, teach us how to pray!

Grant us the single heart, once more,
That mocks no sacred thing,
The Sword of Truth our fathers wore
When Thou wast Lord and King.

Let darkness unto darkness tell
Our deep, unspoken prayer,
For, while our souls in darkness dwell,
We know that Thou art there.

—London Daily Mail.

It is not only our duty to be right and to be just and to be pure, but it is our duty to be so in such a way that we shall seem lovely to men. There is no apology needed for the rose—it is its own apology; the grapes in a vineyard make themselves manifest to every passer-by; and every man, to be a Christian after Christ's method, should so live that when persons look upon him they shall say: "It is lovely! it is beautiful!"—H. W. Beecher.

WHERE IS THE FRONTIER?

HOME missions has ever lived upon the frontier. The home missionary has followed the settler as state after state has been redeemed from the wilderness, and made to blossom with the crops that are useful to man. At last even the "American desert" has been settled. The home missionary leaders, in a trip through the west a few years ago, were made to realize that but few communities of size in America are without a church. Yet half the population is outside the church. Where then is the frontier? Has home missions any longer a task?

The frontier is to be found in the central sections of the great cities. Here a million immigrants, and more, are dumped every year, to live in the city's smoke and grime, and next door to the red light and gambling hell. In this awful environment the newcomer loses his hold upon spiritual things, surrounded as he is by vanity and licentiousness and materiality on every hand.

The frontier is to be found in new cities sprung up as Gary did, brought into being by the magic wand of the capitalist. There are many such new cities organized around great industries. Here heroic efforts may accomplish more in five years than work in an old established city might bring to pass in many decades.

The frontier may sometimes be found in the rural sections of the older states. From these districts, the American owner has gone to town and left his land in the hands of the immigrant farmer. This man lives with a lease that is good for only one year in most cases. He feels himself a transient. The old family church of the community is closed for want of worshipers, while the tenant farmer loses his soul in the struggle with high rents and low profits.

The frontier, then, is to be found in the vanguard of the social movements of the country. When the social movement is toward California gold mines, the frontier is to be found there. When the social movement results in the building up of cities, until they comprise now nearly half of our total population, the frontier is there. There is still a "frontier" where we need our home missionary propaganda.

TEMPERAMENT IN RELIGION.

MANY of the differences in the churches are temperamental far more than they are theological. The conservative is the man who praises the old and idealizes it. In some communions, he looks back to the middle ages and glorifies them as the era of faith and of chivalry. The man of the radical temperament looks back with abhorrence upon this same period and dubs it "The Dark Ages."

The conservative sometimes fastens upon a very little thing as the symbol of his hold upon the past and its values. In a church where the individual communion cups were being introduced in a city in western Illinois, a deacon would take the communion only from the old cup which he was accustomed to use. He was oblivious to the humor of the fact that this cup had become at last his "individual" communion cup.

The radical, also, fastens upon the trifling in many cases, as the symbol of his protest. If in a Presbyterian church the Apostles' Creed is recited, he must needs have a change of phrasing when he comes to the words, "he descended into hell," even though everybody in the congregation has long since invested these words with the modern meaning. This radical is watching his pastor's use of old phrases, and is wary lest they be misunderstood to convey discarded religious ideas. For him the world that is worth while was born only yesterday, and history is but a rubbish heap.

These phenomena are not confined to the church. The same political radical that clamored a few years ago for the referendum and a ballot the size of a blanket, is now shouting for "the short ballot," the latest panacea of political reform. There is the conservative politician that harks back continually to issues and measures that might well have been regarded as settled in the campaign of twenty years ago.

These are the centripetal and centrifugal forces of society. Neither can live without the other. In England, Tories and Whigs have long since learned to regard each other as at least "necessary" evils. The next stage in civilization will be an effort at sympathetic understanding between these two groups in society. It will be a happy day when the whole church of God shall pray together as did the old elder and the young minister in "Beside the Bonnie Briar Bush." In that day, the conservative shall pray to be led into all truth, and the radical shall ask humbly that he may be found true to the faith of the fathers.

EDUCATIONAL PROGRESS.

IT HAS taken many years to create the moderate measure of educational conscience now possessed by the Disciples of Christ.

It is due to this slow development of sensitiveness to educational needs that our colleges and other instructional foundations have been so long in attaining their present degree of competence, and are still far from adequate equipment.

The Men and Millions Movement has done much to put our educational cause into its true place in the co-operative plans of the Disciples. More than ever before the colleges have received consideration from men and women able to afford the needed support.

In another direction as well, our educational interests have advanced markedly of late. The organization of the Board of Education of the Disciples was long delayed, but has at last been followed by such co-operation of the heads of our educational institutions composing its membership, as to give promise of an efficient educational program in the work of the churches for the future.

Educaton is now listed among the other causes receiving consideration and support through the budget plan. This means that in an increasing degree education will become a recognized interest of our churches, and not be left to the isolated campaigns of the different schools, and the spasmodic contributions of individual givers.

It is probable that within a very short time an educational secretary will be secured by the Board of Education. This man will be chosen only after careful deliberation. He ought to represent, and doubtless will, a high order of educational efficiency, and will be the means of interpreting to colleges and churches alike the place which education must have in religion as well as that which religion should have in education.

In the future the educational program at our national conventions ought to be one of the most interesting and impressive of all the sessions.

THE CITY BEAUTIFUL.

SOME years ago the mayor of Chicago appointed a Commission to study the city and report upon a plan for its progressive beautification.

That Commission has been at work consistently since that time, and has in recent years been recognized and supported by the Association of Commerce.

Under its direction plans have been drawn for such improvements as will eventually make Chicago one of the most beautiful cities in the world, if its growth can be shaped and its improvements directed on the lines the Commission has drawn.

It has long been recognized that what is called the "loop section," included within the down town quadrilateral of the elevated railroad, is far too small to inclose, as was once planned, the business portion of Chicago.

In those days the two branches of the river and their conjoined outlet to the lake, forming the well known "Y" of the Chicago coat of arms, determined the limits of the different sections and effectually separated them.

It is now understood that the Chicago river is to be no longer a barrier, but for the most part a useful factor in the extension of the city and its beautification.

The great Municipal Center, including a spacious park surrounded by the necessary buildings, will occupy space far to the west of the river, nearer the actual center than any portion of the present "loop" can be. Here will be placed the Federal building, the county and city offices, the courts and other municipal structures.

Grant Park, now rapidly being pushed out into Lake Michigan, will be the site of the new Field Columbian Museum, the great Municipal Stadium and a vast Recreation Pier. Michigan Boulevard, already for many blocks one of the most impressive avenues in the world, is to be greatly extended, and its span across the river to the north will be a triumph of architectural skill and beauty.

But most of all, the Lake Front, extending from Lincoln Park to Jackson Park, a total of some twelve miles, and affording a water front unparalleled by any other city situation in the world, is to be made a conspicuous feature of the new plan, with parkways, drives and lagoons, such as will bring out in full proportion the magnificent natural advantage of Chicago's location.

Progressively these features of the new Chicago are being projected. The completion of the plan will cover many years, but its inception is already apparent.

What is being projected on a gigantic scale for this city may be undertaken by any smaller municipality that is sensitive to its natural advantages and wishes to realize for itself in some measure the ideals of a "City Beautiful."

THE NEW BARBARISMS OF WAR.

WAR has always been a brutal and barbarous adventure. At the best it is the sacrificial devotion of a people to a holy cause. At the worst it is the satisfaction of the instincts of the brute and the jungle.

And even in those wars in which nations have attempted to vindicate high moral principles there has been far too much of the barbarism of beasts rather than the high courtesy of knightly men in high contest.

No conflict has ever revealed more of the inner hideousness of war than the present. It has been said for a generation that the increasing effectiveness and murderous precision of the modern instruments of war tended to make all future contests of this character impossible.

It is now evident that all that was said regarding the terrible destructiveness of modern military enginery is true. Yet in spite of that fact the present war has been prosecuted with painstaking employment of every deadly weapon, and at enormous expense of life.

In former centuries few men were employed in battles, and those were well protected by armor, with the result that the loss of life was comparatively small. The historian now knows also that the reports of enormous losses by the combatants on either side were hugely exaggerated. But there seems no possibility of exaggeration in the present struggle.

The descriptions, both written and pictured, that have come from the battlefields in Flanders leave nothing of horror to the imagination. The destruction of a squadron of cavalry by the bursting of a giant mortar, leaving the fragments of horses, men, clothing and arms scattered in a chaos of frightful wreckage, is a new scene in history.

But far worse are those plunges back from the supposed civilization of the twentieth century to the barbarism of prehistoric times witnessed in the wanton destruction of cities, the ruthless mutilation of works of art, the violation of women, and the dismemberment of children now known to be not the envenomed accusations of partisans, but the cold-blooded and horrifying facts of actual experience.

To these bald and brutal relapses into jungle ferocity, and worse than jungle vileness, there is now added the chapter of submarine attack upon neutral and helpless ships. Many things may be condemned in the heat and madness of war, but such violation of all laws, human and divine, leaves a red scar on the record of any nation that sinks to such a level of barbarism.

The muse of history will have much to ponder over when writing the story of this conflict.

THE HOME MISSIONS COUNCIL.

IN DAYS gone by, there has been much criticism of home missionary work in America. The scandal of overchurched villages with rival churches supported by home missionary bodies gave rise to a justifiable protest on the part of the business men of the church.

The organization of the Home Missions Council, bringing into conference the leading home mission agencies of America, did not mean the immediate elimination of this competition, but it did mean the beginning of a better day. It is easier to organize a church than to kill it, and the competitive churches must be allowed to die the less merciful way of slow exhaustion in many cases. The great missionary leaders have seen the wisdom, however, of a new method in taking America for Christ.

The first advantage of the Home Missions Council has been that the great leaders of home missions now know each other. It is impossible to treat the man that you know with quite the same coldness and abstraction as the man whose personality is represented simply by a name in a report. The home missions leaders in their fellowship have come to be friends and comrades in a great common cause.

The exchange of denominational experience is also a great gain in the work of home missions. Why should each denomination go to the expense of trying a new method, independently of what others have learned in the same experiment? Presbyterians are now sending young men of America to European countries to study the immigrant in his native habitat. Why should other denominations try this expensive method until the Presbyterians are ready to pronounce it a success? The interchange of experience reveals the fact that different denominations have achieved conspicuous success in varying tasks. All this experience is now made available for as much of American Protestantism as is willing to live and work in the spirit of cooperation.

The denominationalist in every communion may fear for his denominational autonomy. The denomination, even from a selfish point of view, has nothing to gain by repudiating experience. The Home Missions Council has limited no man's liberty, but it has shown how free men and free societies may profit by fraternal and Christian spirit.

The kingdom of heaven is not come when God's will is our law. It is come when God's will is our will. When God's will is our law, we are but a kind of noble slaves. When his will is our will, we are free children.—George Macdonald.

The Larger Christian World

A Department of Interdenominational Acquaintance.

University Students Won to Religion.

Dr. John R. Mott, Mr. Sherwood Eddy, C. D. Hurrey, and D. R. Porter recently assisted in holding a five-days' evangelistic campaign at the University of Michigan. The student audiences averaged five thousand a day. Five hundred men decided for Christ in the meetings, and the action taken by the university athletes indicates how the student body was touched. A series of resolutions were drawn up on such items of student conduct as betting at games, drunkenness among students and profanity. These Y. M. C. A. leaders are going through the educational institutions of the country with this propaganda.

A Remarkable Pastorate.

The Rev. Samuel J. Nicholls has been for fifty years the pastor of one church—the Second Presbyterian, of St. Louis, Mo.—and has recently celebrated the anniversary. He had one other pastorate before going to St. Louis, and served as a chaplain in the Civil War.

Hard Times for Missions.

Protestant missionary societies are just closing their books for the year, and all are confronted with the same situation—insufficient funds. Both home and foreign Baptist societies report about the same income as last year, but plans for advance will have to be given up. With them must probably go, in the case of the foreign work, a cut of $100,000 in appropriations for next year. The Congregational home work handles $650,000 a year in national and state societies. The leaders expect to fall $10,000 behind in national work, with no prospects of any advance in the work proposed. Presbyterians, home and foreign, among the largest boards in the world, began the year with deficits of $430,000 and fear they will close with $250,000 still unpaid. They also fear they will add more to it through falling off of receipts this year. On the whole, missionary financiers declare this to be the most trying time in their experience.

Rockefeller Foundation and Missions.

The Rockefeller Foundation has issued a statement through John D. Rockefeller, Jr., that the Foundation will co-operate with the missionary agencies in giving modern medical knowledge to the mission lands. The Foundation has established the China Medical Board, with offices in New York, and a resident director in China. The Foundation will also make grants of money to certain missionary societies to strengthen their medical work in foreign lands. The past achievements by the missionary societies have met with warm commendation by the Foundation.

Theological Students Increasing.

In nine years, the theological schools of the country have increased in number from 156 to 179, and the student enrollment from 7,411 to 10,965. During the same period the medical students of the country have decreased in number from 24,012 to 16,130. The decrease in the enrollment of dental students is less than that of theological students. The professions growing more rapidly than the ministry, in the number of students, are the law and veterinary practice. If the supply of ministers is utterly inadequate at present, the situation does not seem to be hopeless. One fact that dampens one's optimism is that the standards of many of the theological schools enumerated are very low.

Louis F. Post Defines a Christian.

A popular magazine offered cash prizes last summer for the best answers to the question, "What is a Christian?" These prizes have been awarded and the prize articles published in the magazine. Along with them is a statement by Louis F. Post, the well-known single-tax exponent. Here is Mr. Post's definition: "An actual Christian is one who in individual concerns sincerely tries to practice the Christian ideal, and in common affairs sincerely tries to convert to the Christian ideal the social organism of which he is a part."

Seminary Has Largest Class in History.

Garrett Biblical Institute, of Evanston, Ill., a prominent institution of the Methodist Episcopal church, has just graduated the largest class of prospective ministers in the history of the institution. There were thirty-eight taking the Bachelor of Divinity degree, and twenty-seven received the certificate.

Memorial Meeting to Dr. Henderson.

A meeting was held in Auditorium theater, Chicago, on April 11, to review the life and achievements of the late Dr. Charles Richmond Henderson of the University of Chicago. Miss Jane Addams reviewed the social work of Dr. Henderson. Dr. Shailer Mathews spoke of his religious life. President George Vincent spoke of his career as an educator, and Prof. Graham Taylor told of his civic interests.

Higher Education Encouraged.

A significant institution among Methodists is the Postgraduate Association which is to be found in many conferences. This is made up of preachers who have received a degree in advance of the A. B. The Postgraduate Association of Illinois and Central Illinois conferences will meet at Illinois Wesleyan university, Bloomington, soon, and Rev. Harry F. Ward, social service secretary, will make a number of addresses on social topics. The Book Concern of the denomination will receive critical examination at the hands of the men. The Postgraduate Club of Rock River Conference will meet in Chicago in a few days, and will spend considerable time discussing "The Radical Sects."

Baptist Congress to be Discontinued.

The Baptist Congress has voted to disband and the last secretary finds on hand a number of copies of the proceedings covering a period of years. These he is offering to give away to those interested. The Baptist Congress was long the arena for the expression of progressive opinion in the denomination.

Join Episcopal Fellowship.

The shifting of denominational fellowship of ministers is one of the phenomena of the times. This week the news favors the Protestant Episcopal church. Rev. Lewis Thomas Gwynn, formerly a Roman Catholic priest, was received into the priesthood of the Episcopal church by Bishop Edsall. It is interesting to note that he was given another ordination, though he had been previously ordained in the Roman church. This is interesting in view of the fact that the Episcopal ministry derives its "apostolic succession" from the Roman church. Rev. Philip Ayres Easely, a Methodist minister of Cold Springs, New York, was confirmed by Bishop Perry at Grace church, Providence, on March 18, and he has become a candidate for holy orders.

Eliminate Scramble for Moderatorship.

In days gone by the honor of being moderator of the Presbyterian church, the highest honor in the gift of that body, has sometimes led ministers to put themselves forward for this position, and to organize a political campaign with all the marks of any other political scramble. At the last two general assemblies of the church, there has been sufficient sentiment to reject the names of any men who had furthered their own candidacy, and to elect men who were not in any sense covetous of this honor. The Presbyterian press is still agitated over the question, but the dignity and sense of propriety which prevails in this great denomination insure that political maneuvers are forever past in the national legislative body of this denomination.

Chickens and Indian Missions!

One of the problems in India is the economic dependence of the people on the caste system for employment. Conversion often means the loss of a livelihood. A men's Bible class at Coatesville, Pa., has worked out a solution for the sweepers of India. They shipped a coop of prize poultry to an Indian village and these were given to the sweepers of that territory. Soon the improvement over the native chicken made the sweepers independent of their ancient occupation. The government in India has become interested, and eggs from this sweeper settlement will be carried to many parts of India this year. One of the inhibitions to conversion to Christianity has been removed in this section.

Baptists Work at State University.

Work in the state universities by the religious denominations assumes every year larger significance. The Baptists of Illinois are buying one of the best lots near the campus of the university at Champaign. Two years ago, Rev. Martin S. Bryant, of Colgate university, was selected to serve as student pastor. A church was organized which is now meeting in the Y. M. C. A. building, and a financial agent is in the field seeking to raise thirty thousand dollars for a building.

Baptist Secretaries Are Criticized.

This has been a hard year for missionary societies and the Baptists, in common with other denominations, have suffered from diminished income, and the consequent retrenchments. The situation has given rise to certain obscurantist criticism of the over-burdened officials, culminating in a demand that the secretaries economize by giving up the use of the Pullman service on the railroads! Dr. Batten, the social service secretary, has answered these critics in kindly words by raising the question whether the economies demanded by a few strident voices would really be economies if they resulted in lower efficiency in the workers.

Dr. Jowett Shows Ministers' Perils.

Dr. J. H. Jowett, of New York, believes that the ministers of America are being diverted from their proper tasks by a multitude of duties without significance. He says: "In the midst of our fussy, restless activities, in all the multitudinous trifles which, like a cloud of dust, threaten to choke our souls, the minister must fence off his quiet and secluded hours and suffer no interference or obtrusion. I am profoundly convinced that one of the greatest perils which beset the ministry of this country is a restless scattering of energies over an amazing multiplicity of interests, which leaves no margin of time or of strength for receptive and absorbing communion with God. We are tempted to be always on the run, and to measure our fruitfulness by our pace and by the ground we cover in the course of the week."

A Friend of the Boys.

Ernest K. Coulter is a specialist on work among the boys and he has come to be known as the Big Brother Man. He knows the ins and outs of the boy nature. Mr. Coulter quotes a definition given him by one of the boys, "A friend is a feller that knows all about yer and likes yer just the same!"

Church Taxation Bill Killed.

The Senate Taxation committee of New York recently gave a hearing to the bill which was proposed as a measure to tax all church properties in excess of a hundred thousand dollars in value. The committee did not favor the bill and it is said it will not be heard from any more this year.

Analyzing "Billy" Sunday's Results.

The ministers of Philadelphia are analyzing the results secured from the recent Billy Sunday campaign, which was conducted at an expense of $150,000. About half of the names handed in are already on the church books, and these people went forward on an indefinite invitation for "reconsecration." About two thousand are Roman Catholics who will remain with their communion for the most part. Two thousand are children, some of whom are old enough to become members of the church, but many are not. It is reported, however, that churches and Sunday-schools in Philadelphia are enjoying much larger audiences than formerly.

Preach to Deaf Mutes.

In a large city like Chicago, the deaf mutes make a considerable group. The Methodists have a service every Sunday afternoon in the First Methodist church building. The Episcopalians have organized a church for them, with Rev. G. F. Flick in charge. The communicant list has increased under his ministry from fifty-three to ninety-seven. A Lutheran building on the South Side has been purchased to house this work, and a fund is being raised to enlarge the enterprise and improve the property.

Archbishop Before Congregationalists.

Churchmen and non-conformists have had but little fellowship in England in days gone by, but an event of the past month is a token of a better day. Dr. Randall Davidson, archbishop of Canterbury, was in Maidstone conducting a confirmation service at the same time that the County Union of the Congregationalists was being held. He accepted an invitation to the meeting of the Union and made an address. The archbishop addressed the gathering as "brethren in the Lord Jesus Christ," and described it as "a happy fortune" that his visit to Maidstone should have synchronized with the Union meetings, and that he had heard that a word of greeting from himself to them would be welcome. This was indeed a time for mutual greetings and mutual encouragement, in the Name of the Lord, among men of goodwill. In the presence of the roar of elemental forces all smaller difficulties and lighter events seemed to disappear, and men felt themselves to be at one. The archbishop spoke of the special responsibility resting upon those who carried the gospel of Christ in these days, and again expressed his rejoicing at the opportunity to give the assembly a word of God-speed and goodwill.

The Largest Presbyterian Church.

Probably the largest Presbyterian church in the United States is the First Presbyterian church in Seattle. This church has a total membership of 5,334. Its report for the last church year showed 718 members received, $23,675 paid for benevolences and $39,777 for congregational expenses. It supports eight missions in Seattle and three missions in foreign lands.

Latin America Missionary Conference.

The Latin America Missionary Conference will be held at Panama in February, 1916. A second bulletin is already off the press with an address by the secretary, Rev. S. G. Inman. The bulletin makes somewhat more definite the plan of the conference and gives a good bibliography of mission work in South America. Copies of it may be secured from Mr. Inman at 156 Fifth avenue, New York.

Lectures on the Russian Church.

Since Russia and England are allies in the present war, there has been great interest in England concerning the Russian church. Books and lectures dealing with this subject have been very popular. This interest is spreading to this side of the water, and Russia, so long neglected, will be better understood. No national characteristic is more prominent than the essentially religious quality of Russia's life. Under the auspices of the Cambridge Theological School and the Harvard Divinity School, Dr. Aurelio Palmieri is giving six lectures at Harvard on the "Modern Russian Church." The first was given on March 10. The subjects are: 1. "The Government of the Russian Church: the Institution of the Holy Governing Synod." 2. "The Russian Church and Russian Autocracy: the Writings of Constantin Pobiedonotsef." 3. "Russian Monasticism." 4. "The Russian Episcopate." 5. "The Secular Clergy." 6. "The Attitude of the Orthodox Church Toward Proposals of Reunion."

R. J. Campbell Will Not Visit America.

Rev. Reginald J. Campbell, known in America for his "new theology," and as the brilliant preacher of the City Temple, London, had planned to visit this country this spring, but he announced recently that he had given up his trip. He has been troubled with insomnia and has been out of his pulpit again for a brief period. Not only the state of his health but the nature of his duties at present forbid his making the trip.

Bar the Bible from the Schools.

The Supreme Court of Louisiana has recently decided that it is not lawful for the Bible to be read in the public school, or for the Lord's Prayer to be repeated. Suit was brought by Roman Catholic and Jewish interests in the state and this peculiar alliance has been effective in bringing about the action noted.

A Conference on Church Unity.

On March 22, a conference on church unity was held at St. Paul's cathedral, Detroit, under the leadership of Dr. Newman Smythe, who is a member of the advisory council of the Commission on Faith and Order. This conference was attended by leading representatives of all the evangelical bodies of Detroit. Dr. Smythe reported on the attitude of the various leading denominations.

Methodist Editor Resigns.

Rev. George P. Eckman has presented his resignation as editor of the Christian Advocate, to the Book Committee of the Methodist Episcopal church. Calls came to him from several strong churches, and he has accepted the pastorate of Elm Park church, Scranton, Pa. This is one of the most influential churches in Methodism.

An Irish Preacher for Toronto.

The Cooke Presbyterian church of Toronto, where the well-known Dr. John McNeill ministered for many years, is a well-known church. Its members have recently called Dr. W. Patterson, pastor of May St. Presbyterian church of Belfast. The call to the pulpit was signed by the individual members of the church and among the signatures were those of five Chinese.

World Congress on Sunday Rest.

Among the religious gatherings in connection with the Panama-Pacific Exposition will be the "World Congress on Sunday Rest." This will be held from July 27 to August 1. Dr. Edward Thomson, of Evanston, Ill., is the secretary of the Sunday League of America and is the promoter of the World Congress.

Here and There

THE INTERDENOMINATIONAL MIND.

Just now this is what the Disciples need to cultivate. Nothing liberates a people from the thraldom of effete and worn out traditions, which the astute know so well how to elevate into "fundamentals," as a frequent survey of the religious world. Between those who boast that they never read denominational literature and those who boast that they read nothing else, we cast our lot with the former, though in practice we think it as foolish to neglect the one branch as the other. But if only one course were possible we would choose the interdenominational reading every time. The acquaintance with the general field modifies one's intensity of opinion for the doctrines with which he is most familiar. Not to know anything of one's own preferences indicates an inexcusable looseness of thinking. It is building on the sand in the hope of finding the security of the rock. Every man must build deeply first, but if he spend his life in such work his house will become top-heavy and fall. The thing that saves is to enlarge the foundations. The man who knows no fellowship but his own easily comes to believe that all finalities, all goodness and wisdom, reside therein. He will resist all changes as a matter of life or death. But acquaintance with the world will reveal to him the fact that his sun is a spark among millions of others, that truth and goodness are everywhere, that his opinions may change and die, but others just as good or better will be preserved.

When the earth was the center of the universe, in the days of the old astronomy, it was a tremendous place. Man was as nothing in comparison. When it was discovered that our globe was but as an apple seed to the apple in the scheme of the universe, man became colossal. Instead of being limited to one huge globe, as he thought, he became identified with tens of thousands of such worlds. His citizenship has been extended. In the old days he was intense. Once he finds himself upon a sea of worlds he adjusts himself to the vastness of his new environment. So with the denominationalist. In his own religious sphere, he may be little when his conceptions are engrossed with the greatness of the sect. But give a man the larger view and he finds himself enlarged. From being a sectarian he becomes a member of the Holy Catholic Church, a devout spirit with all who enjoy the communion of saints; and he can rejoice in the fellowship of the Spirit, and enjoy the fullness in a measure, while he lives, of the life everlasting.

PROGRESS IN CHRISTIAN UNION.

The critics are prone to remind us Disciples that after a century's effort our task is yet unfinished. They tell us that Christian union is no nearer today than before; that all are willing to unite, but the barriers seem formidable. We remind our friends that the idea of union has grown from a dream to a commonplace, that the bitterness of sectarian controversies are about past, except in remote districts where newspapers and books do not circulate freely, that pulpits once closed to the freest intercourse are now open, that union services of one kind or another are frequent in almost every community, that the doctrine of salvation exclusively in one church or another has about been given up, that differences of doctrine are minimized while agreements are emphasized, that ministers of different denominations are on the most cordial terms, that several of the greatest communions are as earnestly working to promote unity as are the Disciples themselves, that the Church Federation movement is an outgrowth of the pioneer purpose of the Disciples, that conferences on Christian union have been frequent in recent years, and that not to be in sympathy with such a movement is to write one's self down as out of harmony with the spirit of the age.

So it is no exaggeration to say that the purpose for which the Disciples came into existence is ripening toward fulfillment.

THE BUGBEAR OF POLITICS.

We are glad to see an organization of the various Women's Missionary Boards of the nation in the interest of international peace. It is prefaced with the usual announcement that is it not a political organization. If that is merely to deceive the elect we have no objection, for some such phrases are used at times in the interest of expediency. But we all should know by this time that with such an issue it is impossible to have an organization that is not political, if by that term we mean the relation of the peace movement to our government. A peace movement like the one in question concerns the entire nation; it will succeed or fail, according to the convictions of those in whose hands are the reins of government. If a fighter is in the saddle we will have war, unless tremendous pressure is brought to bear upon him through our national representatives. So it is idle to talk of a movement which concerns all the people being kept free from politics, using the word in its best sense.

The politician who favors war will favor any movement that does not concern itself with politics. To him it will be purely academic. But meet him on his own ground and his tactics will change. For years the politicians chuckled as long as the temperance movement was kept out of politics. Once in, they became enemies out and out. The same is true of the movement for equal suffrage. Both are now in politics head over heels. Why should they not be, and what could have been done if they had not been thrust into the forefront of politics? In a country like ours every national movement must be dealt with at the seat of government, and whether it shall live or die depends wholly upon the convictions of the lawmakers.

Isn't it strange that a nation which boasts of a government by the people should have cultivated a disposition to make great issues merely matters of debate, lest ill feeling and contamination should result the moment they are lifted into the national arena where such issues can only be settled? In other words, the citizen must be progressive and ideal in his community life, but once he carries his convictions to Washington from Podunk he finds himself covered with mud from head to foot! Such is the teaching.

Moral of the politicians: Keep out of politics and don't disturb our dreams or our ducats!

WORLD-PEACE AND THE MINISTRY.

It is being constantly borne in upon the writer that the ministry is doing little more than deploring the awful results of the Great War. The Church itself seems to be enjoying its "fat slumbers" while famous men and women outside the Church are striking tremendous blows in behalf of international peace. Women's clubs are doing faithful service. We ought to become alive to the fact that today is the time to begin to end future wars. The ministry must become aggressive in showing the fallacies on which the entire superstition of war rests. It is opposed to all reason and humanity. The spirit of war is kindled by a special class whose fame and fortune depend upon bloodshed. War is no more inbred in human nature than is cannibalism. Nations don't have to fight any more than they have to sharpen their teeth on each other's bones. There is no more reason why nations should live by fear and sleep with lethal weapons under their pillows than why individuals should. Military drills, the spirit of fight and of slaughter, the folly that a fine physique can be had only by the military life, and that a shipload of "dreaful awfuls" is to be unloaded upon our shores at the close of the Great War, are some of the foundations on which the militarists are attempting to rear their superstructure. Let us go back to the days when the world was taught the lessons of peace and meekness, and try to forget the days of swagger and bluster and braggadocio upon which we have fallen.

TRIAL SERMONS

A good friend writes to know what can be done to break up the custom of trial sermons. Nothing can be done, I fear. It is the only way in the rural churches that the candidate for office and the people can be brought together. But to make the choice of a preacher turn upon one or two sermons is as poor a method of calling a preacher as can be devised. All the preacher can do under the circumstances is to give his hearers the best he has and hope for the best.

A GOOD WORK FOR THE SUNDAY-SCHOOL.

A judge of the Police Court in this community has a novel method of dealing with offenders. If they show signs of penitence and really desire to be better they are required to attend a men's Bible class for so many Sundays regularly in our school. They are put on their good behavior as far as possible. The experiment has not been in operation long enough for us to give results, but we are following it with interest.

SAUL TRIES TO KILL DAVID.

INTERNATIONAL UNIFORM LESSON FOR MAY 2.

I Samuel 19. Memory Verses 4, 5.

Golden Text: Whosoever putteth his trust in Jehovah shall be safe. Proverbs 29:25.

American Standard Bible.
Copyright, 1901, by Thomas Nelson & Sons.
(Used by permission.)

(1) And Saul spake to Jonathan his son, and to all his servants, that they should slay David. But Jonathan, Saul's son, delighted much in David. (2) And Jonathan told David, saying, Saul, my father, seeketh to slay thee: now therefore, I pray thee, take heed to thyself in the morning, and abide in a secret place, and hide thyself: (3) and I will go out and stand beside my father in the field where thou art, and I will commune with my father of thee; and if I see aught, I will tell thee. (4) And Jonathan spake good of David unto Saul his father, and said unto him, Let not the king sin against his servant, against David; because he hath not sinned against thee, and because his works have been to thee-ward very good; (5) for he put his life in his hand, and smote the Philistine, and Jehovah wrought a great victory for all Israel: thou sawest it, and didst rejoice; wherefore then wilt thou sin against innocent blood, to slay David without a cause? (6) And Saul hearkened unto the voice of Jonathan: and Saul sware, As Jehovah liveth, he shall not be put to death. (7) And Jonathan called David, and Jonathan showed him all those things. And Jonathan brought David to Saul, and he was in his presence, as beforetime.

(8) And there was war again, and David went out, and fought with the Philistines, and then slew them with a great slaughter; and they fled before him. (9) And an evil spirit from Jehovah was upon Saul, as he sat in his house with his spear in his hand; and David was playing with his hand. (10) And Saul sought to smite David even to the wall with the spear; but he slipped away out of Saul's presence, and he smote the spear into the wall: and David fled, and escaped that night. (11) And Saul sent messengers unto David's house, to watch him, and to slay him in the morning: and Michal, David's wife, told him, saying, If thou save not thy life tonight, tomorrow thou wilt be slain. (12) So Michal let David down through the window: and he went, and fled and escaped.

Verse by Verse.

BY ASA MCDANIEL.

1. Saul spake. Saul commanded.—That they should slay David. The success of David aroused Saul's jealousy to the extent of attempting to take his life.—Delighted much in David. The friendship of Jonathan for David is here introduced, see 18:1. He took the part of David rather than his father.

2. Jonathan told David. He warned David of the impending danger.—Hide thyself. Since Saul had threatened to take the life of David it was necessary for him to hide.—In the morning. The conversation took place in the evening, and in the morning the life of David was to be taken, hence the caution.

3. In the field. The open country.—I will commune with my father of thee. Jonathan may have thought that David must be near so that no time would be lost in warning David in case he could not influence his father.

4. Spake good of David. Jonathan defended David's conduct.—Let not the king sin. The course he was taking was unjust.—He hath not sinned against thee. His action meant much to Israel, and you have no cause for jealousy.—To thee-ward. Toward thee.

5. He put his life in his hand. Risked his life. He did what no man in all the army of Israel was willing to do.—Jehovah wrought a great victory. In giving Yahweh the credit rather than David the jealousy of Saul was allayed.—Didst rejoice. Jonathan reminds Saul that he rejoiced at the time of David's victory over the Philistine.—Innocent blood. Taking the life of an innocent person.

8. There was war again. The reference is to the war in which Goliath was slain. This was another attack of the wily Philistines.—David went out. He entered the campaign, and won for himself fresh laurels. It was also a great service for the kingdom of Saul.

9. Evil spirit from Jehovah was upon Saul. "The evil spirit is here called the spirit of Jehovah, contrary to the usage of other passages. The emendation suggested by the Greek Version, which brings them into conformity is now generally adopted." Smith.—His spear in his hand. The spear was used as a scepter which is a mark of royalty.—David was playing. Music was supposed to drive away the demon of melancholy, but this time it failed to have its usual charm with the king.

10. Saul sought to smite David. No promise that he had made was remembered when this new fit of anger gained control of him, see V. 6. He was determined to take the life of David.—Slipped away out of Saul's presence. He sought refuge in his own house.—That night. "According to our construction the night of taking possession of the bride." Smith.

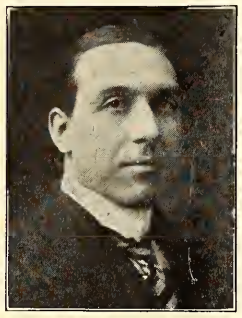
12. Michal let David down through the window. The messengers of Saul were guarding the front door, hence the reason for David's escape through the window.

Jealousy

The Lesson in Today's Life.

BY JOHN R. EWERS.

There was a certain irresistibleness about David. The stars seemed to fight for him. He seemed to lead a charmed life. Not bears, lions, giants nor kings seemed to be able to prevail against him. Wherever he went victory smiled upon him and, returning home at the head of his armies, maidens sang, as they danced before him:



John R. Ewers

"Saul hath slain his thousands,
But David his tens of thousands."

Saul could not but feel his inferiority, his impotent inferiority, before this handsome, smiling, dashingly brave, consistently conquering youth. What is sadder than age envious of youth—the father turned destroyer!

THE REASON.

We have not been reading a fairy tale in this romance of David who won Michal the king's youngest daughter. He was no invulnerable Achilles. No Faust was he, destined to win for only a season and then to lose his soul. The power of David was that perfectly obvious, but often unappreciated power, which comes from pure living and quiet obedience. His whole nature was harmonious. He sang like the lark at heaven's gate.

"Thrice is he armed who hath his quarrel just
And he but naked though locked up in steels,
Whose conscience with injustice is corrupted."

David is a young Sir Galahad singing loud and clear:

"My good blade carves the casques of men;
My tough lance thrustest sure;
My strength is as the strength of ten—
Because my heart is pure."

A merry heart, a clear conscience, a good digestion, a harmonious mind put to rout worry, disease and even death. The ruddy shepherd youth did bear a charmed life. It was the charm of harmony. You can adequately define religion in terms of HARMONY.

GREEN-EYED JEALOUSY.

Saul was tearing himself into pieces like a huge, powerful engine which has lost its governor. The rattle of dissolution is already audible. Presently the great fly-wheel will burst and the whole machine will be a heap of junk. Here is a king who cannot control his temper. Envy, jealousy, dark hatred, murder gnaw at his heart. It is a frightful thing to lose control. Not long ago I was riding in a very hilly country in an auto. We came to a steep, curving hill. On one side were steep ledges of rock, on the other deep ravines. Suddenly we noticed that the steering gear was loose. The machine would not respond to the wheel, but went its own independent course. It was an exciting and dangerous moment until my clever friend was able to again gain control.

A CUE.

Perhaps we have discovered the cause of Saul's insanity. Jealousy entered, innocently enough, into his mind and began its destructive work. Presently the whole fabric of his brain was eaten out. That man is indeed a fool who harbors jealousy. Nothing is more destructive. Jealousy sours, distorts, and lacerates our souls. How foolish it is! You invite defeat when you indulge jealousy. If your opponent excels you must strengthen yourself against him. There are good ways to compass his defeat. He dresses better—save your money and buy a new suit. He talks more fluently—read more good books and store your mind with interesting facts. He is more successful in making money—improve upon his plans. Nothing is more disgusting than the jealousy which sulks and gnaws. I know a girl who has many excellent qualities. She is well able to hold her own in any group. She is the victim of desperate jealousy. When under its devastating spell she seeks some solitude and eats out her heart. Reappearing in a most woe-begone condition she marvels, yet again, that she is not more attractive. If one is not attractive in silks, one will not improve matters by appearing in wrinkled rags! Jealousy takes you out of the sunshine and plunges you in a dungeon of gloom.

THE CURE.

There is a simple remedy for jealousy: "Weep with those that weep, rejoice with those who rejoice." Saul should have been glad that he had such a brilliant young soldier in his army. He should have been keen enough to have seen the virtues that made David popular and have taken them to himself. Had he returned to obedience he might have kept his throne. The cure for jealousy is the learning to be happy in another's good fortune. And why not? Your sympathy will win you a thousand friends who will be glad in your day of success.

BEING GRACIOUS.

Begin today and practice the art of being gracious. Do it naturally if you can, but, perhaps you will be forgiven if you assume it at the start! You must learn to rejoice with those who rejoice. Do not become a flatterer, but keep your eyes open for opportunities of appreciation. A group of admiring friends will be your rich reward. Overcome that vicious jealousy in your heart by good appreciation. It works.

Disciples Table Talk

Burn the Bonds at Lincoln, Neb.

First church, Lincoln, Neb., had a unique meeting on the evening of April 12. The occasion was the burning of the bonds representing the indebtedness against the church. One of the members had secured a large number of pictures representing facts in the history of the church, and these were thrown upon the screen. The church is building up a large collection of these lantern slides, which are expected to grow in value with the years.

The Indiana Convention, May 10-13.

The program for the Indiana state convention is in print. The opening address is by Professor W. C. Morro, "Modern Biblical Scholarship and the Ministry." In the same session David H. Shields speaks on "The Social Gospel," and Clay Trusty on "Young Men and the Ministry." The district secretaries are given plenty of time to make reports of conditions in their particular portions of the state. Dr. William Lowe Bryan, president of Indiana State University, is listed for an evening address. The Sunday-school interests of the state are given a good proportion of time and conferences will be held over the different departments of work. The convention will be held at Marion. Special excursion cars will be run on the traction line from Indianapolis.

Japanese Disciple in England.

Frank Naotaro Otsuka is a former Disciple student at the University of Chicago. He is now in the Red Cross service, and since the Japanese Red Cross is not much needed in Japan, it has been sent to England. Mr. Otsuka is stationed at Netley, England. He writes of the death of his second son and expresses his sense of loyalty to the Disciples, and especially to the Foreign Christian Missionary Society.

Prominent Layman Dies.

John F. Wilson was one of the prominent Disciple laymen of central Illinois, living at Tallula. He was eighty-five years of age at the time of his death. He was educated as a physician and spent part of his life as a farmer, and part as a business man. T. T. Holton, of Bloomington, preached the funeral sermon, assisted by F. M. Lindenmeyer, of Tallula. He was a member of the Disciple church at Tallula for sixty-four years.

Entertainment at Disciples' Congress.

The annual Congress of Disciples will be held at Ann Arbor, Mich., May 4-6. The plan of entertainment this year is the "Boston plan" of paying for bed and breakfast in a private home. Hotel accommodations are good in Ann Arbor, the rates ranging from a dollar to two and half dollars, European plan. Members of college fraternities will be given special attention at the fraternity houses. Letters of inquiry about entertainment should be sent to Louis Allen Hopkins, 1203 Church street, Ann Arbor, Mich.

Things Moving on the Frontier.

George H. Brown went to Central church, N. Tonawanda, N. Y., recently, and in three months there have been 62 accessions to the church. Easter was an encouraging day with three times as many present as on Easter a year ago. The men's class is reported as the largest ever assembled in the city. A fund of $1,084 was raised on Easter night to redecorate the auditorium.

Prof. Veatch, of Drake, is Ill.

Prof. A. D. Veatch, of the Old Testament Department at Drake University, was stricken with an attack of heart trouble while at a service at University Place church, Des Moines, recently. He is better now, but has not been well since having a bad fall a year ago.

Methodist Pastor Succeeds in Disciple Pulpit.

Central church, Waterloo, Ia., has extended a five year call to L. C. Moore to continue as pastor. A year ago he left the Methodist ministry and took this church. In the year there have been 95 accessions to the church. 70 of them at the regular services. The church is beginning to consider the need of a new building. Mr. Moore says of the Christian Century, "It is a spicy, helpful journal which brings inspiration weekly to my study."

Prof. Athearn Travels.

Prof. Walter S. Athearn is now on the road a good deal promoting his new idea, "The City Institute." He attended the convention of the Oklahoma Sunday-school Association recently, and visited Ft. Smith, Ark., to tell them about the institute idea.

Prof. W. S. Athearn, one of the leading speakers at the meeting of Chicago Sunday School workers on last Friday.

Iowa Minister Dies.

A. M. Levack had been a minister of the Disciples for only a year, but his place in the community at Perry, Ia., was well established. He came into the fellowship of the Disciples from the Baptists under the teaching of Walter M. White, of Cedar Rapids, Ia. He fell ill with spinal meningitis and died on March 24.

New Building Dedicated.

Easter was a day of unusual joy at Kenney, Ill., this year. A new building was dedicated clear of debt and seventeen hundred dollars was raised toward a new parsonage. A number of visiting ministers were present and George L. Snively conducted the dedicatory services. The minister at Kenney is Martin Smith, who has carried on special studies at the University of Chicago.

Native African in America.

There are many of African extraction in America, but not very many Africans of the first generation. Thomas B. Kalane is an African who not many years ago was a pagan in his native land. After coming to this country, he was baptized by W. H. Book of Columbus, Ind., and he is now studying at Wilberforce University, an African Methodist school located at Wilberforce, O.

Working for Negro Sunday-schools.

There are about 700 negro Disciple churches, largely in the Southern states. For many years the home mission society, through its Sunday School Department, has considered the employment of a competent field worker for service among the Sunday-schools of these churches. It seems strange that there has never been a field worker for such service, when for so many years competent Sunday-school specialists have been at work among the white churches. On the first of October, 1914, the society put into this new field, Mr. Patrick H. Moss. Mr. Moss was chosen for the society by Prof. J. B. Lehman, who so ably manages the negro work for the Christian Woman's Board of Missions. This action was approved by the Atlanta Convention meeting a few days later. Mr. Moss has already visited the chief centers among these negro churches and has attended nearly all the colored conventions of the South. He will do an aggressive work in leading these Sunday-school workers and in organizing new schools in many of the churches where at present no Sunday-school work is maintained. Hearty words of appreciation are received from many of the leaders among colored churches, and also from state secretaries, both evangelistic and Sunday-school, in the Southern states, who are in close touch with this work and assist in an advisory capacity. It takes about $1,000 a year to maintain this work and at present there is little income directly from the colored churches for its maintenance. It is believed however, that this is one of the most important fields that the Disciples could enter, and the strong churches and Sunday-schools everywhere will doubtless make possible its enlargement at an early date.

Peter Ainslie in Des Moines.

Every year Drake University brings an eminent preacher to the university for a course of lectures. Last year the lecturer was Dr. Charles E. Jefferson, of New York. This year it is Peter Ainslie, of the Christian Temple, Baltimore. Dr. Ainslie's topics are:

"The First Days of the Church."
"Trafalgar Square" or "The Price of Duty."
"The Church in Civilization."
"A Glimpse of the British Parliament."
"Romanism or Protestantism, Which?"
"Among the Tombs of Westminster."
"The Church and Unity."
"The Earthly Life of Christ on Canvas and in Marble."
"International Peace and Christian Union."

Children under fourteen years of age are formed into a junior congregation at Kellerton, Ia. The minister, James Teeter, found that he had in his congregation a woman well equipped to lead such a work. She is Miss Lilla Skinner, who was trained in Chicago as a religious worker and who is now employed in the public schools at Kellerton.

Discuss War at Church.

There is a considerable congregation of "old brethren" Disciples at Glasgow, Scotland, and at one of the church meetings recently the topic for discussion was "The Attitude of the Christian to the Present War." W. Campbell Crockett, B. Sc., spoke in favor of the course his country had taken and declared that in some cases a Christian must fight. This view was opposed by another able speaker, whose attitude was described as that of "peace at any price." The view that this war is a necessity seemed to prevail in the meeting. Meetings of "old brethren" are characterized by open discussion on the part of the members.

H. K. Pendleton Goes to Texas.

H. K. Pendleton is forsaking the fellowship around Kansas City for the sunny south. He leaves Independence, Mo., for Houston, Tex., soon.

New York's Church Boards Get Together.

On April 13, the official boards of the churches of Greater New York had dinner together at the 57th street Y. M. C. A. The men conferred about the future of the churches in the great metropolis.

C. R. Stauffer Visits City by the Lake.

C. R. Stauffer, pastor of Norwood church, Cincinnati, has been in Chicago the past week attending the sessions of the lesson committee of the Disciples. The interdenominational lesson committee has also been in session. Mr. Stauffer took advantage of his proximity to his old home at Dixon, Ill., to run out and visit with his parents. Mr. Stauffer preached during Easter week and on Easter Sunday there were 1,132 present in the Sunday-school.

High-Grade Evangelism.

Evangelizing student centers is being done successfully by John R. Mott, but the task is not well conceived by many evangelists. Madison Ashby Hart held services in Columbia, Mo., church just previous to Easter, and these brought forty-six persons into the church membership. The sermon subjects are suggestive. Some of them are: "Civilization and Sin," "Moral Overstrain," "The Will to Believe," "Tomorrow," "Tributaries of the River of Life," "The Power of the Unseen." Miss Mabel Parker had charge of the music in the meetings.

College President Dies.

Virginia Christian college has lost its president. Dr. George P. Coler died at a chapel service April 5. The cause assigned was heart trouble. This institution is located at Lynchburg, and has an enrollment of about 130 students. Its property is worth $130,000. It will be very difficult to replace Dr. Coler in the working force of this institution.

Cause Grows at Hamilton, O.

The Disciple cause is growing at Hamilton, O. This city had a population of 35,000 at the time of the last census and it now has three congregations with a prospect of a fourth. High Street church had the best Easter of its history, the church being packed to overflowing, and there were eighteen confessions of faith. Chas. R. Sine is pastor of the church. Lindenwald church of this city also had a good Easter with seventeen added to the fellowship. Craig Schwartz is pastor. Coke Otto mission is conducted by a moulder, while the pastors just mentioned assist. There were nine added here on Easter. A fourth church will be started in the autumn, the churches having already purchased ground for this purpose.

Over a Hundred at Prayer-meeting.

A downtown church with a prayer-meeting of over a hundred every week is something to arrest attention. This is the record at Central church, Cincinnati, where Claire L. Waite ministers. These meetings have doubled during the past three months. The church has had forty accessions at the regular services the past three Sundays.

Good Will Among Town's Churches.

The churches of Carterville, Ill., have found that in union there is strength. They recently had a week of special services, with the local ministers preaching. Large crowds attended every night. Each church had its own series of services last winter but none of them had produced the results the union effort did. The churches will open their work next fall with another such series of meetings. Harley Swift, who is pastor at Carterville, has been much in demand for special addresses, having delivered the union Thanksgiving day sermon and spoken at large meetings both of the Odd Fellows and the Red Men. He will also give the address for the graduation of the eighth grade in the public school.

Illinois District Conventions.

The state missionary society of Illinois divides its territory into eight districts. There are annual district conventions in all but the second district—the city of Chicago—where quarterly assemblies are held in place of the annual meeting. The schedule of the conventions for this year is as follows: Third District, Quincy, May 11-13; Seventh, Greenville, May 18-19; Eighth, Marion, May 19-20; Sixth, Shelbyville, May 25-26; Fourth, Paxton, June 1-2; Fifth, Ashland, June 8-9; First, Thompson, June 15-16. The districts number from the northern part of the state southward, district one being northwestern Illinois and district eight being southern Illinois.

New England Church Succeeds.

It is well known that Disciples have but few churches in New England, and these not very strong. The story of the growth at Lynn, Mass., therefore is the more significant. This church is but five years old. It was ministered to until recently by Thomas Penn Ullom, a Harvard student and now by another Harvard student, J. Walter Reynolds. Under student care, the church has trebled in membership. It has been greatly aided by help from the American Christian Missionary Society and the Board of Church Extension. Herbert Yeuell will hold evangelistic meetings here beginning this week.

Great Meetings Held in Theater.

The Sunday evening services held in Jefferson Theater at Auburn, N. Y., continue successful. There were over twelve hundred in attendance on Easter night. The church has received seventy new members since the first of the year. E. W. Allen is pastor.

San Francisco Pastor is Installed.

Vaughan Dabney was duly installed as pastor at Oakland church, San Francisco, on Easter Sunday. In the afternoon a fellowship service was held, presided over by Charles A. Young. The pastors of the various community churches were present to offer their greetings. Mr. Dabney in his address declared the purpose of his ministry to be "to reconcile to the thinking man the facts of religion."

Churches Electing Delegates for Convention.

The churches over the country are already electing their delegates for the International Convention to be held at Los Angeles in July. Some specially generous churches are raising funds with which to send their ministers to the coast for the convention and exposition.

Mrs. Ida W. Harrison Writes a Book.

"Forty Years of Service" is the title of a new book by Mrs. Ida W. Harrison. This work gives a history of the Christian Woman's Board of Missions. The manuscript has been submitted to the society and will be published shortly. Mrs. Harrison is vice-president of the woman's section of the Panama conference on South America and she is now preparing the report on woman's work on that continent.

Missionary Church Sends Out Missionary.

The Christian Endeavor Society at Ivanhoe Park church, Kansas City, recently won a missionary library for reading the most missionary books of all the societies in the city. From this missionary group, Miss Ruth McMillen will go to Hartford to prepare for work as a missionary, and when she goes to the foreign field, it will be at her own charges. The church has recently entered the living link class in contributions, but will divide the money among the various interests.

Quarterly Visitation.

Following the every member canvass at Ivanhoe Park church, Kansas City, it is the plan to conduct a quarterly visitation of all the homes with a view to securing church attendance and financial aid. The pastor, J. B. Hunley, conducted special services a week before Easter. There were eighteen confessions on Easter.

Easter Eggs for the Orphans.

Easter eggs were collected at Gibson City, Ill., church, for the orphans under the care of the National Benevolent Association at St. Louis. These eggs were neither boiled nor colored but were put into a crate and shipped to await the needs of the children. J. P. Lowry reports the morning service as follows: "It fairly rained eggs. We never saw anything like it. Everyone, from the beginners up to the aged members, must have ransacked the hen's nests. The result was 1,089 eggs, which at the market price for fresh eggs here would be worth $13.72." In addition to the eggs, thirty quarts of canned fruit were also collected and shipped. A liberal cash offering was received. C. J. Robertson is the pastor.

Sell Hominy for Benevolence.

The Helping Hand organization of Kirksville, Mo., has made and sold home-made hominy from the sale of which they secured $47.50 as an offering to the National Benevolent Association. The Sunday-school added enough money to make the total offering from this church a hundred dollars.

All-Day Meeting in Buffalo.

Easter was made the occasion of an all-day meeting by the members of Central church, Buffalo. The members brought baskets and many of them did not leave the building from the time of the morning service until the evening service was over. A communion and consecration service was held in the afternoon of the day.

IMPORTANT ANNOUNCEMENT.

In order to correct a prevailing misunderstanding, it seems necessary to announce that Mr. D. E. Olson has not and never has had any authority to bind the American Christian Missionary Society financially, and that at its last meeting, held March 19, 1915, after having made careful investigation, the society declined to permit him to represent it in any capacity. This statement is made by order of the board of trustees.

From Foreign Mission Fields

The missionaries in Japan are planning for the special services conducted by R. A. Doan. R. D. McCoy, of Tokyo, is the chairman of the committee on arrangements. Mr. Doan will speak a week at each station. Prof. Ishikawa will act as his interpreter and will also hold meetings in conjunction with the meetings.

R. D. McCoy reports eight baptisms in Tokyo—six men and two women. The head student in the fourth year class is one of the converts. He will be the leader in the Middle school next year. He is a strong young man and greatly interested in the Y. M. C. A.

M. B. Madden baptized six persons in the Yamato river on the 11th of March—a carpenter, a lieutenant, a doctor's wife, two young ladies and his fourth son, Theodore. The doctor's wife is the first mother from the kindergarten, which began a year ago. There are several other inquirers that are almost ready for baptism.

Dr. Kline, of Vigan, Ph. Is., has long felt that we should do more among the pagan tribes in the mountain regions. A visit to that part of the Island has convinced him of the immediate necessity of doing active and aggressive work. Our mission is now nearly fifteen years old. More than a score of missionaries have been assigned to the Philippines, not one of whom has done exclusive pagan work. It should be known that the pagan people want the gospel.

Edgar A. Johnston, of Longa, Africa, wants a Balopticon to show pictures to the people who cannot read. Post cards or pictures of any kind can be used in this instrument. Such an instrument as he needs costs between $50 and $100. Perhaps some good friend of the work who wants to do some special thing will be willing to contribute this amount for this purpose.

H. A. Eicher reports that he is pushing the work of clearing and leveling the land for the new athletic field in Harda, India. The government has granted nearly $300 towards the athletic field. He expects that the government will contribute handsomely towards the high school building, also, giving perhaps one-third of the whole amount, but of this he cannot be absolutely certain at present.

Frank V. Stipp, who is now in the College of Missions, in Indianapolis, is planning to go to the Philippines sometime during the summer. He will take the place left vacant by the return of A. G. Saunders to Australia. Mr. Saunders was called home very unexpectedly by the serious illness of his mother.

Dr. Geo. E. Miller and family have reached India safely. They are settled down in one of the bungalows in Harda and have a comfortable home. Dr. Miller was sent into the hospital work the next day after arriving and has been kept busy ever since. There is certainly plenty to do at Harda, as there is at every other station.

S. J. Corey, Secretary.

A Good Record.

Central church, Rockford, Ill., under the ministry of W. B. Clemmer, has had 102 accessions in twelve months and has been paying off its building obligations at the rate of fifty dollars a week. Mark Wayne Williams of Milwaukee held decision meetings at this church at the Easter time, adding eighteen persons to the membership. Mr. Clemmer will preach in Milwaukee as a return service. The Sunday-school at Rockford has a committee to gather old paper for the benefit of the building fund.

The Congress May Be Postponed.

In another column is given a news item concerning the Disciples' Congress, which will be held at Ann Arbor, Mich. Later word comes that the Congress may be postponed, according to a letter from Dr. Lumley.

In and Around Chicago

C. C. Morrison spoke at the vesper service at Hyde Park church on Sunday afternoon on the subject, "Religious Journalism."

The Russian mission rejoices in an achievement that has required several years. The leaders have at last rented a building in the ghetto, where Jews and Russians are intermingled, instead of operating in a building outside the district. The new location is at Fourteenth and Union streets. Basil S. Keusseff and Mr. Orloff are very busy with night school classes in English, but they desire a teacher for an advanced class, preferably an American, who will visit the mission three nights a week. The pastors express interest in finding such a man.

J. F. Futcher has been conducting special evangelistic services at Sheffield church for the past week.

J. E. Wolfe has resigned at Whiting church. The congregation has called a pastor who is a member of Hammond church.

Evanston church, where O. F. Jordan preaches, had four confessions on April 11, two of them Catholic ladies. This makes thirteen new members in a little over two weeks at this church, ten by confession of faith.

S. W. Nay, of Gary, has been holding special services in his church for two weeks and reports thirty-eight members received into the church.

There were four accessions at Englewood church on April 11.

Among the visitors at the ministers' meeting on March 12 was Geo. E. Jones, who had preached at Knox, Ind., the day before.

Lloyd H. Miller, the new pastor of Metropolitan church, was introduced to the ministers at the last ministers' meeting, and spoke briefly of his attitude toward Chicago work. He expressed a desire to co-operate with all his brethren. He explained that Charles Reign Scoville was no longer called minister-at-large of his congregation, though he remained a member. This means that Mr. Miller will have full responsibility for the work of the Metropolitan church.

W. G. Winn has been holding special services in Irving Park church for a week. Including the Easter Sunday accessions, the church has received forty-eight accessions to its membership. Mr. Winn is getting a strong hold on his new work.

The Chicago ministers have voted to favor a general pulpit exchange on July 11 at the time the International Christian Endeavor convention is in session in Chicago. It is planned that every church shall hear a new voice that day, either visiting ministers or exchange local pastors.

The ministers must soon define their attitude to the movement to make Chicago dry in 1916. There is no difference of opinion about the advisability of driving out the saloons, but there is some difference about the wisdom of forcing the issue to ballot without more education of public sentiment. A committee has been appointed to bring in more facts.

Chicago people are deeply concerned over the illness of a prominent layman of Jackson boulevard church, E. B. Witwer, who is reported to be dangerously ill with double pneumonia. Before these lines are in print, the illness will have terminated favorably, or otherwise, as the crisis of the disease is at hand. Mr. Witwer has been especially interested in social union occasions, and in the Christian Business Men's Association, of which he is now the president.

Charles Reign Scoville Resigns.

At a reception tendered their new pastor, Lloyd H. Miller, by the congregation of Metropolitan church, last Friday evening, Charles Reign Scoville, who has for several years held the office of "pastor-at-large," formally presented his resignation, severing entirely any official connection with the church, though retaining his membership there and promising to bear his share as a member in personal and financial support. "Mr. Miller is my pastor," said Dr. Scoville. "He comes back here as the undivided head of Metropolitan church and I desire to take my place in the ranks, without any official title or responsibility for the leadership of the church." Dr. Scoville organized Metropolitan church nearly a dozen years ago from a group of members of the old Union Christian church, who were unwilling to go with the majority into a union with Jackson Boulevard church, some two blocks away. During recent years the evangelistic interests of Dr. Scoville have kept him away from Chicago, and a succession of "resident pastors" has kept the congregation together. Dr. Scoville has received large sums of money in the general field given to him for the use of the congregation of which he was "pastor-at-large." It is believed that his increasing success in union evangelism made it very improbable that he would ever undertake again the pastoral care of the local church, and Mr. Miller's acceptance of the church's call, a call in which Dr. Scoville heartily joined, gave occasion for the resignation.

The Bethany System of Sunday School Literature

Classes Will Give a Play.

Two young peoples' classes of First church, Atlanta, Ga., have gone together for the production of a play called "His Lordship." The play is to be given under the direction of Miss Evelyn Lewis, who leads the expression class. The boys of the Royal Guards class are to assist.

Church Receives New Members.

First church, Los Angeles, is making rapid growth. There have been forty-eight accessions at the regular services the past six weeks. One of the problems of this coast city is that a large number of people moving there take an indifferent attitude toward religion, mostly on account of the failure of eastern churches to advise the local forces of the presence of the homeless Disciples.

A Reception to the Mothers.

The Loyal Daughters' Class, of Euclid avenue church, Cleveland, O., had a unique social evening recently. The class gave a reception to the mothers of the girls. Many of them had never been in the church before. A good deal of amusement resulted from an effort to guess the mothers by their resemblance to the daughters. At the dinner table each mother sat with her own daughter. Some girls who were orphans brought their landlady, or some relative in lieu of her own mother. The evening proved to be of great interest and profit.

Wife of Well-Known Minister Dies.

"Mrs. Russell F. Thrapp, the beloved wife of the pastor of First Christian church, Los Angeles, passed away at 4 o'clock April 12. She was a woman of high intellectual culture, possessing rare beauty and strength of character, and a great help to her husband in all his work. Her loss will be keenly felt by all the churches which she and Brother Thrapp have so faithfully served. Her memory will be a great benediction to all who have known her. S. M. Cooper."

This telegram, which came on Monday, brings news which will be received with a special sense of loss in Illinois, where the Thrapps always lived until their recent change to California. She was a fellow-student with her husband in Eureka college in the days gone by, and classmate. She was a woman of great force of character and deep religious interest. In Illinois, she shared with her husband the labors of pastorates at Atlanta, Gibson City and Jacksonville.

CINCINNATI HAPPENINGS.

Those who are acquainted with conditions in other churches of Greater Cincinnati say that the attendance and interest on Easter Sunday was the best for many years. It indicates a religious awakening. The reports made last Monday at the meeting of the ministers of the Disciple churches were the most encouraging ever given. Cincinnati Central reported 502 present in Sunday-school and 26 added to the church; Covington First had 728 present in the unified teaching and preaching service which they hold; Evanston reported 440 in Sunday-school and 11 added to the church during the day; Madisonville had 402 in Sunday-school. Covington Madison avenue reported one of the best and largest attended Easter services in the history of the church. In fact, every church had a great day. It is interesting to note that five of the Sunday-schools had an attendance of over 400 and three of them over 500. Three years ago 400 looked big for the largest schools on special days. It only indicates that the churches are making splendid progress in this great center.

A big rally of the churches of Greater Cincinnati will be held at Central Christian church, Ninth street opposite City Hall, Thursday evening, April 15. F. W. Burnham the new president of the American Christian Missionary, will address the meeting.

An event of interest this week at Norwood church will be "The Old Maids' Convention," an entertainment to be presented by the Bethany Daughters' Class. This entertainment will furnish all with an evening of fun, "the like of which you have not enjoyed for a long time."

A New Model Typewriter!

The— No 9

OLIVER

The Standard Visible Writer

BUY IT NOW!

Yes, the crowning typewriter triumph is here!

It is just out—and comes years before experts expected it.

For makers have striven a life-time to attain this ideal machine. And Oliver has won again, as we scored when we gave the world its first visible writing.

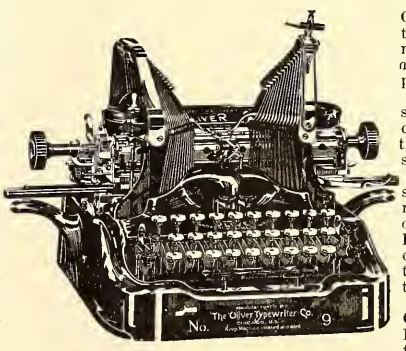
There is truly no other typewriter on earth like this new Oliver "9." Think of touch so light that the tread of a kitten will run the keys!

CAUTION!

The new-day advances that come alone on this machine are all controlled by Oliver. Even our own previous models—famous in their day—never had the Optional Duplex Shift.

It puts the whole control of 84 letters and characters in the little fingers of the right and left hands. And it lets you write them all with only 28 keys, the least to operate of any standard typewriter made.

Thus writers of all other machines can immediately run the Oliver Number "9" with more speed and greater ease.



WARNING!

This brilliant new Oliver comes at the old-time price. It costs no more than lesser makes—now out-of-date when compared with this discovery.

For while the Oliver's splendid new features are costly—we have equalized the added expense to us by simplifying construction.

Resolved right now to see this great achievement before you spend a dollar for any typewriter. If you are using some other make you will want to see how much more this one does.

If you are using an Oliver, it naturally follows that you want the finest model.

17 CENTS A DAY

Remember this brand-new Oliver "9" is the greatest value ever given in a typewriter. It has all our previous special inventions—visible writing, automatic spacer, 6½-ounce touch—plus the Optional Duplex Shift, Selective Color Attachment and all these other new-day features.

Yet we have decided to sell it to everyone everywhere on our famous payment plan—17 cents a day! Now every user can easily afford to have the world's crack visible writer, with the famous PRINTYPE, that writes like print, included FREE if desired.

Chicago Sunday Schools Hear Disciple Leaders

It was a fortunate event for the workers of the Chicago Sunday-schools that the meetings of the lesson committees happened to convene at Chicago last week. Mr. O. A. Rosboro, the leader of the Disciple Superintendents' Association of the city, seized upon the opportunity and arranged for a meeting of the Chicago workers, at Memorial church, on the South Side, at which some of the national leaders who were present at this time might deliver brief messages to local Disciples. About a hundred and fifty persons were in attendance. Mr. Rosboro had charge at the luncheon early in the evening and Secretary R. M. Hopkins presided at the session held in the Sunday-school auditorium.

During the luncheon hour, C. L. De Pew and Myron C. Settle brought helpful messages. In the later session the following men spoke: Dean Hall L. Calhoun, of the Bible College of Transylvania, who was in Chicago at this time as member of the International Lesson Committee. C. R. Stauffer, pastor at Norwood, Cincinnati, who is a member of the Lesson Committee of the Disciples; Mr. Stauffer's school is the largest, in all denominations, in Greater Cincinnati, but his massage bore rather upon the necessity of putting every man, woman and child in the school into active service. Prof. W. C. Bower, of the Chair of Religious Pedagogy at Lexington, spoke of the child as the center of modern religious education; his talk was quiet and thoughtful. The last speaker on the program was Professor W. S. Athearn, of Drake University, author of "The Church School" and "The City Institute." Professor Athearn gave some apt imitations of the inefficient Sunday-school teacher, and described the work of the superficial Sunday-school as being a double process of "blowing out" the pupils by means of the "hot air" know-nothing teacher and "sucking back" the lost ones by means of contests and other mechanical methods. Professor Athearn stressed the opportunity afforded the conscientious Sunday-school teacher in the building of character.

Throughout the evening Mr. Hopkins interspersed story and comment in a most interesting and helpful way.

It is to be hoped that these splendid "get together" meetings will be continued for the benefit of the rapidly growing Chicago Sunday-school work.

Easter in East End, Pittsburgh.

Easter was one of the most perfect days ever seen in Pittsburgh and throngs attended all the churches. East End church of Disciples was inadequate for the crowds. Four hundred and twenty-seven attended Sunday-school. During the day seventeen united with the church. Nine came by confession of faith. During the five and one-half years of Mr. Ewers' pastorate there have been 511 additions to the church. The congregation has voted to build a great house of worship next year. A promising young man has just been sent to Bethany to study for the ministry. The church supports him there.

Song Leader Illustrates the Hymns.

W. E. M. Hackleman has provided himself with stereopticon slides to illustrate the best hymns of the church, and their history is recited by the well-known song leader in the services which he conducts. He has also secured a good collection of the slides illustrating the life of Christ, taken from the great masterpieces. Mr. Hackleman is now helping in evangelistic meetings at Atlanta, Ga., which are being conducted by L. O. Brieker in First church. Mr. Hackleman has been engaged to lead the music at the evening sessions of the national convention at Los Angeles, in July.

Young People's Class Secures Lecture.

Blandensburg, O., church has a live young people's class called the Dennis class. They recently secured J. C. B. Stivers, of Cleveland, O., to deliver a lecture on the subject, "Wanted—A Man."

Men's Class Hears of Foreign Work.

The men's class of South Akron, O., church, varies its Sunday program with an occasional address. They recently secured the presence of Miss Povlik, a Slavic mission worker of the city to relate her experiences in this work. The class has an enrollment of nearly a hundred men. It is taught by the pastor of the church, W. G. Loucks.

Cleveland Church Has Fruitful Easter.

Glenville church, Cleveland, had a good Easter. There were twenty-two confessions of faith, and the auditorium was full to overflowing. The special offering amounted to $199. Passion Week services were held by F. C. Ford of West Boulevard church. O. L. Hull is pastor.

Church Reduces Debt.

Mining towns are not very prosperous at the present time, as they have been working on short hours, but on Easter Sunday Carterville, Ill., church rededicated its building, and reduced its debt from two thousand dollars to five hundred. The ladies served a dinner at the church and the people stayed through the day.

New York Church Prospering.

Work in the nation's metropolis is known to be difficult. Central church, of which James M. Philputt is pastor, has had eighteen accessions this year already and the home missionary offering will run in excess of a thousand dollars, which is a remarkable achievement for this church in the light of its local burdens. It is reported that religious interest is growing in New York this year, and great leaders like Dr. Jowett are talking of a coming revival in the life of all the churches.

Pastor Will Soon Leave.

J. D. Garrison, Ft. Collins, Col., will soon leave his pastorate there, but he will continue until the Bulgin evangelistic meetings have been closed. During the two and a half years of service, Mr. Garrison has had 102 accessions at Ft. Collins, and thirty elsewhere. He has delivered sixty special addresses, has conducted thirty-six funerals and performed twenty-four weddings. His most recent engagement for a special address was as the baccalaureate speaker before the Colorado School of Agriculture. The sermon was called "The Trinity of Power."

Prints Tract on Church Attendance.

First church, Wellington, Kans., has printed as a tract a statement by Hon. Claude Weaver, a congressman from Oklahoma, who discourses eloquently on the subject of church attendance. The tract bears the name of the church and is circulated about town to help the local work.

Texas State Convention.

The Texas state convention will be held this year in Dallas, May 3-6. A good program will be announced soon. The state organization has its affairs managed by A. D. Rogers.

Banker Minister Has Great Church.

E. N. Duty was a bank official in the largest bank in Pittsburgh when some years ago he decided to prepare himself for the ministry. He graduated at Bethany college, and at Yale School of Religion. Following this he accepted a pastorate at Charleroi, Pa. His church is in Washington county, near where the Campbells began their work more than a hundred years ago. His church, twice the size of any other in Charleroi, is undertaking some forms of institutional work. Mr. Duty preaches in shop meetings and holds a meeting every Thursday for business men in a real estate office. A recent series of evangelistic meetings held by the Minges Evangelistic Company resulted in 671 accessions to the churches of the community, most of these going into the Disciple church of Charleroi.

Sunday-school Class Makes Trip.

P. J. Jerome teaches a live class in Central church, New York. This class will go to Patterson, N. J., some evening this month to attend the "Billy" Sunday meetings. The class is also announcing stereopticon lectures under its own auspices.

President Todd on Missouri Colleges

President E. M. Todd has been erroneously reported as saying that none of the Disciple institutions of Missouri are standardized, and that unless these institutions are standardized they will pass. Two Disciple schools are connected with larger institutions and furnish work which is thoroughly approved by the larger institutions with which they are affiliated. Two other of the schools are standard junior colleges, and as such are recognized by the state university. The statement of Mr. Todd was as follows:

"These are the leading colleges and universities in the state of Missouri:

"University of Missouri, Columbia, Non-sectarian; William Jewell college, Liberty, Baptist; Westminster college, Fulton, Presbyterian; Washington university, St. Louis, Non-sectarian; Central college, Fayette, Methodist-South; Drury college, Springfield, Non-sectarian; Missouri Valley college, Marshall, Cumberland Presbyterian; St. Louis university, St. Louis, Roman Catholic; Park college, Parkville, Non-sectarian; Tarkio college, Tarkio, United Presbyterian; Central Wesleyan college, Warrenton, Methodist Episcopal.

"These are the only schools in the state that are recognized as colleges or universities by the Department of Education at Washington. There are more than a hundred so-called colleges and universities in the state, but they are not recognized as such by the Department; they do not meet the requirements.

"The eleven institutions whose names are given above, unite to form an organization called the Missouri College Union, membership in which is limited to those institutions which measure up to the standards set by the Union. Such schools are spoken of as standard colleges and work done in any one school in the group is recognized by all the others including the state university.

"The Disciples of Christ are not represented in this group of standard colleges. They are probably as strong as any of the religious bodies here mentioned, both in numbers and in wealth, and they have great traditions which should make them leaders in the work of Christian education, and yet they have not a standard college in the state. They are the only people of any importance in the state without such a college. The opportunity now presents itself to make good that deficiency.

"The Disciples of Christ have only one school in the state which in any way approaches these standards, or which has any prospect of becoming a standard college. That school is Christian university. (The name of the institution is soon to be changed to College, in harmony with its scope.) They have other good schools, but they are limited to junior college or professional work—they are not colleges. They have nothing that approaches the rank of a standard college except Christian university."

Concerning Church Extension

The Church Extension Board met April 6 with twenty-eight applications for church building loans before the meeting aggregating $56,670. A loan of $300 was granted to the church at Gray, Okla. No more could be promised because of lack of funds. The church at Gray was granted $300 because the Hennessey, Oklahoma, congregation agreed to pay $400 on its loan eighteen months before it was due, provided the loan would be made to the church at Gray. This is a fine fellowship for the church at Hennessey to show. This congregation at Hennessey is the only church that has ever offered to pay its loan in advance in order to help build another church.

The reason why the board could grant no loans was because the Church Extension treasury is lower than it has been in a dozen years. The board promised so much money previous to the Atlanta convention which must now be paid, that no loans have been granted for months.

During February and March the board received $6,200 less than in February and March, 1914. This falling off is due to a falling off in annuity receipts. The churches gained $262 in receipts.

During the month the following loans were closed: Fern Ridge church, Oregon (Cedar Rapids fund) $500; Logan, W. Va., $3,000 (Annuity fund); McConnelsville, Ohio, $2,500 (J. W. Cassell fund); Bay City, Tex., $1,000 (Annuity fund); Knoxville, Tenn., Fifth Avenue church, $15,000 (Annuity fund); La Fontaine, Ind., $2,500 (Annuity fund); Ralston, Okla., $1,500 (F. H. Main fund); Sikeston, Mo., $4,000 (Annuity fund); Ladysmith, Wis., $5,000 (Annuity fund); Los Angeles, Cal., $4,000; South Park Ave. church (General fund).

G. W. Muckley, Secy.

Rededication at Carterville, Ill.

Carterville, Ill., church has remodeled its building and the services of rededication were held on Easter Sunday. The pastor, Harley Swift, has labored diligently to bring this to pass. Among the visitors of the day were H. J. Reynolds of Camp Point, and J. I. Gunn of Marion, Ill. The remodeled structure will make it possible to do a much larger work in the community.

Addresses a Thousand Masons.

Not only were there a thousand Masons in the audience, but every one of them belonged to the Scottish Rite, or thirty-third degree branch. Bruce Brown was the preacher. The occasion was a large assemblage of the Scottish Rite Masons from various parts of the country in the Scottish Rite cathedral of Los Angeles. Mr. Brown delivered his popular lecture on "The Pot of Gold at the End of the Rainbow." He is now engaged in holding evangelistic meetings at Niland, Cal., where a new church is being organized.

E. B. Bagby Loses Father.

E. B. Bagby of Baltimore, lost his father on March 22. He was Captain Alexander Fleet Bagby and his home was in Tappahonnock, Essex county, Va. Mr. Bagby was a valiant confederate soldier during the Civil War, attaining the military rank of captain. He was married to Mrs. Bagby in the time of the Civil War, securing a forty-eight hour furlough for this purpose. He reared six children, of whom two became ministers among the Disciples, E. B. Bagby of Baltimore, and Richard Bagby of Wilson, N. C. Captain Bagby celebrated his golden wedding anniversary Dec. 24, 1912.

Mission Church Grows Strong.

East Orange, N. J., church has grown strong, though it began as a home mission point. It recently cabled John E. Pounds of Hiram, O., and W. E. M. Hackleman, of Indianapolis, to assist in evangelistic services, and there were 51 accessions. W. M. Haushalter is pastor.

Pastor Addresses the Woodmen.

The Woodmen of the World held their state meeting at Hannibal, Mo., recently and R. B. Helser of Trenton, Mo., was invited to give an address before that body. Mr. Helser reports the Hannibal church to be in a most flourishing condition.

Disciple Leaders Visit Yale.

The Disciple students in Yale university were much heartened and inspired by the recent visits of S. J. Corey and A. E. Cory. The Campbell Club gave a dinner for S. J. Corey in Dwight Hall at which there were thirty-two persons present, including two professors in the School of Religion, who are honorary members of the club. Mr. Corey gave an account of his recent trip to the Far East; this was much appreciated. A. E. Cory visited the university a few days later and gave, in the School of Religion, two informing lectures which were open to all students. His addresses on "The Home Base" and "The Men and Millions Movement" made a profound impression upon students and faculty. The appreciative comments on the visits of these two men were a source of pride to every Disciple in Yale. A. C. Gray is secretary of the Campbell Club.

Church Starts Scout Band.

Linden Heights church, Columbus, O., has organized a Boy Scout band with two patrols. This will be carried on in connection with the Sunday-school.

A Brotherhood Organized.

Geo. L. Snively visited Bethany, Mo., recently and helped organize a brotherhood of nearly a hundred members. These men have laid out a very active program for themselves. Among other things, they propose to relieve the financial stringency of the church, to remodel the building, to institute some social features such as a writing room, a library, a shower bath, a swimming pool and a gymnasium; they will promote Bible study, prayer-meeting attendance and church attendance among the men. If all these things are accomplished, it will have been a happy day when the brotherhood was organized. L. H. Otto is pastor.

Sunday-school Larger Than Church.

Vandalia, Mo., church has 200 members in a town of 2,000. There is a Sunday-school attendance of 370, a very significant percentage of the church membership. It comes near being "Every member of the church in the Bible school and as many more."

From United Brethren to Disciple Pastor.

R. C. Dillman, Battle Ground, Ind., was pastor of the United Brethren church in that community. While there he became convinced that his views on religion were more in harmony with the Disciples of Christ, and he severed his connection with the United Brethren. He has remained in the same community preaching for Disciples. He recently gave a lecture at Oxford, Ind., on "Why I Became a Disciple."

A New Kind of Convention.

The third district convention to be held at Iola, Kans., soon, will combine several kinds of convention gatherings. In addition to the consideration of the district interests, there will be a school of methods and a ministerial institute. The meetings will continue from April 12 to 15. There will be a forenoon given to the subject of evangelism, and the topics discussed include "Home Force Evangelism," "Professional Evangelism," "Educational Evangelism," and "District Evangelism." President W. A. Brandenburg, of the State Normal at Pittsburgh, Kans., will speak on "Infidelity in High Places."

Church Observes Passion Week.

First church, Cherryvale, Kansas, observed Passion Week this year with special services each evening of the week. The pastor preached, and his topics for the week were, "Multitudes Seeking Jesus," "Thy King Cometh," "House of Prayer," "Weeping over Jerusalem," "The Conspiracy," "Agony in Gethsemane," "Jesus or Barabbas," "Watch of the Sepulchre," "Bringing Sweet Spices," and "Why Weepest Thou?"

Boys' Class Sells Waste Paper.

The Loyal Sons Class of South church, Toledo, O., has been anxious to make some money for the class, and has fallen upon the plan of collecting old paper and journals, and selling them at so much a pound. The class has a headquarters to which telephone orders may come from homes that are overburdened with waste paper.

* indicates loss.

This statement will bear careful study. It covers just one-half of the missionary year, from October 1, 1914 to March 31, 1915. It reports a total loss of over six thousand dollars. We can overcome that if the Bible-schools will respond. Note carefully your own state. Send a generous offering even if you have already sent a previous one.

Disciple Congressman for Prohibition.

Hon. Dick T. Morgan, congressman from Oklahoma, made a speech in the house of representatives the past winter in which he openly championed the eause of national prohibition. He said: "If the liquor business be a souree of crime, immortality, disease, idleness and waste, then to contemplate the vast millions of money invested therein, the hundreds of thousands of men employed in the prosecution, and the hundreds of millions of dollars in wages and profits distributed thereby only emphasize and reinforce the appeal to the National Government for aid and assistance in annihilating the business. If the liquor business is not legitimate business and is deteriorating the physical, intellectual and moral character of our citizenship, this is an unanswerable argument why neither Federal, state, county nor municipal government should make the business the ehief source of their revenue."

AN OPPORTUNITY FOR CHICAGO SUNDAY-SCHOOL WORKERS.

Every leader in the Disciple Sunday-schools of Chicago and Cook county owes it to himself to attend some of the sessions of the Cook County Sunday School Association on Friday and Saturday of this week.

Six churches will be used for the conferences and banquets of the various departments of the Sunday-school organization, which will be addressed by forty-six speakers.

"The Local Sunday School," is the general theme to be discussed at the fourteen different sessions of the convention.

Some of the special subjects to be considered at the convention are: Personal evangelism among the high school students. The giving of credits in high schools for Bible study in Sunday schools. Plans for Bible study at home by invalids and others unable to attend the sessions of Sunday-schools. Reorganization of the department of physical eduеation to provide for inter-Sunday-school athletic contests on the "point system," which does not require the eontestants to compete at the same time or at one place. The adoption of a new constitution and by-laws of the association. The promotion of study among ehildren and adults of scientific temperance. Plans to enlist the co-operation of the 1,000 Sunday-schools in the movement fostered by the Dry Chicago Federation to oust the saloons from Chicago.

The principal sessions of the convention will be held in the Grace Methodist Episcopal church, La Salle and Locust streets. The conferences of the adult Bible class section will be held in the New England Congregational church, Dearborn street and Delaware place.

The Fourth Presbyterian church, Lincoln Park boulevard; the La Salle avenue Baptist church, 1219 North La Salle street; the Grace English Lutheran church, Belden avenue and Larrabee street, and the Moody Bible Institute are the other plaees at which sessions will be held.

The American Christian Missionary Society

The periphery of this page presents some of the State Superintendents of Missions whose great work it makes possible. Among its 330 Missionaries are numbered some of the Brotherhood's most successful pastors, a few of whose faces are herewith presented. Many evangelists also serve this Board as occasion requires. Under its directions, in both Sunday-school and Church departments, a notable corps of "Efficiency Experts" are everywhere raising the standards of service rendered. Our "Foreign Missions at Home" are making good, as witness the labors of Butchart in Ohio and Manley in West Pennsylvania, and others. Numerous decadent rural churches begin to revive under the treatment applied by its Commission on Country Church. The havoc wrought in war-worn Europe makes imperative the increase of our service through the Commission on Foreign Relations.

The Best!

Many Sunday School classes will wish to study the life of Jesus THIS YEAR. They want the very best text for young people's or adult classes that can be found. This is simply to remind them that there has never been offered to the Sunday School world a Life of Christ so practical, so usable, so true to the best scholarship, so bristling with questions that wake up the pupils, so well proportioned, as Dr. Loa E. Scott's LIFE OF JESUS in Fifty-two Lessons. It is being widely used in Sunday Schools and Y. M. C. A. classes. It is being used in numerous leading Sunday Schools both of the Disciples and other religious bodies. This testifies to its popularity. You must have it in your school. Price 50c. DISCIPLES PUBLICATION SOCIETY, PROPRIETORS, : 700 EAST 40th ST., CHICAGO

Disciples Publication Society

The Disciples Publication Society is an organization through which churches of the Disciples of Christ seek to promote undenominational and constructive Christianity.

The relationship it sustains to the Disciples is intimate and organic, though not official. The Society is not a private institution. It has no capital stock. No individuals profit by its earnings. The churches and Sunday-schools own and directly operate it. It is their contribution to the advocacy and practice of the ideals of Christian unity and religious education.

The charter under which the Society exists determines that whatever profits are earned shall be applied to agencies which foster the cause of religious education, although it is clearly conceived that its main task is not to make profits but to produce literature for building up character and for advancing the cause of religion.

The Disciples Publication Society regards itself as a thoroughly undenominational institution. It is organized and constituted by individuals and churches who interpret the Disciples' religious reformation as ideally an unsectarian and unecclesiastical fraternity, whose common tie and original impuse are fundamentally the desire to practice Christian unity with all Christians.

The Society therefore claims fellowship with all who belong to the living Church of Christ, and desires to co-operate with the Christian people of all communions as well as with the congregations of Disciples, and to serve all.

In publishing literature for religious education the Society believes a body of such literature prepared by the co-operative effort of many communions reaches a much higher level of catholicity and truth than can be attained by writers limited by the point of view of a single communion.

* * *

The Sunday-school literature (The Bethany System) published by this house, has been prepared through the Society's association with the writers, editors and official publishing houses of the Methodist, Presbyterian, Congregational and other communions. In its mechanical and artistic quality, its low selling-price, its pedagogical adequacy, and, still more, in its happy solution of doctrinal differences it is a striking illustration of the possibilities of the new day of unity into which the church is now being ushered.

* * *

The Christian Century, the chief publication of the Society, desires nothing so much as to be the worthy organ of the Disciples' movement. It has no ambition at all to be regarded as an organ of the Disciples' denomination. It is a free interpreter of the wider fellowship in religious faith and service which it believes every church of Disciples should embody. It strives to interpret all communions, as well as the Disciples, in such terms and with such sympathetic insight as may reveal to all their essential unity in spite of denominational isolation. Unlike the typical denominational paper, The Christian Century, though published by the Disciples, is not published for the Disciples alone. It is published for the Christian world. It desires definitely to occupy a catholic point of view and it seeks readers in all communions.

Our Success Depends Upon You!

The Christian Century and the Disciples Publication Society belong to the Disciples of Christ, not to private individuals. With the steady enlargement of the volume of its business the Society will ultimately be on a self-supporting basis and its earnings will go to the cause of Christian education and missions. At present it depends for its existence upon gifts offered by friends who believe in the work it is doing and wish to see its ideals prevail among the Disciples and the larger Christian world.

You are one of the friends of this great work.

Our success depends upon you!

The list of our supporters has been steadily growing. A few generous men and women have shown especial devotion by making large gifts. Every layman and minister who cherishes hopes for the success of such an enterprise will wish to make a gift to its support.

In addition to your own gift, you know of others in your congregation who, if the matter were brought forcefully to their attention, will find pleasure in making a gift. We depend upon you to secure their support.

The usefulness of the Christian Century and the Disciples Publication Society can be extended immeasurably by the prompt assistance of our generous friends.

We depend upon you to stand behind us! And we need your support now!

Do not let our call pass unheeded but fill out this blank and mail to us at once.

ENCOURAGEMENT FOR OUR FRIENDS AND PATRONS

Reduction of Indebtedness

At the meeting of the Disciples Publication Society held in connection with the Atlanta Convention last October, a financial statement of the affairs of the Society was made. Over against the assets, this statement showed an indebtedness of $14,611.50 standing against the Society. Since that time, through the gifts of friends of the cause this indebtedness has been reduced as follows:

On Oct.	1	the	indebtedness	was $14,611.50
" Nov.	1	"	"	" 14,518.21
" Dec.	1	"	"	" 14,358.39
" Jan.	1	"	"	" 13,961.80
" Feb.	1	"	"	" 9,254.20
" Mar.	1	"	"	" 8,360.77
" Apr.	1	"	"	" 8,178.41

This indebtedness is in addition to a small issue of bonds floated two years ago. Since last October the holders of most of these bonds have generously agreed to donate them to the Society.

The gifts made to the Disciples Publication Society since October range from $5 to $1000 and over.

Increase in Patronage

In the quarter beginning Oct. 1, the volume of Sunday School business showed an increase over the corresponding quarter of the previous year of 33⅓%

In the quarter beginning Jan. 1, the increase over the corresponding quarter of the previous year was 35%

In the current quarter, beginning April I, the increase over the corresponding quarter of last year has already reached 38%

The circulation of The Christian Century shows an increase during the past year of 20%

The Conquest is but one year and three months old but it starts its second year with an increase in circulation of 45%

These figures are not given to the public in any spirit of boasting. The Disciples Publication Society is a young institution and its business is admittedly modest in comparison with that of some other publishers. But the figures indicate substantial progress, and reflect the favor with which the publications of the Society are being received by the churches. It is evident that if those who believe in the ideals of The Christian Century and the Disciples Publication Society will sustain our work with their gifts it will not be long until the volume of patronage will make the Society self-supporting.

The officers and workers of the Disciples Publication Society gratefully acknowledge the gifts and patronage indicated by the above exhibit, and hope more than ever to make the Society serve the cause of Christ as an instrument of constructive progress and loyalty.

The Roman Catholic Scare

SHOULD PROTESTANTS BE ALARMED AT ROMAN CATHOLICISM?

A certain amount of the "Roman Catholic scare," with which jaded Protestant nerves are from time to time electrified, was injected into the recent mayoralty election in Chicago.

There can be no doubt that this was one of the issues raised by the Republican candidate, Mr. Thompson, which carried him into the mayor's office. Many a citizen quietly cast a Protestant ballot while voting the Republican ticket.

As in all the great American cities, Roman Catholicism is very strong in Chicago. And it is alert to all of its interests—religious, educational and political.

Since the division of the Republican party, the success of the Democratic party in Chicago and in Illinois, with which Roman Catholicism is allied, has given the German-Irish-Catholic office-holders an obtrusive predominance in public affairs; no one can do business in any office in the City Hall without hearing the accent of the Emerald Isle, and that accent usually betokens a Catholic church member.

But it is nothing to the discredit of a Catholic and an Irishman if he is an office-holder; and nothing to the credit of a Protestant or an American if he is out of office.

This situation in Chicago merely raises the question as to the trend of Roman Catholicism in our social and political life.

I once knew of a city of one hundred thousand inhabitants the municipal administration of which included a mayor, a treasurer, a superintendent of public schools and a chief of the fire department—all of whom were members of the single Church of the Disciples of that place. And yet there was no alarm raised over a Disciple menace.

Why this perennial alarm over "a Roman Catholic menace?" Is it merely the misfortune of being numerous and successful? Or is it a racial rather than a religious phenomenon that so many Catholics are in public office in our great cities?

Is it the Irishman who is politically ambitious, clever and successful, and a mere coincidence that it is a Catholic who happens to hold office at the same time?

Much capital is made out of the fears and prejudices of many Protestants by fanatical Protestant editors and lecturers.

The cruelties of medieval Catholic inquisitors are told in all of their realism just as if Protestants had not been guilty of the banishment and hanging of Puritans and Quakers and Anabaptists. All these cruelties are credited to the religion of Rome and none to the passions of human nature; and they are transferred to the program of Roman Catholicism in the twentieth century, as if there had been no change in human nature or in civilization since the thirteenth or the sixteenth century.

It is entirely forgotten or else deliberately overlooked by Protestant agitators that Protestantism has been as intolerant as Romanism. Perhaps not to the same extent; but in principle and in kind the persecutions meted out to heretics and dissenters by Protestants was the same as the persecutions by Catholics.

All other things being equal, if the historic fact that Catholic powers persecuted in the thirteenth century proves that they would persecute today, then the historic fact that Protestant powers persecuted in the sixteenth century proves that they would persecute today.

It is to be admitted, however, that there is a difference in social tendency between Catholicism and Protestantism, which is likely to work out differently in relation to social and political affairs. And this social tendency lies in its religious and social separateness.

The ideal of the Catholic hierarchy is to enforce a complete non-communion between its members and the members of all other churches. Protestant ministers are never admitted into the pulpits of Catholic priests or into the assemblies of the Catholic clergy. Protestant ministers do admit Catholic priests into their pulpits and assemblies, but it is not often that one can be found who will enter. And if one ever does go into a Protestant pulpit it is a personal act, and never with the official approval of the church.

There is as complete a non-communion between Protestantism and Catholicism as between Protestantism and Mohammedanism. They stand over against each other as religious antitheses.

This religious separateness of Catholicism is extended to a social separateness. Consent of the church is never secured for a Catholic to marry a Protestant, unless it be under the official ceremonial of the church and with a vow to bringing up the children of such union in the Catholic faith.

Catholicism provides its own schools for its own children to secure their training in the Catholic faith, and to prevent too great freedom of social relationship between them and other children.

If it were possible Catholicism would establish a complete segregation of her own people from all other classes.

Such a policy can not help but result in giving the Catholic population a certain compactness of form which is bound to express itself in social and political movements.

A Catholic learns to stand by a Catholic regardless of circumstances. And when it comes to an election a Catholic is likely to get the solid vote of Catholics. This is not always so, but it is the tendency.

Catholicism is not alone, however, in this loyalty to her own; it is to be found in a greater or lesser degree among many of the Protestant denominations.

The hopeful feature of it all is that this segregation is contrary to all social instincts of human nature and to the trend of modern democracy.

The significant thing is not how far Catholicism has succeeded in achieving her aims, but how far she has failed. The children of Catholic and Protestant homes do play and learn together, and the plan to isolate the one class from the other has steadily failed.

It may be possible to control the relationships, the reading, and in a measure, the thinking of the Catholic priesthood; but it is not possible to do so with the Catholic people in America.

They are too few, except in rare instances of solid Catholic communities in the country or the city, to constitute a complete social environment for their people; and the disintegrating influences of free speech and a free press make it impossible to isolate the Catholic population and consolidate it into a balance of power in social or political affairs.

The surest way to consolidate the Catholic people and to create a solid Catholic vote, is the plan of the Protestant agitator who goes about the country telling fabulous tales of Catholic immorality or tyranny drawn from other times or other lands; or sends out these same groundless alarms in the blurred type of cheap incendiary newspapers.

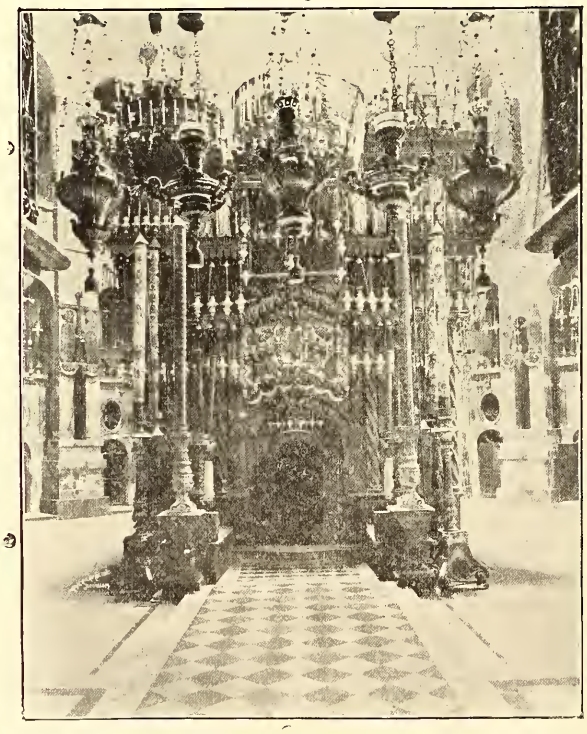
Persecution and misrepresentation have seldom failed to promote the cause persecuted. E. G.

"Pray for the Peace of Jerusalem"

Will the Holy Sepulcher Return Into the Possession of Christendom?

BY WILLIAM E. BARTON.

IT HAS come to be an axiom in political science that the evils anticipated as the result of changes in legislation are seldom those which actually take place, but that each new condition in legislation brings new and unexpected embarrassments. The same is true in still larger measure with respect to war. When the United States went to war with Spain we all knew that we might be tempted to annex Cuba, but no one anticipated what actually happened. Cuba is free, but we have the Philippines and the Panama Canal and a vast number of international complications of which we did not dream when the Maine went down in Havana harbor.



The "Holy Sepulcher" in Jerusalem

Rapid Transit in Palestine

The most superficial student of the war now waging in Europe was wise enough to predict that a new map of that continent would need to be made when the war should end. As a matter of fact, the changes in the map of Europe, particularly in its western portion, are not likely to be so great as in other parts of the world, which no one thought of when the war broke out. Africa is likely to see more changes of territorial control than Europe, and there are likely to be some highly important changes in Asia. Among the rest, there is no strip of territory on the globe of equal size whose fate holds and deserves more of human interest in the present hour than Palestine.

THE PRAYER OF CHRISTENDOM.

"Pray for the peace of Jerusalem!" exhorted the psalmist in the old days, and added, "They shall prosper that love thee." If scholars are right concerning the author of this psalm, he was probably a devout Jew in Babylon at the time when others of his nation were returning to rebuild Jerusalem. He himself could not go, but he said, "For my brethren and companions' sakes I will say, Peace be within thy walls, and prosperity within thy palaces." The whole of Christendom may well echo that prayer. Protestant and Catholic, Christian and Jew have a united interest in the welfare of the little country at the eastern end of the Mediterranean. Their interests are identical; they have the same thing to hope for, and it is something which is likely to occur. This war probably will not end with the Holy Land in possession of the Turks.

I well remember the first time I saw the hills of Palestine, and I recall it because I seemed to see an omen then of what is now coming to pass. It was half past four on a March morning when I came on deck. The machinery of the ship was still and I knew we had come to anchor. Our vessel lay in the harbor of Haifa, the famous Bay of Acre. The moon hung like a cycle over the summit of Mount Carmel; a bright morning star was close to the moon, and the two were the veritable symbol of Turkey, painted in the sky. It was the old moon, not the new. Long since it had ceased to wax and night by night it had been waning. I paced the deck as the dawn came in. The light which was just beginning to pale over the eastern hills grew rapidly to the dawn. In a little more than an hour the sun was up, and the moon, already dying of its own old age, mounted higher, but shone with an ever paling light and disappeared, to shine no more till it came new again in another part of the sky.

TURKEY IS LOSING POWER.

This is just what is happening in the Holy Land. The power of Turkey had already waned and was still waning, but this war is practically certain to bring a new day to the land of the prophets and of the Bible.

Yet who would imagine that the throwing of a bomb by a Serbian boy last June would result in freeing the Holy Sepulcher from the rule of the Turks? Precisely what the Crusades undertook and failed in, is likely to be accomplished by the present war. Whatever happens, Turkey stands to lose. She has lost Egypt; she is practically certain to lose her possessions in Europe, and it is alleged to be an open secret that the Allies will not consent to a termination of the war on terms that leave the Holy Land to be ground under the heel of the Turk. Germany and Austria would have nothing to gain by thwarting this proposal, and Turkey is not likely to be in any position to maintain her right of possession, either as a military or a moral necessity.

Thus far the war has gone cruelly hard with Palestine. Her young men have been drafted into the Turkish army; they are dying now at the front. The burden of taxation, always heavy, has become intolerable. The poverty of the people, always dire, has been felt as in no recent year. Added to all these calamities has been an almost complete cessation of the tourist business on which Palestine depends for its ready money and for the marketing of its merchandise. There has been no invasion of Palestine and at present there is no prospect of an invasion, but no land where there has been no actual fighting has suffered so much as Palestine. No city, except those actually exposed to gun-fire and bombs, has seen a sadder population than Jerusalem.

COULD PALESTINE BE SELF-SUPPORTING?

Heavy as the hand of the Turk has been on Palestine, the centuries have not gone by without some real improvement in conditions of life there. Portions of the land are very fertile. Galilee is a garden; its hillsides in this present spring are all aglow with flowers; its narrow valleys are waving with small fields of grain. The plain of Esdraelon has rich soil in which a horse sinks half way to his knees in the spring under the weight of his rider. The plain of Sharon is fertile. The Jordan valley is a veritable hot-house, unhealthy to live in, but luxuriant in its vegetation. The land probably never has supported a dense population, but it can be improved and has been improved. The Zionist movement has carried back many thousands of Jews, some of whom are dependent on outside contributions, but not a few of them are self-supporting. Workers in olive wood find ready sale for their manufactures, and mother of pearl brought from the Arabian Gulf to Bethlehem is there wrought into attractive forms and sold to pilgrims. Sheep and poultry thrive in Palestine and there is ordinarily a quite sufficient market for them. Olive oil and soap are produced in the coast towns, while figs grow abundantly in the interior, and oranges and lemons and other semi-tropical fruits grow in the regions about Jaffa and in the land of the Philistines.

PILGRIMAGES IN EARLY DAYS.

There is no good reason why Palestine should not be as self-supporting and as self-respecting as Switzerland. It is a little mountain country of no great military or naval importance, but of rare scenic and sentimental value, and one in which all Christian nations, to say nothing of the Jews scattered among them, have a common interest.

In the year 1076 the Seljouk Turks took possession of Jerusalem. At first they had little idea that they would be able to hold it and they determined to make hay while the sun shone. Their oppression of the native population yielded them a considerable but insufficient revenue; as for the rest, they made their exactions on Christian pilgrims coming from Europe to pray at the Holy Sepulchre, to kneel in the cave at Bethlehem, and to bathe their heads in the sacred waters of the River Jordan.

Such pilgrimages had been in vogue from a very early day. St. Helena, the mother of Constantine, visited the Holy Land early in the fourth century. She it was who built the Church of the Nativity in Bethlehem; she it was who identified what she believed to be the veritable tomb of Christ and the place of His crucifixion, now crowned by the Church of the Holy Sepulchre. To visit these sacred scenes, to tread in the veritable footprints of the Savior of men, was regarded as a most praiseworthy and desirable act, and the monarchs of the Roman Empire, as well as the heads of the Church, encouraged these pilgrimages.

About the year 1064, during the reign of Constantine X, a caravan of 7,000 pilgrims passed through Constantinople and Asia Minor, and when in the neighborhood of Jerusalem were attacked by the Bedouin. They lost 3,000 of their number and were unable to visit either the Jordan or the Dead Sea. When a dozen years later the Seljouks came into actual possession of the Holy City itself a cry of horror rose throughout Christendom. Peter the Hermit went from country to country preaching that God willed the deliverance of the Holy Land from the cruel and licentious Turks.

There was little need to exaggerate the conditions which pilgrims encountered on their way to Jerusalem. They insulted the poor and plundered the rich; they made merchandise of the most sacred shrines on earth; they submitted the wives and daughters of Christians to defilement; they desecrated the altars of God and trod under foot the relics of the saints. It was not difficult to rouse Europe to what it believed was righteous zeal for the deliverance of the Holy Land from the infidels.

THE CRUSADES.

The first crusade began in 1096 and moved on with tremendous zeal. In June, 1099, they came in sight of the walls of the Holy City and in about a month captured it and took possession in a sack which spared neither age nor sex. For a little time Jerusalem was in the hands of the Christians. Thus far it is an inspiring story, but it has a pathetic sequel. The armies were dissolute and the conquerors displayed every possible kind of incompetence and unworthiness. The first crusade was followed by another, and this by another, and these by others and others. The high impulse under which they had begun deteriorated and was dragged through much of mire. The cross, which the Crusaders believed to be the veritable one on which their Lord had been crucified, was carried into battle. Under the brow of the Horns of Hattin, where Jesus preached the Sermon on the Mount, this sacred relic was lost and never recovered. Like the Ark of God, which the two sons of Eli took unto battle and lost to the Philistines, the Crusaders, wearing the sign of the cross, lost to their enemies the cross itself.

It is now nearly 840 years since the Turks captured the Holy City. The Crusades have continued to thrill the Christian imagination with pride and to humiliate it with shame. The Holy City still is in the hands of the Turks. A guard of Turkish infantry, armed with guns, which they sometimes use, encamps in the front corridor of the Church of the Holy Sepulchre. When I have visited it in time of a crowd I have hired the sergeant for a franc to elbow a way for me through the masses of Christian pilgrims and have walked from Calvary to the Holy Sepulchre under his ungodly escort. It is the same at the Church of the Nativity. Its door is built low, and one must stoop to enter in order that it may never be accessible to the invasion of cavalry. But a squad of infantry camps in the door and every Christian pilgrim passing in walks by the guns of Moslem soldiers keeping guard in the most sacred shrines of Christendom.

THE TURK HAS NO RIGHT IN PALESTINE.

It is enough to fire the indignation of Christians now as it was in the days of Peter the Hermit. Happily, there are not now the outrageous exactions and abuses of early centuries. The modern Turk has had more than one good reason for treating pilgrims with an approach to decency. But the Turk has no right there,

A Vision in a Place of Death

BY WILLIAM REMFRY HUNT.

Chinese Evangelist Shi and I had been out in the cold and unevangelized regions of Chuchow for many days.

Cities and villages had been reached with the message of life.

Chats in the inns at night, or under the solemn stars at farmhouses, gave us the charm of personal touch with some Nicodemuses and other seekers after light.

Some hostile cities had turned us out and stoned us.

These were the moments when the heart turned in thought homeward to wife and children at the fireside and to the little bits of comfort and cheer; but we were on active service.

We reached the grim city of Fengiang-fu, and the gruesome scene of six bleeding heads strung up on the city walls at the gates told the common story of decapitated robbers.

There was, too, a great idol procession, and the whole city was in turmoil.

A city magistrate came at night to our inn, under armed guard, and urged us for safety to leave at daylight for the temples in the hills.

The angry and vicious populace had threatened to kill us.

At dawn we left for the hills, and looked down on their thousand flags and banners and heard the din and confusion of their clanging drums and weird incantations.

It was an inexpressible feeling.

We were isolated, among strangers, wearied, sick with the tainted food, eyes sore with dust and lacking sleep (for in the inn the Chinese soldiers had been sent to keep guard and beat drums all night).

The people had been told by the officials that the soldiers were to keep us from hurting the people by poisoning the wells, and (wonderful diplomacy!) we were told by the court that this wily guard was to protect us from the mob.

That mountain height became our place of vision! We heard the voice divine, "Lo, I am with you always."

There was never a more welcome message.

It was a fellowship with Christ.

Kneeling upon that heathen soil we prayed.

We faced the solemn thought that in all that great emporium not one single soul knew God, or anything of the redeeming message of His love!

It was THERE—wounded by stones from the angry mob—that we entered anew into the meaning of the fellowship of His sufferings, and kneeling—claimed by the faith that turns the unseen into the seen the opening of that city to the feet of those that bring good tidings.

"Bringing Religion Outdoors"

A Basis for Social Evangelism with Rural Applications.

BY GRAHAM TAYLOR.

THE church of any faith is primarily inspirer, interpreter and mediator. As such, it stands in between four pairs of things vital to every individual and every community.

1. First of all, standing between what ought to be and what is, between the ideal and the actual, the church interprets each to every one of us. It inspires us with discontent for what we are and have, and with aspiration to desire and attain the higher and better thing revealed.

This it does by giving us a vision of the worthiest things and by getting us to look up to them and reach out after them in worship. For worship is worthship. It is the aspiration of the human for the divine. But to inspire us with it, the church must interpret human life and conditions as they actually are. It must begin by having and giving an intelligent and sympathetic understanding of what now is. There is little use of telling any of us what we ought to be, without first giving us to understand that the church and the preacher know how it is with us now and here.

It is because people fail to feel that the church has to do with what now most concerns them, with where they now are, with how they are to do in this world, that religion seems irrelevant to them, seems to be something out of their reach or foreign to them, seems to be something they can get along without, at least in their present emergencies and daily tasks.

RELIGION IN THE STREETS.

A coal-cart teamster once drew his team up to the curbstone in order to hail me as I passed, with this question: "Are you the man who spoke about religion on the streets yesterday?" When I admitted that I had done so, he remarked, "Well, it is a good thing to bring religion outdoors." It surprised him to find it there. Out in the real world, where he lived, on the streets in which he earned his living, religion had not seemed to belong, but it seemed more real to him for being there. To make religion real then, the church must root it on the common earth, however heaven-high it holds aloft the divine ideal. In surveys of actual conditions, village improvement and town planning the church should take its own part. Only when we mortals get the idea that religion belongs out in the open, under the stars, on the green earth, will it be the real, living, tangible thing to us, like everything else that lives and grows, above, about, within us.

2. The Church also stands between life and livelihood. It has ever placed the sanctity of religion upon each individual life. It has hedged about every life, of man, woman and child with a sacredness which God Almighty protects and man disregards at his peril. Even the unborn babe has rights which the mother is bound to respect, since religion made infanticide a crime.

But too much and too long the Church has left livelihood alone, until many ways by which we earn our living make it difficult and sometimes impossible to live the religious life. Ways of livelihood must therefore be made at least compatible with and not destructive of the "Way of Life," if the Church is to get and keep people in it. Therefore commerce and trade, conditions of labor, safeguarding women's work and children's right to play and learn, and the relations between employers and employes must be invested with a religious ideal. People must be convicted of their economic sins, must be brought to industrial repentance, must be converted and become Christian in their business and workaday lives if religion is to be a real part of every one's life.

CHRISTIANITY AND MAKING A LIVING.

If Christianity does not or cannot interpret itself in the terms of economic values and in the terms of industrial relationships, then it is not and cannot be the religion for an industrial age. But it is so interpreting itself as never before. It has created the prevailing discontent with lower conditions. It has inspired the demand for higher standards of living. And it will not cease until our way of making a living is not only consistent with, but tributary to the Way of Life.

This means that it is the religious duty of the Church to take and impart an interest in making farming more profitable, the country school more effective, the roads better, the farmhouses healthier and more convenient, the family life on the farm and in the rural town happier and cheerier, the private and public recreation and amusements more attractive and wholesome. Thus only will the countryside hold its young people and retain its population. Thus only will farming and the business of the country town be kept prosperous. Thus only will the Church itself prosper.

3. Again the Church stands between the one and the many, to make the interest of each one the concern of all, and the common interests the concern of each. This needs to be done especially in the country. Farm life isolates. It is easier to detach one's self and live to one's self in the country than in the city. But the detached individual, the detached family, the detached community, the detached nationality, are always in danger. They are in danger not only of being selfish, but of losing interest in themselves and their own progress. As we mingle with one another we gain self-respect, ambition, public spirit, and become more normal. One person is no person. Life is made up of its relationships. Every one of us is for the most part what others have made us. The community makes the citizen, and just as surely shapes the child.

So also the citizen helps make the community what it is. One class helps another and yet is helped by it. Trade makes the town, yet the town makes the trade. Those who think only of building up their trade and let the community—its school and church, its health and recreation—run down, are taking care of their own interest with one hand, while they are pulling the ground out from under them with the other hand.

"NO MAN LIVETH UNTO HIMSELF."

The old Bible is right therefore in proclaiming, "No man liveth unto himself." It follows therefore that it is neither enterprising or public-spirited, either to our own interests nor to those of our town or neighborhood to say, "I am in business for myself." "I can do what I please with my own."

Religion strikes the balance between one's duty to himself and to others, each one's self-interest and interest in others. It identifies them. So the church, especially in the country, should inspire the community spirit, should interpret the ways in which each of its members, and all of them together, can promote the prosperity and pleasure, the peace and progress of the community. If the community is to be for the church, the church must be for the community.

This lays upon the churches the duty of thinking more of their communities than of themselves. The church should think less of building itself up out of the community than of building the community up out of itself.

This means that where there are too many churches in any one community, some of them should sacrifice themselves by joining with others to make fewer and stronger churches. This they should do not only for the sake of the community, but quite as much for the sake of the common cause which they profess to serve. Why should there not be community church buildings and community church memberships, constituting only so many church centers as can be strong and can serve the community best? If they cannot unite to worship together, or to confess one common creed, or form a single organization, why cannot all the churches of a community federate to do together the things which the people need, and which the churches working apart can neither furnish nor secure? Thus only in many a town and neighborhood can good schools be sustained, clean and attractive amusements be provided, a happy advancing social life be promoted—all of which are as tributary to religion as religion should be tributary to them.

4. Last of all, the Church stands between personal religion and local government, between piety and politics, to mediate between them; not so much to keep the peace, because there ought often to be war, but to make piety express itself in politics, to bring personal religion to the protection and promotion of the local government. The divorce between them is fatal to each. The Church can no more succeed if the local government fails than it can succeed if the Church fails. They stand and rise, or fall together.

TEAM WORK FOR COUNTRY CHURCHES.

Neither country churches nor country communities succeed unless they help each other to the success which only teamwork can bring. Politics is as sacred as religion, because it should be a part of religion itself. But we have been talking of "dirty politics," as though taking part in government was itself defiling. It is because we have only taken part in party politics, instead of government itself, that all our local governments have so long been inefficient, if not corrupt. It is because we have thus let dirty men rule and ruin our politics. It is because clean men do not fulfil their citizenship.

There needs to be a religious revival of civic patriotism. The churches can stir it up, or pray it down, without being partisan. They have a right to be thus patriotic. Their ministers have the right and duty to be statesmanlike.

Of course, it will cost a cross for the churches to be and do all this. There will be some temporary loss, but greater permanent gain. But if they take not up their cross, their cross of civic, social, industrial self-denial—they can neither follow nor be worthy of their Master. If they are not willing thus to lose their life, they cannot find it. Until they bear their cross they will not wear their crown.

Liberty H. Bailey, as quoted in The Survey magazine from Rural Manhood, thus sums it all up:

In some great day
The Country Church
Will find its voice
And it will say:
"I stand in the fields
Where the wide earth yields
Her bounties of fruit and grain;
Where the furrows turn
Till the plowshares burn
As they come round and round again;
Where the workers pray
With their tools all day
In sunshine and shadow and rain.

"And I bid them tell
Of the crops they sell
And speak of the work they have done;
I speed every man
In his hope and plan
And follow his day with the sun;
And grasses and trees,
The birds and the bees
I know and feel ev'ry one.

"And out of it all
As the seasons fall
I build my great temple alway;
I point to the skies
But my footstone lies
In the commonplace work of the day;
For I preach the worth
Of the native earth—
To love and to work is to pray."

What is Salvation?

BY FRANK E. BOREN.

SAVED from what? A very old-fashioned type of traditional theology divided the unseen universe into two great sections. One was "up" beyond the stars somewhere. The other was sometimes euphemistically called the "lower regions." One was a place of endless delight. The other was a place of everlasting torment. To be saved was to escape the latter, and to go to the former at death.

Said a woman to me concerning her twelve year old daughter who was considering church membership, "I am afraid she is too young. I have no fears for her safety. If she should die now I am sure she would go to heaven even if she has not been baptized." I quite agreed with her concerning the safety of her daughter, still I could think of many valid reasons, apart from this, for the young girl, with awakening religious life, to enter into the fellowship of the church.

It is far from my thought to belittle the spirtual realities associated in thought with the words "heaven" and "hell," but still I do not believe that salvation is a matter of locality. The editor of a religious paper, commenting upon the repudiation, by a certain preacher, of the traditional idea of hell, said, "If there is no hell, what is there to be saved from?" Well, we might be saved from our animalism, from our selfishness, from our materialism, from our sordidness and pessimism, from greed and dishonesty, from low ideals, from despair, from ignorance, from various kinds of meanness too numerous to mention. And he who is in the toils of these things may well cling to his doctrine of hell, though perchance not the old-fashioned kind.

SAVED TO WHAT?

But it is not so much the purpose of Jesus to save us from something, as to save us TO and FOR something. Salvation is a positive thing. Jesus did not say to the woman, "Thou art saved from thy disease," but, "Thy faith hath made thee whole."

It is important to save the fruit from destructive insects, from storm, drouth, and the many things which menace its life; but the fruit is truly saved only when it develops into what God intended it to be. It is only the perfect apple that is completely saved. If a field produces fourteen bushels of corn to the acre, when the potential yield is two hundred and fourteen bushels, two hundred bushels have been lost. Compare the man you are with the man you might have been, and you have the measure of your loss. Compare the man you are with the man you are capable of becoming and you will have some conception of what it means to be saved.

Salvation is self-realization. We are saved when we escape the lower possibilities of our natures and achieve the higher possibilities. We are potentially saved when we set our faces toward the goal and ally ourselves with the forces which make for betterment. We are saved in reality when we have achieved the kind of manhood or womanhood to which God has called us.

"I AM WHAT I AM."

The Greek word of the New Testament is very expressive. It means "to be made whole." To the woman whom he had healed Jesus said, "Thy faith hath made thee whole." To the woman rescued from shame to purity and love he said, "Thy faith hath saved thee." The Greek word is the same in both cases. How expressive that word "wholesome." To use it of any one is to say the finest thing you can say about him. To live a wholesome life is the highest achievement. Wholesome thoughts, wholesome feelings, wholesome ideals, wholesome living—these express our best conceptions. It is to this wholesomeness of life that Jesus desires to save us.

With this view of salvation we came face to face with reality. There is no dodging the issue when a man looks at himself as he really is and finds in what he sees the answer to his question, Am I saved? The imagination has pictured St. Peter, with his keys dangling at his side, standing guard at the gates of the heavenly city. As legalists we hope when we approach the gates to be admitted because we have complied with certain "terms." As mystics, we hope to find a welcome because of certain emotional experiences which we have taken as signs of God's acceptance. As dogmatists, we hope to gain an entrance because of our sound theology.

But how much better to turn from fancy to fact, from unreality to reality. We may be tricked by our emotions. We may be mistaken in our theology. We may err in our religious ceremonies, but the fact remains, I am what I am. You are what you are. This alone concerns us. Is your life a wholesome life, or is it dominated by wholesome ideals? Then you are on the way toward salvation. You are mean, selfish, narrow, stingy, impure, hard hearted. It is useless to talk to me about your correct beliefs, about the scripturalness of your baptism, about the wonders of your emotional experiences. I must take you for what you are. God must take you for what you are. And, most pertinent of all, you, who cannot escape your own company, must take yourself for what you are. You must become something different or delude yourself with an empty fiction. You are generous, unselfish, pure, kind, just, loving, morally alert. These are manifest facts. It is useless for any one to remind me that your theology is unsound, that you have not been baptized the right way, that you have experienced no emotional upheaval. I prefer to take you for what you are. God will take you for what you are. And you, who must be forever your own intimate companion, must take yourself for what you are.

Nothing else counts but character. Other things are important only as they contribute to character.

SAVED FOR SOMETHING.

A man is saved FOR something. He is a social being. He cannot expand to the fullest measure of his manhood except in social fellowship and service. Apart from his fellows his manhood shrinks. For the sake of our fellows, for the sake of the Kingdom of God, we should strive to achieve the highest grade of efficiency as parents, church members, citizens. In thus losing ourselves we find ourselves. Salvation involves all this, and in order to be saved we must have a vision as large as the kingdom of God and a faith in it which dominates the life. We must repent of our social as well as our private sins. Our baptism must be a dedication to humanity. Our reward—the progressive discovery of what it means to a man.

Earth and Infinity

There's part o' the sun in an apple;
  There's part o' the moon in a rose;
There's part of the flaming pleiades
  In every leaf that grows.
Out of the vast comes nearness;
  For the God whose love we sing
Lends a little of his heaven
  To every living thing.

DR. AINSLIE'S VISIT.

ON TUESDAY evening of last week the Disciples' Club of the University of Chicago welcomed Rev. Peter Ainslie of Baltimore to its fellowship, and enjoyed the opportunity of hearing his message regarding Christian union and the commission on that subject, of which he is the head.

His genial personality and effective speech make him an engaging figure in any company of the Disciples. His admirable work in his own city, where his congregation has become the mother of churches, has conferred upon him the right of leadership in an important work.

When he told us of the progress made in the interest of Christian union among the churches, and of the prospect of an early convocation of the Conference on Faith and Order, it was easy to see that not a little of the credit for so timely an effort must be given to him and the small company of like-minded men in the different churches, whose hearts God has touched.

We are grateful for this visit, and the illuminating presentation of the theme. We are also grateful to Dr. Ainslie himself as a representative Disciple; for his fellowship with choice spirits of other names but of like faith; for the "Christian Union Quarterly," which he issues in the interest of the same great idea; and for the promise held out by every such effort that the day of closer fellowship among all the people of God is drawing nearer.

THE DISCIPLES' EDUCATIONAL PROGRAM.

IT IS gratifying to note the progress now being made among Disciples in unifying and systematizing their educational interests.

The recent meeting of the Disciples' Board of Education, at Indianapolis, was highly significant, both in the spirit of co-operation manifested by the several institutions, and in the matter and method of the discussions.

There is growing up among our best institutions of learning a disposition to modify their claims and professions in accordance with their actual educational status.

With reference to the granting of degrees, for example, there was manifest in this meeting the utmost concern to preserve high standards. A recommendation was adopted upholding the strictly graduate character of the Bachelor of Divinity degree, and urging that it be not conferred by any of our institutions except such as are really able to offer a well-rounded graduate curriculum of theological studies under such conditions as are recognized in real graduate institutions.

It was noted that even our best institutions for ministerial training have been accustomed to allow one year's undergraduate work toward the Bachelor of Divinity degree. This, however, was recognized as a concession to present exigencies, and not as a practice to be ideally upheld.

In view of the magnificent equipment found in the several great centers of religious learning in the United States the wisdom of any of our schools attempting to give a full theological curriculm is very doubtful.

At the best their degrees can never represent the values of graduate training in the atmosphere of such foundations as Union, Harvard, Yale and the University of Chicago.

If our schools would content themselves with giving a degree actually corresponding to the nature and scope of the training given, and urge the stronger students to go on to the greater seminaries, they would contribute more to the elevation of ministerial standards than under the present system.

It is evident that the tendency is in this direction. C.M.S

WHO BELIEVES IN CHRISTIAN UNION?

IT IS interesting to notice how much men's beliefs and doctrines are influenced by their general circumstances in life. This may be illustrated in reference to union.

Probably the vital spirit of union depends upon the total life experience more than upon a set of correct ideas or finished arguments. The Disciples have always had the phrases and the formulae of union but where is the spirit of union most genuine and powerful?

Probably it is strongest among the foreign missionaries. They are so close to the open sores of the world where Christianity needs all its energy and resources for healing ministry that they feel more keenly the weakening, blighting effects of division. Half their pleas for Christianity are hindered by the presence of these differing sects. Then the missionaries have the blessed opportunity to work together in a comradeship with men of various denominations which magnifies essentials and minimizes irrelevant things.

Education is another influence which broadens men's sympathies, broadens their understanding of human nature and instills tolerance. Colleges help to give men vision of the important realities. They do not lessen enthusiasm but they direct it to larger and more essential interests. Other things being equal, the better educated ministers among the Disciples are the most loyal to the early ideals of union and fellowship among all Christian people.

Another influence conducive to union is a cosmopolitan community life. This has been felt on the frontier and in the cities. Some of the most radical experiments in the interests of union have been made in New York and Cleveland and Chicago and Denver.

Rural communities afford the opportunity and experience the need for union but their populations are not usually cosmopolitan enough or possessed of the leadership sufficient to promote vigorous union sentiment. Where the need and the leadership have been present, however, rural churches have often developed fine examples of effective union.

A COMMONWEALTH IN MOURNING.

AN UNIQUE and singularly impressive gathering was the Community Memorial Meeting in honor of Professor Charles Richmond Henderson, held in the Chicago Auditorium Sunday afternoon, April 11.

Four or five thousand persons were present, and twenty-eight distinct groups of civic, religious, social, educational and industrial interests were represented in the committee on arrangements. Among these were the City, County and State governments; the United Charities of Chicago; the Chicago Federation of Churches; the Federation of Labor; the Jewish Churches of Chicago; the Catholic Churches of Chicago; and the American Prison Association.

Peter J. O'Callaghan, Superior of the Paulist Fathers, spoke upon the significance of the occasion, and upon behalf of Jew, Catholic and Protestant laid claim to the heritage of this great life. Many of his sentences were striking: "Professor Henderson sought out in the creeds of Christendom not definitions but things"; "How learned he was in the things most men cared not to know"; "He gave himself a ransom for the people"; "The things worth living and dying for are the things that alone can make us one." The eloquent priest closed by reading Jesus' great prayer for the unity of his Disciples.

Shailer Mathews, speaking upon "The Religious Motive in the Life of Dr. Henderson," said that he "combined the scientific spirit with a fundamentally religious motive, and out of his religious motive came the sacrificial quality of his life."

Miss Jane Addams emphasized Dr. Henderson's comprehensive knowledge of the problems he sought to solve, and his social courage which so often enabled him to take the side of the "under-dog" even at the price of being misunderstood.

Other speakers were President George E. Vincent of the University of Minnesota; Graham Taylor and Rabbi Emil G. Hirsch. Each of them from different angles paid the highest tributes to Professor Henderson's work and worth.

Governor Dunne presided.

That which chiefly interests The Christian Century in this notable occasion is the bearing of it upon the task which the Disciples of Christ have set for themselves.

Here is a man who has had no concern with theological or ecclesiastical bases of religious unity. His whole life has been an earnest, sane and persistent effort to feed the hungry, clothe the naked and visit the sick and imprisoned.

Now come thronging together Jews, Catholics, Protestants, Ethical Culturists and Agnostics, forgetful of their differences, and uniting in the great affirmation that the life and character of Charles Richmond Henderson represented religion pure and undefiled.

Surely social service in the spirit of Christ is the great highway to the goal of unity. "Art thou he that cometh or look we for another?" "Go tell John the things which ye have seen and heard; the blind receive their sight, the lame walk, the lepers are cleansed, and the deaf hear, the dead are raised up, the poor have good tidings preached unto them."

The Messiah's program had special reference to the "Dependent, Defective and Delinquent" classes. Professor Henderson's first notable book bore the above title, and his working social theory was that society must solve the problems of poverty, disease and crime before civilization can triumph, and the kingdom of God come. CHICAGO'S ELECTION.

THE UNEXPECTED happened. There was a veritable landslide for Thompson and the entire Republican ticket. Mr. Thompson himself had a plurality of 141,000 votes over Sweitzer, his Democratic opponent.

Various explanations are given of this tremendous reversal of political advantage.

The larger percentage of the women's vote went to Thompson; just why, it is hard to say. Whether it was Mr. Thompson's personality, record, or platform that attracted them to his support no one can convincingly say.

Many think the result in no way attributable to Mr. Thompson's virtues, or issues, but rather to Mr. Sweitzer's misfortune in his family, business, and religious alignments. It was widely claimed and believed that if elected Sweitzer would be controlled by Roger Sullivan and the public utilities corporations. Mr. Sweitzer is related to Mr. Sullivan by marriage.

It was further claimed that Sweitzer's being a Catholic had made a special appeal for the support of that church on purely religious grounds. Many believe that the large vote against him was in the nature of a rebuke for the injection of the religious issue into his campaign.

Others think that the Harrison Democrats took the opportunity of evening up scores with the Sullivan faction, and systematically knifed the Democratic ticket.

Still others interpret the result as an indication of the returning power of the national Republican party. In this case it is practically certain that the wish is father to the thought.

The factors in the local situation are so pronounced as to render any appeal to the general political situation quite gratuitous. C. M. S.

A CLEAN CHICAGO.

A MOVEMENT is just forming in Chicago to secure an effective organization of the uplift forces of the city for cleaning up the city physically, politically and morally.

In particular, some of the objects are: to clean the air of smoke; clean the streets of dirt; clean pool-rooms and dance-halls of vice; clean the saloons of law-breaking and crime; clean the schools and police force of politics; clean the ordinances of jokers; clean the council of dishonesty and incompetency; clean the annual budgets of deficits; clean the public utilities of special privileges; clean the city and country administrations of slothfulness and favoritism.

The meetings which have been held have included representatives of the social settlements, men's clubs, women's clubs, churches, temperance societies, labor groups and schools.

Three methods of work are contemplated: to make investigations and report the facts, to create sentiment and intelligent interest in such matters among the good people of all classes, and to secure hundreds of thousands of members who endorse the foregoing plan.

The real task is to get the good forces of the city to co-operate on a common platform and prevent the dominance of single interests, however worthy.

In talking with individuals about the plan one is impressed with their absolute agreement that it should be done and with their equally uniform opinion that it is impractical. They say the politicians will ignore it as long as they can and then, if it continues, will absorb it. They say it is likely to be an ephemeral movement, begun under the excitement of the recent campaign for mayor and disappearing when that impulse has subsided. They say there is too much femininity and clericalism in it and too little practical sense and experience. But all say it OUGHT to succeed!

There is here a challenge to all good people and especially to all idealists who believe that what ought to be can be. Have the good people of Chicago capacity for the vision, the patience and the common sense which this fine dream of a clean city demands?

THE UNEMPLOYMENT PROBLEM.

THERE has just appeared an article in the American Journal of Sociology, written by Professor Charles R. Henderson after he was compelled to give up his work and seek rest in the south. The title of the article is, "How Chicago Met the Unemployment Problem in 1915."

The desperate situation confronted by Chicago last winter in which a very large number of men and women were without employment, led to the appointment by the mayor of a commission to conduct special studies and to report remedial measures. Dr. Henderson was made the head of that commission and did very much of the work undertaken by it.

One of the items in its labor was the preparation of a bill now pending before the state legislature, proposing a number of steps toward the relief of this unhappy situation and the prevention of its recurrence. This bill is appended to the article referred to.

Among its provisions is the improvement of the free state employment bureaus so that they may reach a modern standard of efficiency and become the starting point of the new system.

It is further provided that this work shall be under the merit system of appointment and promotion, to free it from partisan influences, to secure the best qualifications among its officers, and to protect the employes from spoilsmen.

The necessity of having sufficient means to carry out the plan was urged, and the placing of the management in the hands of such as were familiar with the interests both of capital and labor.

One impressive feature is the recognition by employers of labor, especially large corporations, of the duty of such adjustment of their contracts as shall obviate as far as possible the dangers of unemployment so keenly experienced during the past year. In the conferences held prior to the drafting of the bill this item was recognized as important and practicable.

It is the earnest hope of the friends of the bill that it may be passed not only upon its merits, but as a monument to Prof. Henderson's untiring service in behalf of a better social order.

THE GAME OF GOLF.

THE season for golf is opening. The carefully nurtured "greens" are brilliant in the common field of green. The eager players follow the flight of their little white balls with wonderful eagerness and devotion. Every morning they come back to the game with renewed hopes. At the end of the day they have calculated the causes of errors and are determined to lower the score tomorrow. It is like life itself. After all our foozles and misfortunes we keep coming back. Our friends are in much the same luck and we have company in our joys and sorrows all the way.

Let this be thy whole endeavor, this thy prayer, this thy desire —that thou mayest be stripped of all selfishness, and with entire simplicity follow Jesus only.—Thomas a Kempis.

Religious Revival in France.

The collapse of religion, so widely heralded by magazine writers, seems not to have happened in France. It is impossible to travel anywhere in France today, says a writer in the Atlantic Monthly, without being deeply impressed by the manifestations of religious fervor widespread among all classes of the people. The phenomenon is no less remarkable in Paris than in the provinces. Rene Bazin, of the Academic Francaise, writing on the subject in the Echo de Paris, states an indisputable fact when he says that the churches are daily attracting greater numbers of worshipers and communicants, that in many parts of the country the old custom of family prayers has been spontaneously revived, that public and private devotions are manifestly approved by public opinion, and that "the road to church has been resumed by many who may have ceased for a time to tread it, but had never forgotten the way." This religious movement is particularly marked in the army; "thousands upon thousands of soldiers, before starting for the front, have gone to confession and asked the blessing of the church."

World Conference Plans are Furthered.

The Protestant Episcopal church is promoting a plan for a World Conference on Faith and Order which shall include Protestants, Anglicans, Roman Catholics and Eastern Orthodox churches. No date has been set, but the consent of the various great organizations is being secured, and when this preliminary work is done a time will be arranged. Each denomination is encouraged to appoint its own commission to confer with the Protestant Episcopal commission. Organizations offering support to the movement recently are the Congregational Union of Australasia, the United Free Church of Scotland, the Churches of Christ in Great Britain, the Queensland Conference of the Methodist Church of Australasia, and the Church of England of the Province of South Africa. The Protestant Episcopal church is issuing a book of prayers for unity which is being distributed to those who may desire it.

Christian Science Before Legislature.

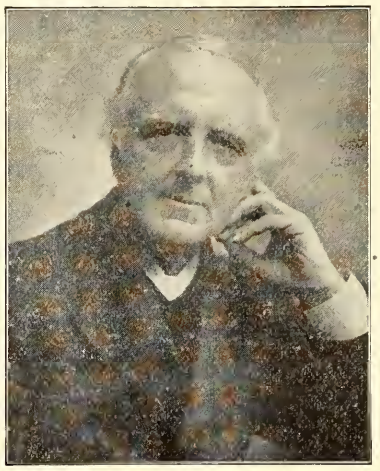
A bill was recently considered in the New York legislature allowing Christian Science practitioners the same standing before the law as the doctors of the established schools of practice. It was supported by a number who were not Christian Scientists on the ground of religious liberty. It was opposed by others on the ground that public health regulations are not to be left to individualistic action but are always a matter of social concern. The bill was decisively defeated recently and will not appear again in this legislature.

The Bible in the Public Schools.

A bill is pending in the legislature of Ohio which would make compulsory the reading of the Bible in every public school each day without comment other than grammatical, historical or geographical explanation. A written request from a parent might procure the right of a pupil to absent himself during such reading. The bill also provides for some courses of study in the Bible and for a system of credits for such study. The fate of the bill will be of great interest to all friends of religious education.

A Call to Dr. F. B. Meyer.

It has been noted in these columns that Rev. Len Broughton has left Christ church, London, and gone to Knoxville, Tenn. Now comes word that this church has called Dr. F. B. Meyer to the pastorate. Dr. Meyer is now far past the prime of life



Dr. F. B. Meyer, who at an advanced age has been called to one of London's leading churches and the call was not quite unanimous. It is now twenty years since Dr. Meyer had a London pastorate and it will be a significant thing if he has the courage to undertake this difficult task in the seventies.

Books for the Minister.

The movements to reach the isolated minister with books to lift him out into the movements of the world's thought are growing more significant. The American Institute of Sacred Literature of the University of Chicago has made up some traveling libraries organized around the theme "Significant Tendencies in Recent Theological Thought," and these are sent out at a very low cost to those who are interested. The libraries were purchased by gifts from persons interested in this kind of work.

Preachers at University of Chicago.

The university preachers for the month of April at the University of Chicago are as follows: Dr. John Ellington White, of the Second Baptist church in Atlanta, Georgia; Rev. Harry E. Fosdick, of the First Baptist church in Montclair, New Jersey, and Bishop Charles P. Anderson, of Chicago.

More Chaplains for the Navy.

During the next three years the Secretary of the Navy will appoint twenty-eight or thirty new chaplains in the United States navy. Congress has provided for an increase from twenty-four to fifty-two naval chaplains, and Secretary Daniels is giving his personal attention to the selection of men for this important service. He hopes to appoint fifteen or more of the additional number before July, 1916. Ministers not exceeding thirty or thirty-two years of age of good character, education and health, with some experience in preaching and pastoral work, are invited to make application. To be chaplain of a battleship or cruiser and care for the spiritual needs of from 800 to 1,000 men is to have opportunity for a great service. Circulars giving information will be furnished. Denominational approval will be required as a prerequisite to appointment. Ministers of all denominations are eligible. The Associate Secretary of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America, 1114 Woodward building, Washington, D. C., will be glad to receive and answer inquiries.

Deaconess Movement Significant.

One of the significant features of the work of the Methodist Episcopal church in America is the deaconess work. There are 1,067 of these consecrated women and six millions of dollars is invested in deaconess institutions, in the United States. The first woman to receive the Iron Cross of Germany for distinguished heroism is said to be a Methodist deaconess serving as a nurse on the battlefields of Poland.

Bible Pictures for Missionaries.

One of the activities of the World's Sunday-school Association is supplying addresses to which Bible picture cards may be sent on the foreign field. The waste material around many Sunday-schools is thus made available for the work in distant lands, and often a helpful relationship is established between a missionary and some local group of Christian workers in this country. The lists of missionary addresses are sent out from the offices of the association, at 216 Metropolitan Tower, New York.

Largest Presbyterian Seminary.

McCormick Theological Seminary, of Chicago, is now the largest Presbyterian seminary in America. The total number of students in this school last year, including fellows and post-graduates, was 191 and there are forty-six in this year's graduating class. The popularity of the school is in part due to its location in the heart of a great city where city problems are studied by the laboratory method, and in part to the mediating theological position of the school, the institution remaining in good standing with the denomination, and yet providing its students with modern conceptions of religion.

Memorial Service to Dr. Henderson.

In the memorial service to the late Charles R. Henderson, at the Auditorium Theater, Chicago, April 11, a Protestant, a Catholic and a Jew spoke from the same platform. Dr. Emil G. Hirsch, of Sinai Temple, declared that Dr. Henderson had the characteristic virtues ascribed to Moses in the Talmud. Rev. Peter J. O'Callaghan, a Roman Catholic, gave a tribute to the memory of Dr. Henderson. Dr. Shailer Mathews spoke more intimately of the religious life of the departed leader.

R. J. Campbell Writes Prayer-book.

Rev. R. J. Campbell, the celebrated "new theology" preacher of the City Temple, London, has undertaken to compile for the Congregational Union of England and Wales, a "Book of Prayers for Daily Readings," to be ready by Christmas. Mr. Campbell was much criticised for a time but is again "persona grata" with his denominational leaders.

Conferences on the Immigrant.

A series of conferences concerning work among immigrants on the Pacific Coast is being held in six cities of the Coast under the auspices of the Home Missions Council. The first conference was held at Los Angeles on February 18 and 19. Other cities in which conferences are to be held are: San Francisco, Fresno, Portland, Seattle and Spokane.

Will Hold World's Bible Congress.

The American Bible Society has acceded to the request of the Panama-Pacific Exposition to hold in San Francisco a World's Bible Congress. The date has been fixed for August 1-4. President Wilson has accepted the honorary presidency of the Congress. The actual president will be Mr. James Wood, president of the society. In extent of influence, and in diversity of testimony concerning the power, place and influence of the Bible from many great religious bodies of the world this Congress will be unlike any ever held. While the Turkish empire is at war, the Synod of the Eastern Orthodox Greek Church met at Constantinople. The Patriarch of Constantinople informed the Synod that he had been invited by the American Bible Society to take part in this Congress. The Synod cordially accepted and named to act with him the Bishop of Nicea, the leading member of the Synod; the Bishop of Sardes, who is the Director of the Greek National College and the Bishop of Seleuceia, the Director of the Theological Seminary at Halki. In hardly less warlike circumstances the Rev. Dr. Abraham Kuyper of Holland also accepts. He was once prime minister, and is now a senator and editor of a newspaper. He was also the founder and first president of the University of Amsterdam.

Bishop Hartzell Travels Through Africa.

The tour of Bishop Hartzell through Africa has been noted. Word has been received of his safety, and the favorable progress of his journey. Bishop Hartzell writes from Lourenco Marques, East Africa, under date of February 19: "Since reaching Cape Town, December 23, I have traveled a good deal over 4,000 miles by rail and along the coast by small steamers. The farthest point north was in Central Africa, in the Belgian Congo, where I organized a new mission. In spite of war conditions affecting railway and steamship travel as well as making complications in the administration of the work and also the worst rainy season South Africa has seen for twenty years, I have been preserved in health and strength and visited all the work south of the equator except Loanda, on the West Coast. We will sail from here next Wednesday by way of Cape Town, reaching Loanda March 8 and go into the interior 300 miles. Then to Madeira, London and America. Hope to reach New York in May."

Motto for Endeavor Convention.

The World's Christian Endeavor convention which will be held in Chicago July 7-12 will have as its motto, "Trusting in the Lord for Strength, I Will." This is an amplification of Chicago's motto, "I Will." The principal sessions of the convention will be held in the Coliseum, the capacity of which is fifteen thousand.

Dr. Jowett Will Visit Native Land.

Dr. J. H. Jowett, the celebrated Presbyterian preacher of New York, plans to visit England a few weeks each summer. It was feared in England that he might not make the trip this year but he is being booked for various engagements over there so it is apparent that he will go. Dr. Jowett will supply the pulpit for Rev. G. Campbell Morgan, and will also speak in the City Temple for Dr. R. J. Campbell.

Nonconformist Gets a Degree.

Cambridge university, in England, has always refused to give a degree to a theological student who was not a member of the Church of England. This rule has recently been abolished. The distinction of being the first nonconformist scholar to receive recognition by this university belongs to Rev. W. West Holdsworth, M. A., until recently of Sidney Sussex college. He has written abundantly in the field of New Testament criticism.

A Vacation Bible School.

What to do with the child in the long summer vacation is a problem of many households. One solution is the Vacation Bible School Movement. The program of the movement is: To promote the social welfare of children irrespective of race or creed by giving them competent leaders and teachers, suitable and happy occupations, systematic oversight in games, good songs, and, above all, to combine with this program training and practical Bible teaching, the supreme need of childhood. To promote the community use of the church buildings in cities and rural districts for child welfare based on broad, nonsectarian lines, especially where public schools are closed in summer. To employ in this field alert college men and women inspired by the spirit of social service and fitted to be efficient leaders of children in worship, work and play. The daily vacation Bible schools enrolled 64,535 children in 1914, as compared with 5,083 in 1907.

Administer American War Relief.

The money raised for the war victims in England by the Christian Herald is being administered by a committee in London of which Rev. A. C. Dixon, formerly of Chicago, is honorary secretary. Mr. Dixon is now pastor of Metropolitan Temple. One widow appeared for aid with two children and she was twenty-one years old. Her second child was born after its father's death. Such a case is given $2.40 a week. Many children are being put into the Wesleyan home, each child costing the fund a total of fifty dollars. Earl Gray, former Governor-General of Canada, is a member of the committee.

Sunday Newspapers in England.

England has never had a regular Sunday newspaper until the present war times. Fifteen years ago The Daily Mail and the Daily Telegraph started Sunday issues but a storm of protest broke out and the Sunday paper was discontinued. At the outbreak of the present war, the Times issued some Sunday papers, and there was no protest, but stockholders of the paper put pressure on the management and the Times discontinued this service. Now two London papers are using their machinery to put out the pictorial Sunday paper after the American fashion, but they have adroitly avoided using the name of the week-day paper on the Sunday issue. It is said that the Sunday issue is proving popular and eight million copies a week are being printed. Religious journals in Great Britain resist this innovation as tending to increase Sunday labor and to break down the religious sanctions of the Lord's Day.

The Welsh Church Act.

The postponement of the operation of an act to disestablish the Anglican church in Wales is being sharply criticised by the nonconformists of England. A letter of Mr. McKenna to the North Monmouthshire Liberal Association has failed to convince. Mr. McKenna says: "As a condition of the postponement we have a binding agreement that the ecclesiastical corporations shall be dissolved and national endowments transferred to the Welsh Commissioners. A mere repeal of the Act becomes valueless; nothing less than a new Act of establishment and endowment—an unthinkable proposal, in my judgment, in the present time—would be required before the religious liberty which Wales has at length conquered could be destroyed. The other side will have gained a temporary postponement, and we shall have gained a certainty, and it is no small advantage that these results should be obtained by agreement."

Veteran Ministers Organize.

The aged preachers of the Methodist Episcopal church now have a "G. A. R. of the ministry." They are organized into the Veterans of the Cross Fellowship. They have adopted a button which they wear, and there is a ritual for the burial of these men which is used when desired. The organization is simple in character and furnishes means for these old men to maintain their fellowship in declining years.

Did the Whale Swallow Jonah?

Perhaps all admit that the whale swallowed Jonah, but whether this story is legend, allegory, or history, is the disputed question. Bibliotheca Sacra for April contains a new explanation by Professor Macloskie and endorsed by the editor, showing that between the great mouth and the thorax of the whale is an air chamber large enough to hold a man and afford him the breath of life for a considerable time. It seems to be a new discovery, and it is suggested that the whale is accustomed to hide its young in this chamber, in time of stress and bad weather. At all events, it is claimed that "science" now sanctions the idea that Jonah had the physical experience which has been ascribed to him by conservative interpreters. Interest in the story of the great fish may have obscured the spiritual message of this great book of the Old Testament, but it has at least quickened the wit and sharpened the ingenuity of any number of apologists.

Lutherans Get Together.

The Lutherans of America are a mighty host, numbering 2,454,970. They are broken up, however, into twenty-one sects and separate organizations, partly on racial lines and partly on doctrinal, though all acknowledge the Augsburg Confession as a doctrinal standard. The Lutherans held a meeting at Toledo, O., April 14, at which most of these twenty-one sects were represented. At this assembly a definite effort was made in the direction of Lutheran unity, and this is said to have been, in many respects, the most important Lutheran gathering ever held in this country. A federation of the Lutherans would be an effective step in the direction of the unity of the church.

Dr. Jowett in Episcopal Pulpit.

Dr. J. H. Jowett preached in an Episcopal pulpit in New York on Good Friday. He came at the invitation of Bishop Courtney, and took part in the three hour service at St. James Episcopal church.

Here and There

Our Tendency to Revert to the Fathers.

With such a tendency no one will find fault, unless it is overworked, and their opinions made the test of truth for all time to come. If they teach us to be faithful to the demands of our generation as they were to theirs, they will have done a noble work. But if the fathers are anchors to our progress, if they are used to frighten us out of the paths in which the noblest souls of the age are walking, if they are exalted almost to the seat of the infallible and used as a background for the astute to minimize the virtues and to magnify the faults of their sons, then the example of the fathers is pernicious.

When we are constantly reminded of the evil on which we have fallen, and how faultless were the days of our fathers, it is in order to challenge the trend of such statements and to use interrogation points freely. We are willing to look upon all the ideals of those days as freely as those who would have us go back to them since they cannot be brought to us, but we are not unmindful of the faults and follies of those days. They were golden days, it is true, but days of bitterness, days of apostolic blows and knocks, days that are gone and, we hope, never to return.

They were the days when noble men berated each other over the question of the use of instruments of music in the worship, whether Sunday-school helps should be used or not, whether missionary organizations were Scriptural—days when men talked of offering strange fire on the altar, of tampering with the ark, of the sin of big "D" and the blessedness of little "d," and the days of divided churches, etc., etc.

Were they all smooth and velvety and shot through with sunlight, flowing joyously to their ending without a ripple? Were they the days when our fathers were gathered to their fathers with the pleasing delusion of the millennium dancing before their eyes?

Some one with a knowledge of the facts should write a book about those "golden days" that are numbered with the past and call it "Lest We Forget."

Disciples on the Doctrinal Side.

In the first place, we have a system of doctrine sufficiently clear to be comprehended by a child, yet not beyond the attention of the scholar. As in the case of most of the evangelical bodies, to us the Scriptures are a rule of faith and practice. We observe the ordinances as they were delivered to us. The government of the congregation is according to the democracy of the New Testament. Our reliance is upon the power of the gospel for salvation and sanctification. Liberty and loyalty are the controlling words in the life of our people. We are ready to follow all the light that breaks from God's Word. We believe in the fellowship of the Spirit, in the unity of all God's people; and we rejoice in the good work that is being done by all those who love our Lord Jesus in sincerity at home and abroad as an indication of the incoming of the kingdom. We count it a privilege to join hands with all Christian forces for the furtherance of every good work.

It is heartening that the plea for Christian union has developed in a century from a heresy into an axiom, that it is now the commonplace of almost every evangelical denomination, and that its final triumph awaits our best efforts to live it under our own roof. Above all else, we seek to exalt Christ Jesus as the King of Kings and the Lord of Lords, as the friend of the friendless, the consoler of the sorrowing, the succor of the tempted, the restrainer of the wayward, the bearer of the burdens of the overborne, the hope of the fearful, and the Savior of the lost.

In a word, we believe that Christ is mightier than the needs of the race, he can supply all that is lacking in us here, and give to every contrite soul the felicity with which heaven overflows.

A Need or Two to Think Over.

First, the problem of adjustment to the age in which we live. Second, the necessity of emphasizing our merits and allowing our faults and failures to slip into the background. Third, to live together in peace even where we know that agreements are not possible. Fourth, to allow Father Time, the arbiter of all disputes, to decide between truth and error, seeing that we can do no more than to set one by the side of the other. Fifth, to give methods a chance to establish their worth, or to give all the opportunity to see that they have no worth to be established. Sixth, to allow every man to be true to the light that is in him, knowing that no power today is equal to the task of compelling every man to walk in the steps of every other man. Seventh, to write where all may read: "One is your Master, even Christ, and all ye are brethren." With that text before us like a conquering symbol, there is no reason on earth why the Disciples should not go forward to their divine mission of helping to answer the Redeemer's prayer for unity.

If it be replied that such a course is impossible, we say that other peoples are following just such a plan, and following it gloriously. That while we have waited to compel agreements, they with disagreements have gone toward the goal of unity as if not a barrier lay between. What others have done we can do.

A Suggestion for the National Convention.

Why would it not be a good thing to devote one morning to a conference on Christian union with some of the prominent preachers and laymen on the Pacific Coast? A commission of ministers, few in number, deliberate for us on this matter. Why not arrange such a conference in which we may hear what several of our brethren in the different communions have to say on the subject?

Would it not be a good thing to see ourselves as others see us now and then, and would it not be just as good for others to see themselves as we see them at short range? But such a conference must be something more than an exchange of courtesies, more than a fraternal gathering in which blue ribbon platitudes are exchanged. It must deal with stubborn and unpleasant facts if any good is accomplished.

This is what will have to be done before union is possible. Why not this year?

The Things That Should Be Talked About.

With all our faults, and we have many of them, how much better it is to talk of the things in which all can share as a common triumph. When one takes up the Year Book, for instance, he can recall the days when it was a feeble volume. He can go back to other days when a Year Book would have been impossible, the days when it would have been the subject of many a jest to the wise, and a sign of defection to all. "The sin of numbering the people" would have fallen upon it with the weight of doom, and another heresy would have been killed. Now its records pass unchallenged on that score, and its growing bulk each year attests the fidelity which the rank and file are bringing to their work. The report of the Foreign Society is a theme for a sermon, what our conventions were before the days of our organized work, what was being done and what was not, the beginning of the missionary era among us, the growth of that work from humble origins, and the spiritual life it has imparted to our people; the facts of work accomplished, of fields entered, of difficulties overcome, of souls saved and bodies healed, and minds enlightened, of increasing liberality, of devotion to the work at home and abroad, are all inspiring items in the composition of that volume.

What is true here is equally true of the Christian Woman's Board of Missions, of our orphanages and homes for the widows, of our Ministerial Relief, of our evangelism, of our Bible schools, and of the new buildings which have been erected in many parts of the country in recent years.

So if one wishes to cast in his lot with a people who are actually doing a mighty work he can find no better opportunity than in the ranks of the Disciples.

Higher Criticism.

Colonel Arch Hughes loves to tell this story. According to his view it conveys more of the inwardness of life than the philosophy of Plato or the sensuous love of Rabindranath Tagore. Moreover, it is true. If you don't believe it's true he'll take you to Virginia and show you the new church. When the old one was torn down they found in the corner stone an ancient Bible. On the fly leaf, in a clear and legible hand, was writ the following:

Solomon and David led merry, merry lives;
They had many, many concubines, and many, many wives.
But as old age crept upon them they had many, many qualms,
So Solomon wrote the Proverbs and David wrote the Psalms.

Where Economy Should be Practiced Sparingly.

Economizing words becomes second nature to those continually engaged in telephoning and making long lists. The London Christian Life tells of a warrant officer of the ordnance department who was of a devout temperament and assisted at church service. On one occasion, announcing the hymn, he read out in a loud voice of command, "Hymn number two double O seven—'Art thou weary; ditto languid; ditto sore distressed?' "

Relative and Absolute.

The knowledge of a few sectarian theologians whose writings I read occasionally, and the demands of all our poor relations are absolute. All else is relative.

Educational Opportunities in Chicago

BY PROFESSOR NATHANIEL BUTLER.

CHICAGO is pre-eminently a city of educational opportunities. It ranks fourth or fifth among the world's metropolitan centers, but from the point of view of the student it is in many respects at the very head of the list. While it has been rightly called the most "American" of cities, Chicago is at the same time representative of every nationality in the world, and it is an object of peculiarly interesting and profitable study just because it epitomizes

Harper Memorial Library from the Quadrangles

America in the making. Experimentation is here in process in every department of human life, but it is experimentation conducted with the conservative caution of trained experts.

ART AND MUSIC.

Because of the high and remarkably varied character of its representative institutions, Chicago has become the resort of many thousands of students. The Art Institute ranks among the first of the world's centers for the study and practice of the various forms of graphic and plastic fine arts; the musical colleges have an estimated attendance of more than five thousand students; the Chicago Symphony Orchestra founded by Theodore Thomas and the Chicago Grand Opera Company are attractions of the highest cultural value; and whatever is best in the world of dramatic art is presented in the leading Chicago theaters. Moreover, every kind of experiment in musical, dramatic, and other fine arts is being carried out by different organizations in Chicago.

The great libraries of the city are conveniently located and are always accessible. There is the Public Library, with its thirty branches embracing in all a half-million volumes; the Newberry Library, with almost four hundred thousand volumes especially rich in American and musical literature; the John Crerar Library, with about three hundred thousand volumes; the Field Museum of Natural History, at present housed in the building erected for the Chicago World's Fair and standing near the University of Chicago in Jackson Park; and finally the great library of the university itself.

Chicago is particularly attractive to summer students. Its unsurpassed situation on Lake Michigan and its magnificent system of great parks and boulevards attract thousands who would no doubt be drawn to other academic sections for summer study if it were not for these natural advantages. The city of Chicago is relatively cool in summer, the average temperature being lower than that of most cities of its class, owing to the influence of Lake Michigan. In addition to the great parks and boulevards, there are scattered all over the city small parks and municipal playgrounds which are of especial interest to the student of social conditions.

To the summer student all the advantages thus far described are easily accessible. Of course the great student center for the summer is the University of Chicago. The situation of the university is far more fortunate in this respect than even the most sagacious of its founders could have foreseen. It offers in the midst of a great city the unusual advantages of broad parks and meadows, charming drives, and expanse of lake. The student is as free from interruption as in a secluded rural community. A half-hundred tennis courts are at his disposal. There are the best opportunities for swimming and rowing and motor-boating. At the same time, he is in immediate touch with all the facilities and advantages of a great and highly developed city community. He may organize his life on almost any scale of expense or economy he chooses, and the student of limited means may obtain satisfactory meals at the inexpensive cafeteria of the university and in the neighborhood.

One of the most popular and valuable of the attractions of the summer session at the University of Chicago is the elaborate system of "Open Lectures" and "Concerts," most of them accessible without extra fee and others with a very slight fee, and all of them held in the classrooms, halls, and auditoriums of the university. The summer faculty of the university is made up of a large proportion of the regular faculty and also of many eminent professors from other American and European universities. These men are heard not only in their own classrooms at the university, but in many of the open lectures. Some of the best musical talent released from the regular winter engagements is enjoyed in connection with the summer concerts. In this way some hundred and twenty-five special lectures and entertainments are afforded to members of the university community.

The holding of a summer session of the university work identical in duration, character, and credit value with that of other quarters of the university was included in the plan of the University of Chicago as first conceived in the mind of President William R. Harper, and the work was organized in the very first summer of the university's history. The summer session is divided into two short terms of about six weeks each and it is possible to complete minor courses in each of these periods. The coming summer quarter begins on June 21 and ends September 3.

Y. M. C. A. AND SOCIAL SETTLEMENTS.

Other great educational agencies operating within the limits of Chicago are the Young Men's Christian Association with its seven regular branches and six railroad departments where class work is organized in business, engineering, special vocational, and college-preparatory work. An enormous work is done by this agency as well as by the public schools of Chicago in the organization of evening classes for giving instruction in English to foreigners. The educational work of fifteen highly organized social settlements should be mentioned as well as the undergraduate and professional work of Northwestern university, the Chicago School of Civics and Philanthropy, Loyola university, and the Armour Institute of Technology.

From even this brief and partial survey of the educational side of Chicago's activities it will be seen what unusual possibilities of culture and intellectual training are open to the serious and ambitious student not only during the regular academic year but during the summer months as well.

FRIENDSHIP OF DAVID AND JONATHAN.

INTERNATIONAL UNIFORM LESSON FOR MAY 5.

1 Sam. 20. Memory Verse 42.

Golden Text: A friend loveth at all times. Proverbs 17:17.

American Standard Bible.

Copyright, 1901, by Thomas Nelson & Sons. (Used by permission.)

(32) And Jonathan answered Saul his father, and said unto him, Wherefore should he be put to death? what hath he done? (33) And Saul cast his spear at him to smite him: whereby Jonathan knew that it was determined of his father to put David to death. (34) So Jonathan arose from the table in fierce anger, and did eat no food the second day of the month; for he was grieved for David, because his father had done him shame.

(35) And it came to pass in the morning, that Jonathan went out into the field at the time appointed with David, and a little lad with him. (36) And he said unto his lad, Run, find now the arrows which I shoot. And as the lad ran, he shot an arrow beyond him. (37) And when the lad was come to the place of the arrow which Jonathan had shot, Jonathan cried after the lad and said, Is not the arrow beyond thee? (38) And Jonathan cried after the lad, Make speed, haste, stay not. And Jonathan's lad gathered up the arrows, and came to his master. (39) But the lad knew not anything: only Jonathan and David knew the matter. (40) And Jonathan gave his weapons unto his lad, and said unto him, Go, carry them to the city. (41) And as soon as the lad was gone, David arose out of a place toward the South, and fell on his face to the ground, and bowed himself three times: and they kissed one another, and wept one with another, until David exceeded. (42) And Jonathan said to David, Go in peace, forasmuch as we have sworn both of us in the name of Jehovah, saying, Jehovah shall be between me and thee, and between my seed and thy seed, forever. And he arose and departed: and Jonathan went into the city.

Verse by Verse.

BY ASA MCDANIEL.

32. Jonathan answered Saul. Jonathan seeks to reason with his father.—What hath he done? What reason can you give for taking David's life? The question arouses Saul's anger, rather than accomplishing Jonathan's purpose to allay the rage of Saul. This is an exception to the proverb, see Prov. 15:1.

33. Saul cast his spear at him. The Hebrew word translated "cast" may mean, lifted threateningly.—Whereby Jonathan knew. The fact that Saul would not spare his son's life convinced Jonathan that David's life was in jeopardy. He sees his father's determination to kill David.

34. Fierce anger. Caused by the insulting remarks, (v. 30) and his conduct (v. 32). It was an anger not of mere passion, but of wounded love.—Had done him shame. Saul had wronged David by accusing him of treasonable designs.

35. In the morning. In the morning after the second day of the feast.—At the time. Or, to the place, RVm. This is the better reading in this connection.—Appointed. The appointment was made in verses 18-23.—A little lad. Young enough not to suspect Jonathan's plan, verse 39.

36. Beyond him. Making it pass over him, RVm. Jonathan shot one or more arrows, see v. 20, and sent the boy to get them; while the lad was gathering the arrows, he shot another arrow over the lad's head, and it fell beyond him, see verse 22. The shooting of the last arrow or arrows gave Jonathan a chance to call to the boy so that David could hear the words.

37. Is not the arrow beyond thee? These words were the ones agreed upon by Jonathan and David in verse 22. These words were spoken to the lad, but intended also for David.

38. Make speed, haste, stay not. These words like the former were intended to reach David's ears though spoken to the boy. Jonathan wished also to send the boy away so he could talk with David.

39. The lad knew not anything. He knew nothing of the agreement between Jonathan and David.

41. A place toward the South. Hebrew, from beside the south, RVm. David's hiding place was south of the stone Ezel, verse 19.—Fell on his face to the ground. David showed his respect for Jonathan as his superior in Oriental fashion, falling on his knees and touching his head to the ground three times.—Kissed one another. Men in the East are more emotional than the men in the West.—David exceeded. David was more deeply moved than Jonathan.

42. Go in peace. The customary phrase for farewell.—As we have sworn. The oath is recorded in 12-17, 23.—Jehovah shall be between me and thee. To strengthen the friendship, and to keep it deepening until death: The Bedawin say: There is none between us but Allah.—Between my seed and thy seed. The solemn oath is to be binding on their posterity, and we may well believe that in after years when David drew to his court the posterity of Jonathan he related the story of these last days with his faithful friend, Jonathan. He arose and departed. We hear of the meeting of these two friends once more, 23:16-19. The whole account of this remarkable friendship should be carefully studied. It is the brightest spot in the book of Samuel. Our day and generation is in great need of such friendships.

Friendship Between Men

The Lesson in Today's Life.

BY JOHN R. EWERS.

"O Jonathan, on thy high places thou wast slain!
I am distressed for thee, my Jonathan, my brother.
Pleasant hast thou been to me, exceedingly!
Wonderful was thy love to me, passing the love of women." —David.

A man is rich not by the number of acres, of dollars or of stocks, but by the number of his friends. And yet how few real friends we have! How many men can you go to with your most intimate troubles? How many men have sympathy with your highest dreams? There's the rub. You cannot reveal your worst self nor your best self to your best friend. He cannot enter with you into the heights of your character. You have to leave him in some comfortable garden while you go a little farther—alone. Happy is he who has one real friend, with whom he may sit by the winter's fire or with whom he may stroll in the vernal woods and to whom he may breathe out his inmost soul. How tired we become of dealing in commonplaces! We long to get deeper than the weather, current politics and casual happenings.

HOW FRIENDS ARE MADE.

There are thousands of people living all about us with whom we might become friendly. Close association for a considerable period either makes you like or dislike those with whom you are thrown into contact. The first hour on ship board I met a total stranger, but before we reached Europe we were fast friends. Why, it is like going out and picking up diamonds in the street! One thousand people at this moment are eager to be your good friends. A minister finds this true. Last night here in my study one of the young men I had led into the church said, "I'd go to the ends of the earth for you." How that warmed my heart! That big, husky, rugged, honest chap—he gripped me. I would do a lot for him. Every minister has a hundred, two hundred, three hundred, a thousand good friends in every community if he stays long enough and loves folks more than telegraphic reports.

President King of Oberlin is the modern genius in friendship. He has reduced the laws of making friends to a science: (1) To make a friend you must reveal yourself to him. (2) You must meet his revelations with an answering trust, i. e., you must not betray his confidences. (3) You must each surrender to the other. (4) You must like the same things, i. e., you must have similar tastes. (5) You must give time to your friendship. Must write letters and pay visits. (6) You must always be worthy of sincere respect. Christ becomes our friend by the same rational process.

THE STIMULUS OF FRIENDSHIP.

Because of your firm faith, I kept the track,
Whose sharp set stones my strength had almost spent—
I could not meet your eyes, if I turned back,
So on I went.

Because of your strong love, I held my path,
When battered, worn and bleeding in the fight—
How could I meet your true eyes, blazing wrath?
So I kept right.

The motive of true friendship is the most powerful deterrent in the world. Nothing restrains like love. It is said that when at Harvard a young man would laugh at threatening and despise correction, President Eliot used to take him alone into his office and show him his wrong in terms of the suffering love of his mother, his father, or, perhaps, his sweetheart. If this would not change him, nothing would. To be able to look level into the eyes of your mother, your wife or your child has kept you from a thousand sins!

THE FRIENDSHIP OF MEN.

I wonder if men do not form nobler friendships than either men and women or women and women! This is a dangerous doctrine and yet may it not be that there is a stronger, higher, more disinterested knitting of soul between two men than is possible in any other combination? "Passing the love of women" was David's estimate of his allegiance to Jonathan and there was nothing weak in the ties that bound him to women as we know full well. The classical friendships of the world are between two strong men. The fellowships of lodges, of Bible classes, of Greek letter fraternities seem to indicate a particular fitness of men for friendships with men. What is purer, nobler, or more truly inspiring than your friendship for some big, healthy, broad-minded, wide-hearted man?

TEARS.

Jonathan wept. Jesus wept. David wept. Are we ashamed of our tears? They must be real. We do not want any of the kind the minister spilled when he came to the note in his sermon marked, "Cry here"! We are not attracted by the "weepy" variety of the genus homo. But there are moments for tears. Our hearts are not stones. The lakes of our eyes are not filled with the dust of commerce. We are proud of our mighty emotions.

Disciples Table Talk

F. W. Allen Delivers Commencement Addresses.

Frank Waller Allen, pastor First church, Springfield, Ill., will deliver the commencement addresses for three schools in Lexington, Kentucky, June 9 and 10. Transylvania University, College of the Bible and Hamilton college have united this year in asking the well-known Springfield minister to be their convention orator. Mr. Allen is an alumnus of Transylvania.

Drive Autos to State Convention.

Missouri is not only the state where they "have to be shown"; they also show others. The state convention committee has sent out a suggestion that all the Disciples of the state drive their autos to the convention which is to be held at Springfield, June 15-17. If this were done, there would be some congestion on the roads leading to Springfield, for Disciples in Missouri are thicker than autumn leaves and most of them are rich and drive cars.

Dedication at El Reno, Okla.

This time the church is at El Reno, Okla., and the tireless church dedicator, Geo. L. Snively, will be on the job again. The pastor of the Oklahoma congregation is Frank H. Lash. The day set for the dedication is May 9.

New Pastor for Convention City.

C. R. Piety began his ministry at Greenville, Ill., the first Lord's day in March. There have to date been three confessions and one added by statement. This church will entertain the Seventh District Convention May 18-19. Plans are being made to entertain a large convention. D. D. Burt, district evangelist, was at Greenville recently and made an interesting address in the interest of district work.

Canton, Mo., Gets Pastor.

H. G. Burgess, of New Haven, Conn., has been called to the pastorate of the church at Canton, Mo. Mr. Burgess is a graduate of Eureka college, and takes his Bachelor of Divinity degree at Yale this year. He will enter upon his duties at Canton, June 1. A part of Mr. Burgess' work will be to help in shepherding the students of Christian university.

A Good Investment.

In 1885 the Missouri Christian Missionary Society came into possession of $500, left by Mrs. Newell, of Paris, Mo., in her will, for state missions. The state mission board discussed the matter for some time as to which was better, to loan out the money and use the interest only, or use the whole amount in building up a congregation. The latter course was finally decided upon and Bowling Green, Mo., was named as the mission. It is now twenty-five years since this mission was fostered by the state mission board. The results of this home mission work are as follows: A good $4,000 house of worship, pastoral work for all these years, several hundred added to the church, a strong, active congregation in the community, and last, and possibly best, from $100 to $200 per annum contributed to our missionary work. A second and better and much larger home of worship has been built since.

Men Are Wanted.

The Temperance Board of Churches of Christ can make use of twenty or thirty men of good character, education and ability, as temperance speakers and solicitors for funds. They want representatives in most of the states of the union, and in the larger states, and those in which the Disciples of Christ are strong. They need more than one in each state. Wm. J. Wright, Franklin, Ind., is the secretary.

Disciple Congress Postponed.

A letter from Dr. Lumley, of the College of Missions, and secretary of the Disciples' Congress this year, states that the Disciples' Congress will be postponed until next year. The reasons for this decision are not stated but may be safely conjectured. The change of date of the national convention brings it very close to the state conventions and to the Congress. In these days of financial stress, "economic determinism" affects the traveling of some of our ministers. The program that was prepared had many attractive features.

News From the North.

J. R. Blunt, pastor at Winnipeg, Man., writes interestingly of the Disciples of the northwest. He says: "The national C. W. B. M. has been mothering the mission church at St. James for some time, and kept D. R. Hill there as pastor until recently, but he has gone to Toronto. . . . The First church in Winnipeg is still a mission of 75 members, in a mission building, but is born of a missionary spirit. With their money and workers they have and are still backing the St. James church (West End) and the Norwood mission Bible-school (East End). The former school is nearly as large as this, and must soon have more room provided, and the latter is having a healthy growth. Besides this the members gave for all missions in all departments last year, $10 per member, and for all causes raised over $30 per member. Every woman, with but one exception, is a member of the Circle or C. W. B. M. . . . The pastor with the help of some of the strong workers is trying to keep the fire burning at St. James by one afternoon service a week, until some better arrangements can be made. . . . There have recently been 2 accessions at St. James and 4 at First church, 4 by baptism. . . . If some strong man could cast his lot with the church at Portage la Prairie he would not only be coming to a good church but would be occupying a very important field for our cause. And if any of our strong pastors or evangelists, east or south of us, want to do a little missionary work as they go to the general convention, they could plan to start a little early, come this way and attend our provincial convention at Portage la Prairie, July 25, and as the two provincial conventions west of us will follow, they could make them, see the country and have a week to get to the national convention. If any reader of the Christian Century can answer our Macedonian call, drop me a line at 31 Evanson St., Winnipeg, and tell me when he will come and what he can give us for our program. . . . Any of our people coming this way, or knowing of our members coming to the city, should let us know the name and address and we will try to get in touch with them."

Dr. Crossfield Again Heads Education Board

The Board of Education met in Indianapolis, April 7 and 8. The attendance from our educational institutions was thoroughly representative. Two lines of discussion claimed the attention of the board, viz: The progress of the co-operative work directed by the board, and better methods of administration and instruction in our several institutions.

In our co-operative work, the reports emphasized the value of the Men and Millions Movement in promoting a greater educational conscience among the Disciples of Christ. The promotion of Education day resulted in the deepening of that conscience, and larger foundation for subsequent support of our several institutions, as well as the more adequate support of our co-operative agency, the Board of Education. Reports of offerings from churches to education have not as yet been tabulated, since the time for such complete tabulation will come at the end of the fiscal year. The board further voted to become agent for the colleges in some immediate co-operative advertising, and now have the matter in the mill.

Ministerial and missionary training, the enlistment of life, the granting of degrees, tuition and free scholarships, standards and methods of faculty appointments, all came in for a share of careful attention. The net result of the meeting was an expressed desire to continue, and to enlarge the co-operative work, and a clearer conception of the task before each executive head.

The following officers were elected to serve from July 1, 1915, to June 30, 1916: President and Acting General Secretary, R. H. Crossfield; vice-president, T. E. Cramblett; Recording Secretary, G. D. Edwards; Treasurer and Education Day Secretary, Charles E. Underwood; Executive Committee, R. H. Crossfield, G. D. Edwards, Miner Lee Bates, Hill M. Bell, T. C. Howe. The board looks forward to the creation within the next two or three years of the office of General Secretary to be filled by an educational prophet.

THE AMERICAN CHRISTIAN MISSIONARY SOCIETY
Carew Bldg., Cincinnati, Ohio

Pastor Quits for a Year.
Charles H. Bloom, Cadiz, O., has been suffering from ill health for some time and he has been ordered by his physician to quit the ministry for a year. His pastorate at Cadiz has been crowned with success.

British Have Church Extension Society.
British Disciples have their own church extension society, since the American society is limited by charter to operation in the United States and Canada. The British organization is called the Building Loan Society. This society has recently granted a loan of 180 pounds to the Church of Christ, Wimbledon Park, London. The loan will complete payment on this church's present free-hold. The money is to be returned in a period of six years.

Hiram Girls Give Entertainment.
The Ladies' Glee Club from Hiram college will visit Second church, Warren, O., and give an entertainment this week. This musical organization has proved itself a very effective one during the present season, having given a number of entertainments of a high order. The entertainment at Warren is being held under the auspices of a Sunday-school class.

Select Student Secretary.
James Teeters has been selected as student secretary at Drake university for the coming year, beginning his service June 15. His duty will be to enlist young men for the ministry and also to find means of self help by which they can remain in the university. Mr. Teeters has been very loyal to his alma mater during his student days and is much interested in the task which he is about to take up.

British Disciples See Missionaries.
One of the privileges of the British churches is to see most of the missionaries while they are en route to and from the fields. William Remfry Hunt is a Britisher and he has spent the winter in England. Mr. and Mrs. Hensey, of the Congo country are expected in England soon on their way back to America where they are to spend their furlough.

Congo Missionary Writes.
Herbert Smith, Lotumbe, Congo Belge, writes of the success of the mission there. There were 75 baptisms at the Christmas time. Mr. Smith expresses the hope that Belgium may continue to rule the Congo in spite of the present world war. He reports that the war has made but little difference in the administration of this famous region. There are fifty teachers and evangelists in the field from Lotumbe mission.

Denver, Central, Uses Movies.
Central church, Denver, G. B. Van Arsdall, pastor, has installed a moving picture machine, using it for the first time Easter week. The pictures illustrating the dramatization of "John Barleycorn" were shown at the opening exhibition. Ten men of the church have advanced the purchase price of the outfit, three hundred dollars, and the machine will be their property until it is paid for from the funds that are gathered for this purpose by the church. A pamphlet sets forth an explanation of the value of moving pictures for religious purposes. A paragraph from this pamphlet is noteworthy: "This is a picture age. Newspapers, magazines, books and advertising agencies all are using the picture method to gain attention and enforce the written word. Eighty-five per cent of all our knowledge comes by way of the eye. Eight million people attend the moving picture theaters of America daily. Why should not the Church avail itself of this great modern invention to impress religious truth and practical morals? The flexible film that makes moving pictures possible was invented by a minister of the gospel. Many churches erecting new buildings are providing motion picture machines as permanent equipment." This church received 21 new members on Easter Sunday.

Sunday-school Boys Take a Hike.
The boy who attends the Sunday-school of Norwood church, Cincinnati, O., finds a good many things to interest him. One of the classes in this school is called Kappa Sigma Pi and six of the boys of this class recently went with their teacher to visit a chapter at Montgomery, O. A part of the journey was across country on foot. The boys made talks at Montgomery on the subject "Can the Sunday-school Boy Have a Good Time?"

A Calendar Society.
One of the most helpful agencies at work in the Everett, Mass, church is the "Calendar Society." This organization is unique. The president is termed the "Year." She has twelve assistants called "months," each one being a church member, and they have as many "weeks" as is possible to obtain amongst the members and outsiders. The semi-monthly meetings at the members' homes are always largely attended and enjoyable times are held. Nearly every woman member of the church is a member, which fact in itself is rather unusual.

Reads to Pittsburgh Ministers.
C. M. Smail, pastor at Beaver Falls, Pa., read before the Pittsburgh ministers recently, reviewing "The Christian Reconstruction of Modern Life," by Dickinson. He has given two special Sunday evening addresses recently on "Ruth—the Charming Moabitess," and "Browning's Interpretation of Saul." The audiences at Beaver Falls church are a third larger than last year.

The Church and the Politicians.

Senator Oliver of Pennsylvania is a member of East End church, Pittsburgh, where John Ray Ewers ministers. His recent stand on temperance legislation is warmly commended in the church bulletin. The churches in the section of East End church met recently at the Presbyterian church and listened to the Congressman of that district define his attitude to temperance legislation. A large delegation attended from East End church.

New Church Dedicated.

Sayre, Pa., congregation dedicated a new edifice on April 11. A total of six thousand dollars was raised. F. B. Thomas continues with the church after dedication to conduct evangelistic services. Charles W. Clark is the pastor. There have been twenty-five accessions in the first five days of the evangelistic meetings.

Doubles the Membership in Three Weeks.

Everett, Mass., church is located in a suburb of Boston, and meets all of the difficulties inherent in work in New England. The minister, Rupert Foster, who has studied at Transylvania and Yale, is now a student at Harvard. Decision day was observed in the Sunday-school recently and a number of new members were brought into the church. A church with fifty members received 44 new members in three weeks! There is now talk of enlarging the church building and the goal is set for 200 in the Sunday-school by June 1.

Pastor Writes a Play.

J. R. Perkins, Sioux City, Ia., has written a play called "A Woman of the Sadducees." It is a four act drama of the crucifixion. It was given at the Grand Theater by local talent on April 20. A brief statement of the plot follows: "Pilate, deeply in debt, seeks to borrow a hundred talents gold from Jerusalem bankers. The greatest money panic in the history of the ancient world is sweeping over the Roman Empire. The wealthy Sadducees promise to make the loan on condition that Pilate crush the Zealots, a revolutionary party that has paralyzed business. The Zealots, hearing of the bargain, plot to murder Mary Magdalene, the rich Jewess, and burn the city of Jerusalem."

Church Will Have Good Music.

Alvin E. Gillett, of New York, has been engaged as soloist at Central church, 142 West 81st street, New York, and will begin his work on May 2. A chorus choir is being organized under his leadership, to sing during the month of May. Mr. Gillett has had remarkable musical experiences and is sure to meet with an enthusiastic reception at Central church. His first public work was as baritone soloist in the First Presbyterian church, Seattle, Washington. This is the largest Protestant church in the world. While there he sang leading baritone roles in the northwest, appearing in oratorios in a number of cities. In New York, Mr. Gillett has been soloist in the Madison Avenue Baptist church, under Bruno Huhn, and the old First Presbyterian church under Dr. William C. Carl. His voice is a pure baritone of beautiful quality and great volume, with a range sufficient to sing high baritone roles but taking the low notes of a basso. His tones have a rich sympathetic feeling which many musicians lack.

Hawaiian Preacher Becomes Disciple.

Daniel C. Peters, pastor at Honolulu, reports that he has received into his church Robert L. Johnston, Ph. D., of the Methodist ministry. His wife accompanied him. They are both preachers of pleasing personality and culture and have had years of experience. They are at present teaching in the public schools of Lihue, Island of Kauai. It is the desire of Dr. Johnston to return to the States and enter ministerial work again.

Two New Departments in School.

First church, Eugene, Ore., Sunday-school has appointed a Superintendent of Absentees and a Superintendent of Prospectives. The names suggest the functions. The church has had 151 accessions since last September. Louis S. Cupp is minister.

A New Model Typewriter!

The— No 9

OLIVER

The Standard Visible Writer

BUY IT NOW!

Yes, the crowning typewriter triumph is here!

It is just out—and comes years before experts expected it.

For makers have striven a life-time to attain this ideal machine. And Oliver has won again, as we scored when we gave the world its first visible writing.

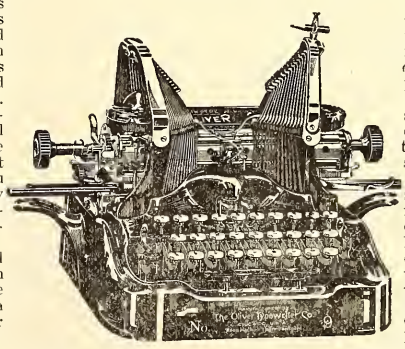
There is truly no other typewriter on earth like this new Oliver "9." Think of touch so light that the tread of a kitten will run the keys!

CAUTION!

The new-day advances that come alone on this machine are all controlled by Oliver. Even our own previous models—famous in their day—never had the Optional Duplex Shift.

It puts the whole control of 84 letters and characters in the little fingers of the right and left hands. And it lets you write them all with only 28 keys, the least to operate of any standard typewriter made.

Thus writers of all other machines can immediately run the Oliver Number "9" with more speed and greater ease.



WARNING!

This brilliant new Oliver comes at the old-time price. It costs no more than lesser makes—now out-of-date when compared with this discovery.

For while the Oliver's splendid new features are costly—we have equalized the added expense to us by simplifying construction.

Resolved right now to see this great achievement before you spend a dollar for any typewriter. If you are using some other make you will want to see how much more this one does.

If you are using an Oliver, it naturally follows that you want the finest model.

17 CENTS A DAY! Remember this brand-new Oliver "9" is the greatest value ever given in a typewriter. It has all our previous special inventions—visible writing, automatic spacer, 6½-ounce touch—plus the Optional Duplex Shift, Selective Color Attachment and all these other new-day features.

Yet we have decided to sell it to everyone everywhere on our famous payment plan—17 cents a day! Now every user can easily afford to have the world's crack visible writer, with the famous PRINTYPE, that writes like print, included FREE if desired.

TODAY—Write For Full Details and be among the first to know about this marvel of writing machines. See why typists, employers, and individuals everywhere are flocking to the Oliver. Just mail a postal at once. No obligation. It's a pleasure for us to tell you about it.

In and Around Chicago

Peter Ainslie spent several days in Chicago last week, in connection with the Disciples' Divinity House, of which he is a trustee, and also held an executive meeting of the Commission on Christian Union. His address to the students and instructors of the Disciples' Divinity House was full of interesting incident with reference to the trip to England, at which time Mr. Ainslie had an interview with the Archbishop of Canterbury.

G. B. Baird gave an address at the ministers' meeting on April 9, on his experiences in China. He showed how Christian ideals run afoul of many ancient customs and his account of the handling of the problems of polygamy, "squeeze," slavery, opium, and other matters, was full of human interest. Mr. Baird showed how the Chinese were taking the Christian religion in their hands and predicted that in the end there would be an adaptation of Christian teaching and practice to the needs of the Chinese.

April 18 was a money-raising day at Irving Park church, and the pastor, W. G. Winn, asked for and received $2,500 to pay for the improvements on the building. A canvass will be made of the parish this week to increase the current expense pledges by fifteen hundred dollars.

Every member of the Sheffield avenue Endeavor Society has enrolled as a delegate to the World's Christian Endeavor convention to be held in Chicago the second week in July. There are fifteen enrolments already in the Evanston society.

C. G. Brelos reported that the Woman's Christian Temperance Union used the building of First church, Waukegan, last Sunday evening for a silver medal contest and that a large audience gathered at the church for this event.

Frankfort, Ind., church has just closed a three weeks' meeting with home forces. The minister, Edgar D. Salkeld, preached every night to large audiences. There were one hundred and fourteen additions during the three weeks. There have been about one hundred and sixty additions since the first of January. On a recent evening the church presented Mr. and Mrs. Salkeld with a Ford machine in token of their esteem and confidence. The Frankfort church is a Living Link in both the foreign and home societies, and expects to reach a similar goal this year in the Christian Woman's Board of Missions.

Three Denominations at One Baptistry.

Three churches of Redwood Falls, Mont., used the same baptistry at a union service recently. The ministers of the Presbyterian, Methodist and Disciple churches baptized converts. It is stated that nineteen out of fifty-nine Presbyterian converts preferred immersion.

Well-Known English Disciple Dies.

News has come reporting the death of Mrs. Joe Coop, of Southport, England, on March 16. Mrs. Coop was a member of the Nimmo family in Edinburgh, and was identified in her youth with the "English Brethren," conservative Disciples in Great Britain. After her marriage she threw herself heartily into the work conducted in England by the "American Brethren." She was several times president of the Christian Woman's Board of Missions of Great Britain. Mrs. Coop left behind her, besides her husband, four daughters and two sons, to mourn her loss. She was fifty-five years of age at the time of her death.

Hebron, O., church recently held its annual meeting. This church raised for local work, $1,239.12 and for missions and benevolence, $74.50. H. H. Carter became pastor in September and since that time there have been 57 added, 30 by confession of faith. The Sunday-school raised $236.45 the past year. Many improvements are being made on the church building.

Bible School Gets More Equipment.

The Sunday-school at Lawrence, Kans., is in an effort this year to secure an attendance of a thousand. This mark was reached recently and the increased numbers demand new equipment. A thousand dollars is being spent in remodeling the church.

Cotton and the Churches.

That cotton has anything to do with churches may not be apparent to the northerner, but to the man of South Carolina, where a larger per cent of the acreage goes into cotton production than in any other state in the union, the connection is plainly seen. The war has interrupted the movement of cotton and this has brought financial depression to the whole state. As a result, many churches in South Carolina are making damaging retrenchments.

Institute Dean Resigns.

Martin L. Pierce, Dean of the Phillips Bible Institute, has resigned, to take effect on April 30. He has accepted a position with the Y. M. C. A. of Canton, O., as educational secretary. His successor in the Bible Institute has not been announced.

A thirty thousand dollar building is in prospect for Mt. Vernon, O., and construction will begin in a few days. J. A. Long is pastor and his evangelistic efforts have brought ninety-eight new members into the church since January 1.

Does not Accept Call.

W. F. Reagor, Carlisle, Ky., was called to Terre Haute, Ind., recently to one of the rapidly growing churches of this western Indiana city. After looking over the field, he has decided to abide with his Kentucky church.

Disciples on Convention Program.

The great International Christian Endeavor convention to be held in Chicago, July 7-12, will have a due proportion of Disciples on the program. Among them will be George H. Combs and Royal J. Dye.

Minister as Juryman.

Randolph Cook of Trinidad, Colo., did not claim his exemption as a minister but served for ten days on a district court jury recently. He addressed the Masonic lodge recently on "The Wages of a Mason." He has also spoken before the Parent-Teacher's Association and the Woman's Christian Temperance Union recently. There have been twelve accessions to the church recently. The church will soon join in a union evangelistic effort under the leadership of Dr. C. A. Ridley, of Atlanta, Ga.

Editor Shelburne Moves.

Cephas Shelburne has moved out of the city of Dallas and will live in a small town forty minutes out from the larger city, making his home in Lancaster. He will be pastor of the church there, while continuing to edit the Christian Courier. Five wagons with loyal Disciples aboard came to town and moved the minister out to his new home.

A Soliloquy of an Immigrant

Looking Toward the Home Missionary Offering in May.

Along with the large urban development has come an increasing number of foreigners in America. Thus, while New York is a city in America, it is hardly an American city. In it are more Germans than in any city of Germany except Berlin, twice as many Irish as in Dublin. More Italians than in Naples, and as many Jews as in Warsaw. In thirty-three of the largest cities the foreign population is larger than the native. God is bringing the very ends of the earth to America as pupil to a schoolmaster. A million immigrants come annually to America. This is the same as laying out, building and inhabiting with a foreign population ten cities of 100,000 each. A million immigrants! A million opportunities! A million obligations! The following soliloquy is what the immigrant may well repeat to the American nation:

Secretary Grant K. Lewis, who is asking for a liberal offering in May for Home Missions

"I am the immigrant. Since the dawn of creation my restless feet have beaten new paths across the earth. My uneasy bark has tossed on all seas. My wanderlust was born of the craving for more liberty and a better wage for the sweat of my face. I looked toward the United States with eyes kindled by the fire of ambition and heart quickened with new-born hope. I approached its gates with great expectation. I entered in with fine hope. I shouldered my burden as the American man-of-all-work. I contribute eighty-five per cent of all the labor in the slaughtering and meat-packing industries. I do seven-tenths of the bituminous coal mining. I contribute nine-tenths of all the labor in the cotton mills. I do seventy-eight per cent of all the work in the woolen mills. I make nineteen-twentieths of all the clothing. I manufacture more than half the shoes. I build four-fifths of all the furniture. I make half of the collars, cuffs and shirts. I turn out four-fifths of all the leather. I make half the gloves. I refine nearly nineteen-twentieths of the sugar. I make half of the tobacco and cigars. And yet, I am the great American problem. When I pour out my blood on your altar of labor, and lay down my life as a sacrifice to your god of toil, men make no more comment than at the fall of a sparrow. But my brawn is woven into the warp and woof of the fabric of your national being. My children shall be your children and your land shall be my land, because my sweat and my blood will cement the foundations of the America of tomorrow. If I can be fused into the body politic, the melting pot will have stood the supreme test."

These immigrants are like sponges, ready to absorb anything they get next to. If it is good, it is good and if evil, evil. If you want to appreciate the truth of this statement, start an English school in any colony of foreigners and see how ready they are to learn the American language, customs, history and life. The multitudes of immigrants must be reached by the Gospel of Jesus Christ. That they need it goes without saying and that they will respond to it is proved by the few feeble efforts put forth by the American Church to reach them. The same loving, helpful and practical service that commends the gospel of the foreign peoples in their native lands will captivate them for Jesus Christ all the more in a country new and strange. The greatest mistake evangelical Christianity makes is in selling out its houses of worship and forsaking the settlements now being colonized by immigrants. The American Board has five points of contact in large cities with the people from the foreign lands.

Pennsylvania Church Has Dedication.

Roger H. Fife has been holding evangelistic services at Lemoyne church, Harrisburg, Pa., which have brought successful results. He has also dedicated the new building in that city. He is now en route to Orangeburg, S. C., where he is undertaking to save a church that is in financial trouble.

Board of Education Meets at Indianapolis.

The Board of Education met at Indianapolis recently and the old officers were re-elected. Dr. R. H. Crossfield was continued as president and Prof. C. E. Underwood as secretary. It was announced that Marshall T. Reeves, a well-known business man of large means, living at Columbus, Ind., had resigned from the board of the Bible chair conducted at the state university at Bloomington, Ind.

Uses Brimstone Argument.

J. Q. Clarke, Crawfordsville, Ind., believes that the motive power of the gospel is fear. He says, "Never was a time when people will respect the gospel more than now, when you give them to understand that God means business, and they will surely smell brimstone if they don't repent." He reports 158 accessions since March 1 as evidence of the effectiveness of this type of appeal.

C. M. Fillmore Wants a Hospital.

Hillside church, Indianapolis, had a "Week of Decision" in January, and another closing with Easter. During the latter, Miss Fred Fillmore, of Cincinnati, assisted as singer and personal worker in a most valuable way. As a result there have been just one hundred accessions from Christmas to Easter. Another "Week of Decision" will be held in the fall. As a result of the success of the Free Clinics conducted at Hillside church for more than a year, C. M. Fillmore hopes to see a hospital in Indianapolis supported by the Disciple churches of the state. To that end he is giving an address in various churches on "Doctors, Drugs or Divine Healing."

Symposium on Pastors' Classes.

J. M. Artman, a boys' secretary of the Y. M. C. A. in Chicago, is interested in the question of training boys and girls for church membership. He is asking Disciple pastors for some information and puts his request as follows: "I am preparing a study on the subject 'The Preparation of Children (11-16) for Church Membership.' In order to get the exact mind of the church of today on this most important question, I am asking 500 ministers now in active service to write me a brief statement on: (a) What is essential in the preparation of children for church membership? (b) The way to do it—i. e., method. I know from experience that pastors are busy men and are much bothered by requests such as I am now making. I feel, however, that the subject is of such great importance that you will gladly aid me in making the study." Write Mr. Artman at 6020 Ingleside avenue, Chicago.

Romance in State Missions.

I. J. Cahill, state secretary of Ohio, is not blind to the interesting things that happen in state missions. He writes: "Some unheralded things have come to my attention in recent weeks that have stirred me. For the sake of the good they may do I pass them on. A few years ago an Ohio preacher spent his vacation holding a tent meeting in a small town where the call for restoration had never before been sounded. Of course the meeting was held a curiosity, its workers freaks. Apostolic conditions were reproduced at least in so far that certain lewd fellows of the baser sort were soon in evidence. A farmer living near came into town one night for the express purpose of helping these men tear down the tent and break up the meeting. In a spirit of fair play he demanded of the gang that they first hear what the preacher had to say for himself. Accordingly he attended that night to listen. The attack was never made. That farmer became obedient to the faith, gave up drink which had almost ruined him, and is now an elder in the church, prosperous in business and a leading factor in making his German township dry."

Pen Points of Home Missions

Independent Boulevard church at Kansas City supports as its Living Link, the church at Winnipeg, Manitoba. This mission is making a good beginning and may some day rival the parent church.

The Disciples are yet, by seven-tenths, a rural people. They ought to be students of the rural church problem.

The work of Ray G. Manley among the coke towns of Pennsylvania is as fine as any missionary service on the globe. He is a graduate of Bethany college, has been twice to Europe for study, and speaks Italian and Bohemian as well as English.

Don't fail to read the article on Ray G. Manley, American missionary, by Cloyd Goodnight in the American Home Missionary for April.

F. D. Butchart ministers to 240,000 Bohemians in the city of Cleveland, O.

Basil S. Keusseff speaks English, Bohemian and Russian and ministers to 30,000 Slavs in Chicago.

Every preacher in America is a Home Missionary and every state secretary an agent of the Home Board.

There are 40,000 negro churches in the United States with 4,300,000 members. Seven hundred of these churches belong to the Disciples of Christ.

"A glimpse of western Canada," by Chas. S. Medbury, is an interesting and illuminating narrative in the April American Home Missionary.

Every Christian in America carries a commission direct from his Lord to help make this home land Christian.

The missionary destiny of the world hangs upon American Christianity in this hour of the world crisis.

The world is now a neighborhood; it yet remains to be made a brotherhood.

W. C. Pearce is to deliver the Bible school address in the opening session of the Los Angeles convention.

The Religious Education Commission is making a fundamental study of our teacher training situation, and will have a report to give upon the subject soon.

P. H. Moss, Negro Field Bible School Secretary, is holding institutes in Mississippi during the month of April.

Texas is planning a series of interdenominational schools of methods for the early fall. S. W. Hutton is asked to represent our people in the tour.

Earl Wilfley, of Washington City, is to be the Sunday preacher at the Keuka Park, New York, School of Methods, July 1 to 9.

Miss Katherine E. Staub, eastern field worker, is to help E. W. Allen at Auburn, N. Y., during September, October and November, the Auburn church assuming full support during the three months.,

A. A. Learn, Sunday-school secretary for Ontario, plans a fine Sunday-school session for the Provinical convention in June at Cecil St. church, Toronto. One item will be a debate regarding the unified morning service.

Prof. G. P. Coler, president of Virginia Christian college, who has recently passed from us, did his last work in the field in two of our schools of methods at Washington City and Norfolk, Va.

The Bible school team, Miss Lewis, Miss Maus, and Mr. Clarke, have just completed a very successful tour in the southeast which has done much to awaken new interest along all Bible school lines. Their services are constantly in demand. Robert M. Hopkins,
Bible School Secretary, A. C. M. S.

Notes from the Foreign Society

Miss Mary Thompson of Harda, India, sailed for Australia on February 10. Miss Thompson has been working for a number of years for the Society and is supported by the Australian churches. Her work is done for the most part in the homes of the people.

H. A. Baker of Batang, West China, writes: "We are well and the Lord has been very good to us. I am doing the best I can with the evangelistic work and studying Chinese every day. I will begin studying Tibetan soon and also continue the study of Chinese."

W. R. Holder, of Africa, has some valuable and interesting curios that he brought with him from Africa. He is now preparing to return to the field and has these curios for sale. One is an ivory war trumpet which can be heard at a great distance. One is an ivory tusk that has been worn by an African chief. Mr. Holder may be addressed at Roanoke, Alabama.

Edgar A. Johnston needs a Balopticon, an instrument that will show pictures of any kind. With this machine he could teach geography, history, hygiene, drawing and manual training.

R. D. McCoy of Tokyo, Japan, writes that the work is moving along as usual. There will be twenty-eight in the graduating class of the middle school. There will be twelve from the girls' school and four from the Bible college.

Dr. E. I. Osgood, of Chuchow, China, writes: "This has been a very hard winter for the people. In one day nearly 8,000 people came to obtain doles of rice."

Charles P. Hedges of Longa, Africa, reports that he has just completed a bamboo and thatch building that will serve for school and church purposes. When the permanent building is erected it will give the cause a prestige which any number of temporary structures cannot.

It has been suggested that the report of the Commission to the Far East, which was published in the March "Intelligencer," be read in every church some Sunday morning. The suggestion seems to be a good one. The people will listen to such a report beeause it has been prepared with great care and is full of the most interesting information.

A speeial edition of "Epoeh Makers of Modern Missions" has been prepared for mission study classes. This book has been selling for $1.00 a volume. A special edition, bound in cloth, sells for fifty cents; in paper, for thirty-five cents. A series of questions on each ehapter has been prepared.

Mr. Rains has been in Cuba looking over the work in that field. He writes in the most cheerful strain about the work and about the missionaries, Mr. and Mrs. W. L. Burner. He is now in Texas and will be there for several weeks. He will attend the state convention in Dallas in May.

S. J. Corey, Seeretary.

PRAY FOR PEACE OF JERUSALEM.

moral or legal, and he is not likely to stay there. Whatever end the war brings, the Turk will move out of the Church of the Holy Sepulchre.

But who will move in?

That is the question which is likely to awaken discussion and division. That the Turk ought to go no one denies; but that any one nation ought to take his place is not yet agreed upon.

It has been suggested that the United States ought to take possession of Palestine and hold it in trust for the world. It has been said that America is the only great nation of which no European power would feel jealous or suspect of political ambition in the matter. As a matter of fact, the United States has more influence in Palestine than most people know. The American flag is the most conspicuous sight as one enters the Jaffa gate. The United States consulate, which faces the gate, is a haven of refuge for many people who never have seen America. The American consul is judge in all cases affecting American citizens of whom there are many hundreds in Palestine. He is arbiter also by agreement in other cases where people distrust the local courts.

THE UNITED STATES AND PALESTINE.

It opens a rather pleasant field for the imagination, this idea of raising the cross of Christ and the stars and stripes together over Jerusalem, but it is not likely that the United States would be willing to assume this responsibility. Stranger things have happened in the history of nations, but it is far more likely that some one European nation will be charged with this duty of oversight on conditions that secure Palestine from oppression and make it accessible to the world. Austria and Great Britain now maintain in Palestine their own system of post-offices, and as Great Britain is likely to retain control of Egypt it is entirely possible that she may extend her sway to the peninsula of Sinai and the Holy Land.

Indeed, there are rumors that already the allies have an understanding that Palestine shall be given a government which will favor the return of Jews and the free access of Christians. It is planned, so we are told, that there shall be better sanitation, improved methods of agriculture, and the building of trolley lines, which shall make all the holy places easily accessible to tourists while preserving them from vandalism.

HELP US WIPE OUT OUR DEBT!

Friends of The Christian Century—you Disciples of Christ who believe in the constructive ideals of Christian unity and of the spiritual life to which this newspaper is consecrated—this is a very frank statement and direct appeal to you!

The Christian Century exists—has existed for the past seven years—in virtue of an unremitting financial struggle. The sacrifices that have gone into this journal seem, to those who have shared in them, to sanctify the very ink and paper that carry its messages week after week. These sacrifices are beginning to be shared by an increasing circle of friends, men and women who believe that the unique service now being rendered by this paper makes it a deserving object of their philanthropic support.

By means of their gifts the indebtedness against us has been reduced during the past six months from $14,611.50 to $8,178.41.

On Oct.	1	the	indebtedness	was $14,611.50
" Nov.	1	"	"	" 14,518.21
" Dec.	1	"	"	" 14,358.39
" Jan.	1	"	"	" 13,961.80
" Feb.	1	"	"	" 9,254.20
" Mar.	1	"	"	" 8,360.77
" Apr.	1	"	"	" 8,178.41

We have received gifts of many amounts---ranging from $5 to $1000 and over. It is a fine record and we are deeply grateful for the fellowship of all those who have shared in it.

But our work is crippled by the unpaid portion of the debt!

It embarrasses us each week. It keeps the "Century" constantly at a great disadvantage. Any business man who ever struggled with a debt knows by his own experience how our efforts at constructive policies are handicapped.

Ours is not a new debt. It represents obligations created more than three and four years ago.

Friends of The Christian Century: Do you not feel that this debt ought to be altogether wiped out?

It is an easy thing for you to pay—it is literally a life-and-death matter for us to carry alone. What say you men and women who love the cause of progress?

One man in sending his check for $500 last January said:

"I will not feel that the cause of the Disciples is secure in the world until The Christian Century is secure, firmly established on an ample financial basis."

Another said:

"If the Disciples of Christ should fail to appreciate the 'Century' enough to support it in its financial struggle it is with difficulty that I imagine myself continuing to be a Disciple," and he handed the editor a generous check that paid off one of our largest creditors.

The support received thus far has come through direct personal solicitation.

Only the extraordinary opportunity of the present hour justifies our making this public appeal to those who have the cause at heart. Write us that you will have fellowship in this great work!

Subscriptions—Subscription price $2. If paid strictly in advance $1.50 will be accepted. To ministers if paid strictly in advance $1.00 per year. If payment is delayed ministers will be charged at regular rates. Single copy, 5 cents.

Discontinuances—In order that subscribers may not be annoyed by failure to receive the paper. it is not discontinued at expiration of time paid in advance (unless so ordered), but is continued pending instruction from the subscriber. If discontinuance is desired, prompt notice should be sent and all arrearages paid.

The Christian Century

Expirations—The label on the paper shows the month to which subscription is paid. List is revised monthly. Change of date on label is a receipt for remittance on subscription account.
Change of address—In ordering change of address give the old as well as the new.

Remittances—Should be sent by draft or money order payable to The Disciples Publication Society. If local check is sent add ten cents for exchange charged us by Chicago banks.

Entered as Second-Class Matter Feb. 28, 1902, at the Post Office, Chicago, Illinois, Under Act of March 3, 1879.

DISCIPLES PUBLICATION SOCIETY, PROPRIETORS, : 700 EAST 40th ST., CHICAGO

Disciples Publication Society

The Disciples Publication Society is an organization through which churches of the Disciples of Christ seek to promote undenominational and constructive Christianity.

The relationship it sustains to the Disciples is intimate and organic, though not official. The Society is not a private institution. It has no capital stock. No individuals profit by its earnings. The churches and Sunday-schools own and directly operate it. It is their contribution to the advocacy and practice of the ideals of Christian unity and religious education.

The charter under which the Society exists determines that whatever profits are earned shall be applied to agencies which foster the cause of religious education, although it is clearly conceived that its main task is not to make profits but to produce literature for building up character and for advancing the cause of religion.

* * *

The Disciples Publication Society regards itself as a thoroughly undenominational institution. It is organized and constituted by individuals and churches who interpret the Disciples' religious reformation as ideally an unsectarian and unecclesiastical fraternity, whose common tie and original impuse are fundamentally the desire to practice Christian unity with all Christians.

The Society therefore claims fellowship with all who belong to the living Church of Christ, and desires to co-operate with the Christian people of all communions as well as with the congregations of Disciples, and to serve all.

* * *

In publishing literature for religious education the Society believes a body of such literature prepared by the co-operative effort of many communions reaches a much higher level of catholicity and truth than can be attained by writers limited by the point of view of a single communion.

* * *

The Sunday-school literature (The Bethany System) published by this house, has been prepared through the Society's association with the writers, editors and official publishing houses of the Methodist, Presbyterian, Congregational and other communions. In its mechanical and artistic quality, its low selling-price, its pedagogical adequacy, and, still more, in its happy solution of doctrinal differences it is a striking illustration of the possibilities of the new day of unity into which the church is now being ushered.

* * *

The Christian Century, the chief publication of the Society, desires nothing so much as to be the worthy organ of the Disciples' movement. It has no ambition at all to be regarded as an organ of the Disciples' denomination. It is a free interpreter of the wider fellowship in religious faith and service which it believes every church of Disciples should embody. It strives to interpret all communions, as well as the Disciples, in such terms and with such sympathetic insight as may reveal to all their essential unity in spite of denominational isolation. Unlike the typical denominational paper. The Christian Century, though published by the Disciples, is not published for the Disciples alone. It is published for the Christian world. It desires definitely to occupy a catholic point of view and it seeks readers in all communions.

Our Success Depends Upon You!

The Christian Century and the Disciples Publication Society belong to the Disciples of Christ, not to private individuals. With the steady enlargement of the volume of its business the Society will ultimately be on a self-supporting basis and its earnings will go to the cause of Christian education and missions. At present it depends for its existence upon gifts offered by friends who believe in the work it is doing and wish to see its ideals prevail among the Disciples and the larger Christian world.

You are one of the friends of this great work.

Our success depends upon you!

The list of our supporters has been steadily growing. A few generous men and women have shown especial devotion by making large gifts. Every layman and minister who cherishes hopes for the success of such an enterprise will wish to make a gift to its support.

In addition to your own gift, you know of others in your congregation who, if the matter were brought forcefully to their attention, will find pleasure in making a gift. We depend upon you to secure their support.

The usefulness of the Christian Century and the Disciples Publication Society can be extended immeasurably by the prompt assistance of our generous friends.

We depend upon you to stand behind us! And we need your support now!

Do not let our call pass unheeded but fill out this blank and mail to us at once.

Reach the Mind Through the "Eye Gate"

The most progressive pastors and teachers today are finding that the quickest path to the Kingdom of the Mind is by the way of the "Eye-Gate." It has been scientifically demonstrated that pictures get over three times the results obtained by the use of words. Preach a sermon, teach a lesson, by word of mouth; it takes the message a long time to reach the mind, and too often it is lost after getting to its destination.

The Disciple Mind

HOW WOULD YOU KNOW A CHURCH OF DISCIPLES?

It is a familiar fact nowadays that people of all the Christian denominations are becoming more alike in respect to the sermons they hear, in the order of worship which they employ, and in the modes of their parish activities.

It is only occasionally that we would know by the sermon that we were in a church of Disciples.

We might recognize the identity of the church by its weekly communion.

If the ordinance of baptism were observed there would still be room for doubt whether the church were Disciple or Baptist. And yet we think we would soon know that we were in a church of Disciples.

The "atmosphere" or social mind would reveal it.

We have come to know that there is a social mind as well as an individual mind. Indeed, it may well be argued that it is the social mind which determines the character of the individual mind and not vice versa.

This social mind quickly becomes apparent whenever people are thrown together.

Even the crowd on the street feels it.

Stop and look upward intently on any busy street in Chicago, and in an incredibly short time you will be surrounded with a crowd. Shout fire or murder, or suggest the presence of an airship obscured in the clouds, and this central interest begins to beget a crowd consciousness.

The crowd is ready to rescue a kidnapped maiden, or put out a fire, or lynch a malefactor, at the suggestion of the leader, who is sure to emerge.

This kind of social mind is of course evanescent. The social mind that develops in a nation is a more solid and enduring thing.

We can talk of the "French mind" with assurance that we are not dealing with an abstraction, but with something just as real as any individual Frenchman can ever be. If we are to know the French mind, we must study the social origins of France, we must know her experiences of struggle and by what processes of survival certain ideas and habits have come to be fixed.

The understanding of the French mind comes not only by a study of her literature, but also by a study of her social and economic history, and a study of all that goes to make up her environment.

The German mind is a different thing from the French mind, and it is perhaps this rather than questions of territory and of commercial gain which lies behind the great war of today. Europe will have no peace until the typical Frenchman no longer feels that the typical German is a foreigner, but a real fellow citizen.

No one will deny that Disciples have a certain spirit or temper of their own. With a shorter history than any of the great communions, they have not failed to gather certain peculiar mental characteristics.

How has the Disciple mind evolved and what is it like today?

To understand Disciples, we must know their ancestors. The "fathers" of the movement were nearly all Scotch-Irish and, of course, Presbyterians. The period of connection with the Baptists was brief and is unimportant in respect to its influence as compared with the inheritance from the Presbyterians.

These Scotch-Irish settlers were intensely democratic in their tastes and ideals. Their religion was the Calvinism of Scotland warmed up a bit by the contribution of the more emotional Irish temperament.

It was at once "hard-headed" and enthusiastic.

These Scotch-Irish Presbyterians had witnessed the division of their household of faith, without feeling strongly the forces that had caused these divisions. Many of the splits had occurred over questions that were remote from their world of interests.

It was this fact that made Irish Presbyterians more susceptible to the preaching and the ideals of the Haldanian movement on the subject of Christian union.

Scarcely any age since the Reformation has lacked a prophet of unity. It is the peculiar situation in which some communions have found themselves that has made them good ground on which to sow this seed.

These Irish Presbyterians, divided and subdivided by things which did not interest them, turned eagerly toward the vision of an age in which these divisions should cease to be.

It is chiefly in the American environment, however, that the Disciples have been moulded. They began as a "frontier" movement. When Thomas Campbell began preaching in western Pennsylvania, he had "gone out west."

The preaching of the fathers took them almost always westward, and seldom eastward. Their churches were in rural districts and isolated from each other first by long distances.

They took on the characteristics of the American pioneer.

What marked the American pioneer?

In the first place there was a certain quality of enterprise which has come to be known the world over as the sure mark of the American mind. Only the adventurous and enterprising spirit would leave the surer if more tedious ways of a European home for the uncertainties of the wilderness.

In time the more adventurous spirits left New England, and went west, leaving New England conservative, but making Kansas and Colorado radical to a degree.

This spirit of enterprise has entered more deeply into the Disciples' character than into communions imported into this country ready made. Their evangelistic success may be in part due to their rational, if not rationalistic, exposition of religion, but it may be considered as far more due to the enterprise of the pioneer in prosecuting his enterprise.

How were these scattered pioneer churches to be given any sense of unity? The opposition from the outside worked this miracle. The early days of the movement were spent in a time of religious bigotry and unfairness, incomprehensible to us in these happier modern days.

These new churches were charged with all the heresies known to church history.

They were denied any evangelical fellowship in many communities. Against this opposition and calumny, the early leaders took the stump in rough and ready debate.

Their Scotch-Irish wit, their rationalistic inheritance, with its appeal to the hard facts of scriptural record, gave them easy victory over their opponents.

A quarter of a century of such warfare left the Disciples with a definite consciousness of their unity of doctrine and practice, but without organization. The experience had compelled a certain amount of doctrinal formulation.

The gentle, pietistic Thomas Campbell, with his plea for the unity of the Church, had been well-nigh forgotten in the absorbing polemic waged by his militant son, Alexander.

"America First!" Says the President

An Address Delivered Before the Associated Press Meeting in New York.

Strict neutrality, "America first" and extreme caution in publication of unconfirmed news were the keynotes of a speech by President Wilson that aroused great enthusiasm among newspaper editors and publishers from all parts of the country last week at the luncheon of the Associated Press in the Waldorf Hotel, New York. In introducing President Wilson, Mr. Frank B. Noyes, of the Washington Star, President of the Associated Press, made brief reference to the scope of this organization saying he believed that in scope and importance it was "the greatest co-operative, nonprofit-making organization in the world. "Its function," he said, "is to furnish its members a service of world news untainted and without bias of any sort." He praised President Wilson's mastership in maintaining true neutrality, in introducing him, and said the President had borne his great responsibility nobly. All arose and drank a toast to the President, arose later when the orchestra struck up "The Star-Spangled Banner," and again when the President stood up to speak. The complete address is here printed.

I AM DEEPLY gratified by the generous reception you have accorded me. It makes me look back with a touch of regret to former occasions when I have stood in this place and enjoyed a greater liberty than is granted me today. There have been times when I stood in this spot and said what I really thought, and I pray God that those days of indulgence may be accorded me again. But I have come here now, of course, somewhat restrained by a sense of responsibility that I cannot escape. For I take the Associated Press very seriously. I know the enormous part that you play in the affairs not only of this country but of the world.

You deal in the raw material of opinion, and if my convictions have any validity, opinion ultimately governs the world.

It is, therefore, of very serious things that I think as I face this body of men. I do not think of you, however, as members of the Associated Press. I do not think of you as men of different parties or of different racial derivations or of different religious denominations. I want to talk to you as to my fellow citizens of the United States. For there are serious things which as fellow citizens we ought to consider.

TEST FOR AMERICA COMING.

The times behind us, gentlemen, have been difficult enough; the times before us are likely to be more difficult, because whatever may be said about the present condition of the world's affairs, it is clear that they are drawing rapidly to a climax, and at the climax the test will come not only of the nations engaged in the present colossal struggle—it will come for them, of course—but the test will come to us particularly.

Do you realize that, roughly speaking, we are the only great nation at present disengaged? I am not speaking, of course, with disparagement of those great nations in Europe which are not parties to the present war, but I am thinking of their close neighborhood to it. I am thinking, however, that their lives much more than ours touch the very heart and stuff of the business, whereas we have rolling between us and those bitter days across the water 3,000 miles of cool and silent ocean.

WORLD MEDIATOR IN FINANCE.

Our atmosphere is not yet charged with those disturbing elements which must be felt and must permeate every nation of Europe. Therefore, is it not likely that the nations at war will some day turn to us for the cooler assessment of the elements engaged? I am not now thinking so preposterous a thought as that we should sit in judgment upon them; no nation is fit to sit in judgment upon any other nation, but that we shall some day have to assist in reconstructing the processes of peace.

President Wilson holds that we must think of America before we think of Europe that America may be fit to be Europe's friend when the day of tested friendship comes

Our resources are untouched; we are more and more becoming by the force of circumstances the mediating nation of the world in respect of its finance.

We must make up our minds what are the best things to do and what are the best ways to do them.

We must put our money, our energy, our enthusiasm, our sympathy into these things; and we must have our judgments prepared and our spirits chastened against the coming of that day.

THE MOTTO "AMERICA FIRST."

So that I am not speaking in a selfish spirit when I say that our whole duty for the present, at any rate, is summed up in this motto, "America first."

Let us think of America before we think of Europe, in order that America may be fit to be Europe's friend when the day of tested friendship comes. The test of friendship is not now sympathy with the one side or the other, but getting ready to help both sides when the struggle is over.

The basis of neutrality, gentlemen, is not indifference; it is not self-interest. The basis of neutrality is sympathy for mankind. It is fairness, it is good will at bottom. It is impartiality of spirit and of judgment. I wish that all of our fellow citizens could realize that.

There is in some quarters a disposition to create distempers in this body politic. Men are even uttering slanders against the United States, as if to excite her.

FAITH IN SILENT AMERICANS.

Men are saying that if we should go to war with either side there will be a divided America—an abominable libel of igorance; America is not all of it vocal just now. It is vocal in spots. But I for one have a complete and abiding faith in that great silent body of Americans who are not standing up and shouting and expressing their opinions just now, but are waiting to find out and support the duty of America. I am just as sure of their solidity and of their loyalty and of their unanimity, if we act justly, as I am that the history of this country has at every crisis and turning point illustrated this great lesson.

We are the mediating nation of the world. I do not mean that we undertake not to mind our own business and to mediate where other people are quarreling. I mean the word in a broader sense.

We are componded of the nations of the world. We mediate their blood, we mediate their traditions, we mediate their sentiments, their tastes, their passions; we are ourselves compounded of those things.

We are therefore able to understand all nations; we are able to understand them in the compound, not separately, as partisans, but unitedly as knowing and comprehending and embodying them all.

It is in that sense that I mean that America is a mediating nation. The opinion of America, the action of America is ready to turn and free to turn in any direction.

Did you ever reflect upon how almost all other nations, almost every other nation has through long centuries been headed in one direction? That is not true of the United States. The United States has no racial momentum. It has no history back of it which makes it run all its energies and all its ambitions in one particular direction; and America is particularly free in this, that she has no hampering ambitions as a world power.

DEFENDS U. S. SOIL EXPANSION.

If we have been obliged by circumstances, or have considered ourselves to be obliged by circumstances, in the past, to take territory which we otherwise would not have thought of taking, I believe I am right in saying that we have considered it our duty to administer that territory, not for ourselves, but for the people living in it, and to put this burden upon our consciences, not to think that this is ours for our use, but to regard ourselves as trustees of the great business for those to whom it does really belong; trustees ready to hand over the cosmique trust at any time, when the business seems to make that possible and feasible.

That is what I mean by saying we have no hampering ambitions.

We do not want anything that does not belong to us.

Isn't a nation in that position free to serve other nations, and isn't a nation like that ready to form some part of the assessing opinion of the world?

BETTER THAN FIGHTING.

My interest in the neutrality of the United States is not the petty desire to keep out of trouble. I have never looked for it, but I have always found it. I do not want to walk around trouble.

If a man wants a scrap—that is, an interesting scrap, and worth while—I am his man. I warn him that he is not going to draw me into the scrap for his advertisement, but if he is looking for trouble—that is, the trouble of men in general, and I can help a little—why, then, I am in for it.

But I am interested in neutrality because there is something so much greater to do than fight, because there is something, there is a distinction waiting for this nation that no nation has ever yet got. That is the distinction of absolute self-control and self-mastery.

Whom do you admire most among your friends? The irritable man? The man out of whom you can get a "rise" without trying? The man who will fight at the drop of the hat, whether he knows what the hat is dropped for or not?

Don't you admire and don't you fear if you have to contest with him, the self-mastered man who watches you with calm eye and comes in only when you have carried the thing so far that you must be disposed of? That is the man you respect. That is the man you know has at bottom a much more fundamental and terrible courage than the irritable fighting man.

TELLS OF "NEWS AND NEWS."

Now, I covet for America this splendid courage of reserve moral force, and I wanted to point out to you gentlemen simply this: There is news and news. There is what is called news from Turtle Bay, that turns out to be falsehood, at any rate in what it is said to signify, and which, if you could get the nation to believe it true, might disturb our equilibrium and our self-possession.

We ought not to deal in stuff of that kind. We ought not to permit things of that sort to use up the electrical energy of the wires, because its energy is malign, its energy is not of the truth, its energy is of mischief. It is possible to sift truth.

I have known some things to go out on the wires as true when there was only one man or one group of men who could have told the originators of the report whether it was true or not, and they were not asked whether it was true or not, for fear it might not be true. That sort of report ought not to go out over the wires.

WANTS WORLD TO KNOW TRUTH.

There is generally, if not always, somebody who knows whether that thing is so or not, and in these days above all other days we ought to take particular pains to resort to the one small group of men or to the one man, if there be but one, who knows whether those things are true or not.

The world ought to know the truth, but the world ought not at this period of unstable equilibrium to be disturbed by rumor, ought not to be disturbed by imaginative combinations of circumstances, or, rather, by circumstances stated in combination which do not belong in combination. For we are holding, not I but you and gentlemen engaged like you, the balances in our hands. This unstable equilibrium rests upon scales that are in your hands. For the food of opinion, as I began by saying, is the news of the day.

I have known many a man go off at a tangent on information that was not reliable. Indeed, that describes the majority of men. The world is held stable by the man who waits for the next day to find out whether the report was true or not.

We cannot afford, therefore, to let the rumors of irresponsible persons and origins get into the atmosphere of the United States.

We are trustees of what I venture to say is the greatest heritage that any nation ever had—the love of justice and righteousness and human liberty. For, fundamentally, those are the beings to which America is addicted and to which she is devoted. There are groups of selfish men in the United States, there are coteries, where sinister things are purposed, but the great heart of the American people is just as sound and true as it ever was. And it is a single heart; it is the heart of America. It is not a heart made up of sections selected out of other countries.

HOLDS "PEOPLES' HEART SOUND."

So that what I try to remind myself of every day when I am almost overcome by perplexities; what I try to remember, is what the people at home are thinking about. I try out myself in the place of the man who does not know all the things that I know, and ask myself what he would like the policy of this country to be. Not the talkative man, not the partisan man, not the man that remembers first that he is a Republican or Democrat, or that his parents were Germans or English, but who remembers first that the whole destiny of modern affairs centers largely upon his being an American first of all.

If I permitted myself to be a partisan in this present struggle I would be unworthy to represent you. If I permitted myself to forget the people who are not partisans I would be unworthy to represent you.

I am not saying that I am worthy to represent you, but I do claim this degree of worthiness, that before everything else I love America.

Woman's Peace Party Answers Roosevelt

The Ardent Progressive Leader Gets a "Come-back" to His Recent Criticism of the Feminine Peace Promoters.

BY LUCIA AMES MEAD.

COLONEL Roosevelt has recently said of the Woman's Peace Party that "speaking with scientific accuracy it is base and silly" that those who hold such views are "championing peace without regard to righteousness," and that the principles of the party are exactly the same as those of Copperheads of the civil war.

Without characterizing this language and much more to the same effect about pacifists in general, let me boldly assert that every one of the pacifist leaders in Europe and America, nearly all of whom I have met or heard, are a unit in basing their demand for the abolition of war upon the ground of the unrighteousness of the war system. We abhor war because we believe it to be unrighteous to settle questions of boundaries or honor by explosives.

We do recognize, as Colonel Roosevelt doubts, the difference between putting down rebellion and waging a foreign war and between past and future wars and we believe a great many other things which it was not possible to put into a brief program. Civil war may occur after foreign wars are ended, but it, too, must eventually be abolished.

Rival armies and navies never take a culprit to court as police do and they never aim to secure a judicial decision. Dueling, whether on the gigantic scale by nations or on the scale of two contestants, involves two opposing claims, only one of which in the nature of the case can be wholly righteous. Generally both are partly right and partly wrong, but the degree of righteousness in the whole affair can never be more than 50 per cent and the righteous side is quite as likely to lose as the other.

Success in war turns on material considerations and not on justice. Whatever degree of justice any war achieves is always accidental or incidental and brings a long train of injustices upon the innocent. The doctrine that "conquer we must when our cause is just" is a relic of medieval superstition which is illustrated by the summons in "Lohengrin" for a champion to prove Elsa's innocence by the wielding of his sword. Belgium and many small states demonstrate the fallacy that the just cause is bound to win.

Ex-President Roosevelt, who took exception to the disarmament resolution of the Women's Peace Party

Battle may bring no more misery than earthquake or volcanic eruption, but it arouses totally different emotions, for it is man-made and is no more inevitable than intemperance. The Woman's Peace Party demands the abolition of war precisely because the war system produces crime and unrighteousness on a colossal scale. The greatest unrighteousness of all is compelling innocent soldiers to kill other innocent soldiers with whom they have no quarrel.

The Woman's Peace Party demands that war be abolished for the same reasons that men whose arguments were doubtless called "base and silly" a hundred years ago abolished the duel, a much more honorable form of killing; also because, just as soon as the great powers choose, they can use the following as a combined substitute for war—a concert of powers with a supreme court, an international police replacing rival armies and navies, and organized nonintercourse as the most effective sanction against a nation's faithlessness.

Examine the planks of the Woman's Peace Party—"democratic control of foreign policies; concert of nations to supersede balance of power; action toward the gradual organization of the world to substitute law for war; an international police substituted for rival armies and navies; removal of the economic causes of war, etc.

Let any fair-minded person try to draw a parallel between these propositions and those proclaimed by "Copperheads" who objected to putting down a slaveholders' rebellion within our nation and let him also ask whether those who hold those views show that they "fear death or pain or discomfort beyond anything else."

The Woman's Peace Party believes in as much force as is necessary to secure a judicial decision. The world will not be civilized until it abolishes every other form of force. We make no demand for disarmament until after general reduction of armaments. We simply ask now for no increased armament until the war is over.

Let our courageous women teach the throng of timid men who are seeing visions of invasion and who dream day nightmares that every possible foe is daily becoming impoverished and less able to pick a futile quarrel with its best customer than it ever was before. Let us women teach our hysterical critics the enormous difference between our very real foes of needless accident and preventable disease which annually kill 600,000 citizens, and our theoretical enemies without. Since we became a republic foreign nations have killed less than 15,000 of our men and killed these in wars which we began.

Our goal is the "peaceable fruits of righteousness." The path to peace is solely through justice. It is for the promotion of righteousness and justice between nations that the Woman's Peace Party exists.

Colonel Roosevelt's amusing reference to the party of which Miss Jane Addams is the chief sponsor and national chairman as being "both foolish and noxious, accompanied by a peculiarly ignoble abandonment of national duty," is of special interest to those who are considering presidential timber for next year.

Feeding the Immigrant Spiritually

With Some Facts and Figures Relative to the Distribution of Bibles to the Incoming Peoples by the New York Bible Society.

BY S. B. DUNN.

OVER eighty per cent of the immigrants entering the United States come in through the port of New York. Often more than a million arrive at Ellis Island in a single year. New York City increases in population every year by the size of another city like Albany. Over a million seamen come in and go out of New York Harbor in the course of every twelve months.

Consider the polyglot character of the population of New York City. In two city households sixteen nationalities have been found to be represented, which by no means is a rare or exceptional occurence. In the city directory there are more Cohens than Smiths, making New York more of a New Jerusalem than a New Eden. To visit foreign countries one has only to walk the streets of New York. Father Knickerbocker now hardly knows himself when he looks into the mirror, or meets himself in his own city.

To cater to the spiritual needs of these newcomers among us is no more than repaying the debt we owe to the immigrant. It is said that the American immigrant is doing eighty-five per cent. of all the labor in the meat-packing industries among us; seven-tenths of our coal-mining; seventy-eight per cent. of all the work in the woolen mills; nine-tenths of all the work in the cotton mills; he makes nineteen-twentieths of all our clothing; half our shoes; four-fifths of our furniture; half our collars, cuffs, and shirts; four-fifths of our leather, half our gloves; and nineteen-twentieths of even our sugar. In short, the American immigrant is our man-of-all work, warming, feeding, clothing, and sweetening us.

SOME OTHER "IMMIGRANTS."

Speaking of immigrants, it is curious to recall the fact that there are other "immigrants" among us besides those abovementioned. Celery came to us from Germany; the onion and the pea from Egypt; the citron from Greece; the quince from Crete; parsley, from Sardinia; the pear and the apple from Europe; the horse-radish from Southern Europe; oats from Africa; rye from Liberia; spinach from Arabia; the sunflower from Peru; the mulberry, the walnut, and the peach from Persia; the poppy from the East; the cucumber from the East Indies; the horse-chestnut from Thibet; and the radish from China and Japan.

Thus, in more ways than one it is right that this country should confess its debt to the immigrant!

To a thoughtful observer New York City is a forest of philanthropies. In this respect our commercial metropolis is, perhaps, without a rival. As Carlyle would say: "On a bosom of adamant grow flowers." Many hands are helping plant here a new Eden in this New World. Like the first Eden, four rivers water it—the North, the East, the Harlem, and the Bronx. In the midst of this garden God has caused to grow "every tree that is pleasant to the sight and good for food," with more than one tree of life, and, as well, more than one tree of knowledge of good and evil. Here, too, is the land of Havilah "where there is gold, and the gold of that land is good." Of course, the New Eden, like the old, has its serpent, both "prone on the ground" and "crested aloft . . . with burnished neck of verdant gold," as Milton describes him. But it has, no less, the serpent lifted up as God's antidote to the fatal bite of sin.

THE NEW YORK BIBLE SOCIETY.

Now, one of these New York City philanthropies, and not the least, either, is the noble New York Bible Society, at the well-known Bible House, Astor Place, in charge of Dr. George William Carter—the only society whose sole work is Bible distribution in the City and Harbor of New York. For more than a round century it has maintained this work without interruption. During that period it has distributed in fifty-three languages nearly six and a half million volumes.

Last year, its bumper and banner year, the Scriptures were distributed in forty-seven languages to the fine total of three hundred and twenty-six thousand copies. As a single item it is deserving of mention, that last Christmas, the season of good cheer and kindly charity, when nine distinct organizations interested in the poor sent ten thousand well-laden Christmas baskets of provisions to as many families, the New York Bible Society inclosed in each basket either a New Testament or a gospel portion as a morsel of the Living Bread. And more recently Dr. Carter himself superintended the free distribution of the Scriptures along the famous breadline at one of our large and generous hostelries, believing his novel act to be a means not only of relieving the soul-hunger of the needy, but also, to some extent, of helping abolish the breadline itself.

The American Immigrant does seven-tenths of America's coal-mining

THREE DISTINCT LINES OF WORK.

It is worthy of note that the New York Bible Society is directed by sixty managers, all members of leading churches of the various denominations in the city. The work is strictly unsectarian.

How large a work is now being done is seen in the fact that some one hundred and thirty persons are engaged in it. One of these, a worker on Ellis Island among the immigrants, has been employed there continuously for more than thirty-five years. Another, working among the sailors, has just completed forty years of unbroken service, having visited during last year alone nearly four thousand vessels. Still a third worker speaks eleven different languages, which makes him a whole Pentecost of tongues to a Babel of people. By such agents the New York Bible Society has three distinct fields of operation: The immigrants at Ellis Island, the sailors of all kinds entering and leaving the Harbor, and the city generally, its prisons, hospitals, hotels, and homes. Last year nearly a hundred thousand volumes were distributed among the more than eight hundred thousand immigrants. Sixteen thousand volumes went to the sailors. Ten thousand copies of the Scriptures were placed in three hundred and seventy-two hotels. A large number of volumes were distributed among one hundred and eighty city institutions.

Some Famous Men on Cigarettes

Reprinted from "The Conquest."*

Henry Ford.

Manufacturer of Automobiles.

"If you will study the history of almost any criminal you will find that he is an inveterate cigarette smoker. Boys, through cigarettes, train with bad company. They go with other smokers to the pool rooms and saloons. The cigarette drags them down. Hence if we educate them to the dangers of smoking we will perform a service."

* * *

Dr. Harvey W. Wiley.

Chemistry Expert.

"The use of cigarettes is making inroads on the strength of the nerves of all who smoke them, especially boys of tender years or women who smoke them because they think that the practice is smart. The effect may not be so bad on people of more mature years, but not in any case, no matter how old a man or woman, is smoking helpful. Besides constituting a nuisance, the financial strain connected with use of tobacco stands between millions of people and home comforts."

Hudson Maxim.

Famous Inventor of High Explosives.

"The wreath of cigarette smoke which curls about the head of the growing lad holds his brain in an iron grip which prevents it from growing and his mind from developing just as surely as the iron shoe does the foot of the Chinese girl.

"In the terrible struggle for survival against the deadly cigarette smoke development and growth are sacrificed by nature, which in the fight for very life itself must yield up every vital luxury such as healthy body growth and growth of brain and mind.

"If all boys could be made to know that with every breath of cigarette smoke they inhale imbecility and exhale manhood; that they are tapping their arteries as surely and letting their life's blood out as truly as though their veins and arteries were severed, and that the cigarette is a maker of invalids, criminals and fools—not men—it ought to deter them some. The yellow finger stain is an emblem of deeper degradation and enslavement than the ball and chain."

Judge Ben B. Lindsey.

Of the Supreme Court, Denver.

"One of the very worst habits of boyhood is the cigarette habit. This has long been recognized by all the judges of the courts who deal with young criminals, and especially by judges of police courts, before whom pass thousands of men every year who are addicted to intemperate habits. These judges know that in nearly every case the drunken sots who appear before them, a disgrace to their parents, themselves and the state, began as boys smoking cigarettes. One bad habit led to another. The nicotine and poison in the cigarette created an appetite for alcoholic drink. The cigarette habit not only had a grip upon them in boyhood, but it invited all the other demons of habit to come in and add to the degradation that the cigarette began."

"Connie Mack."

Manager of the Philadelphia Athletics.

"It is my candid opinion, and I have watched very closely the last twelve years or more, that boys at the age of ten to fifteen who have continued smoking cigarettes do not as a rule amount to anything. They are unfitted in every way for any kind of work where brains are needed. No boy or man can expect to succeed in this world to a high position and continue to use cigarettes."

Luther Burbank.

Plant Wizard.

"Several of my young acquaintances are in their graves who gave promise of making happy and useful citizens," declares Luther Burbank, the wizard of the plant and vegetable kingdom, whose experiments have caused the civilized world to wonder, "and there is no question whatever that cigarettes alone were the cause of their destruction. No boy living would commence the use of cigarettes if he knew what a useless, soulless, worthless thing they would make of him."

Dr. A. D. Bush.

In Efficiency Magazine.

"As a result of a series of experiments by Dr. A. D. Bush, it has been ascertained that tobacco smoking causes a decrease of 10.5 per cent in mental efficiency. There was a series of 120 tests on each of 15 men in several different psychic fields. The men who volunteered for the tests were all medical students ranging in age from 21 to 32 years, of varying previous experience, from the farm laborer to the lifelong student. The mental capacity of the students varied from the failure to the honor student. The subjects were attendants at the University of Vermont, where Dr. Bush is an instructor in physiology."

Grantland Rice.

Famous Sport Writer.

"For the last eighteen years I have been either playing or covering for newspapers all different forms of sports and competition. In this way my observation has been from close range—close enough to develop facts and not mere theories.

"Smoking by the young brings a double burden to carry—a burden in both a physical and a mental way. I have noticed that those who do not smoke, who keep in clean if not exactly strict training, have far more energy, much greater stamina, much better control of their nerves, and they also appear to develop a much keener knack at picking up a game.

"In addition to this I have found that they think quicker and better. Under 25 years of age they are developing both physically and mentally, and if this development is hampered by smoking the loss can hardly be made up later on.

"The young in sport make up for their lack of experience by nervous energy and vitality. Smoking cuts in heavily upon both, wearing away the reserve force which youth needs. A cigarette smoker would have but little chance in any red-blooded competition against one who stuck to training. He would have neither the speed for the short sprint nor the stamina for the long race. If I am wrong in this the statistics of eighteen years are wrong, and records and results mean nothing."

Friend Ford
The injurious agent in Cigarettes comes principally from the burning paper wrapper. The substance thereby formed is called "Acrolein." It has a violent action on the nerve centers, producing degeneration of the cells of the brain, which is quite rapid among boys. Unlike most narcotics this degeneration is permanent and uncontrollable.
I employ no person who smokes Cigarettes.

REDEMPTIVE TRUST.

THE GREATEST moral power in the universe is that of trust. It is a unifying constructive force. It takes the broken fragments of a character and joins them again in health and strength. Human nature rises up to meet the expectation of him who confides as certainly as water seeks its level.

In no other way is a man so made to feel his dignity and worth as by the sense of being trusted by some one utterly. No one can feel himself useless or superfluous so long as he has a friend.

Only the abnormal perverted soul will betray confidence. Nothing can so call out the reserve force of a man's moral personality as to be trusted in spite of all the circumstances that seem to make trust impossible. Chords long silent are made to vibrate once more.

It follows that the world's great saviors are those with a genius for trusting. Christ died for the strengthless, and his strength came to them. The power to trust and trust again is the measure of one's moral and spiritual stature. The hearts are little that know not how to forgive. A robust moral constitution throws off the microbes of suspicion. The oxygen of faith consumes the bacilli of cynicism.

At any rate, 'tis better to "die the victim of credulous honesty than to live preserved by the cold policy that still suspects."

Jesus went to the cross through his confidence in man. He believed humanity would yet respond to moral and spiritual forces.

Heine said, "I too could have died for humanity, had I not been haunted by the suspicion that humanity is not worth dying for."

Jesus had no such suspicion. Therefore, he refused to grasp the weapons of physical violence, and appealed to the omnipotence of truth and love. "I, if I be lifted up, will draw all men unto me."

Humanity is rising up to meet his confidence. The world is increasingly turning to him and trusting him to solve its problems. More and more are men saying to him, "Lord to whom shall we go? Thou hast the words of Eternal Life."

HAS CHRISTIANITY FAILED?

ONE of the last chapel talks by Professor Charles R. Henderson, before his final retreat from his work, was upon the subject, "Has Christianity Failed?" To the assertion that the great war among Christian kings and peoples had proved the failure of Christianity, he replied, "It does not prove that Christianity has failed, but only that it has not been tried."

Dr. Henderson maintained that the great war proves the failure of militarism and of diplomacy, the only things that had been tried previous to the outbreak of the war.

The address was made two days after the primary election for the nomination of mayoralty candidates, in which the man who had been the choice of the reform elements of Chicago had been defeated.

Professor Henderson made the incident serve his purpose and remarked: "You might as well say that democracy has failed because the recent primary election has left the voter no choice between two evils.

"We have not yet had the courage or the skill to give either Christianity or democracy a fair trial."

The same theme was chosen by Lyman Abbott for an address in Chicago recently. He chose the historical approach to his subject, "Is Christianity gaining or losing ground?"

It was the great war which inspired Dr. Abbott's theme. Although this war seems at first thought to be going against Christianity, Dr. Abbott held that, taking the long view of Christian progress and comparing the twentieth century with its unChristian man, with the first century with its inhumanity in public and private life, even present untoward conditions register a progress of the Christian spirit and principle.

Dr. Abbott defined the purpose of Christ as the re-establishment of human society on the principle that the strong should serve the weak, the wise should serve the ignorant, and the rich should serve the poor; thus reversing the existing order in which the poor serve the rich, the weak the strong, and the ignorant the wise. Jesus found society resting on its apex.

The first effect of Christianity in the world was to turn it upside down; and its business is to keep on turning it upside down, until it is turned right side up; and it will not be right side up until it is organized on the principle that the strong should serve the weak.

Jesus foresaw that the task was difficult and full of conflict. Dr. Abbott saw evidences of the success of the Christian principle in America's treatment of Cuba and Porto Rico, and the Philippine Islands. It was the parable of the Good Samaritan enacted in international relations: the strong nation went to the rescue of the weak nation.

Dr. Abbott made no reference to Belgium, but his audience could not fail to discern a parallel to America's acts of intervention in the action of England going to the defense of Belgium.

Even the great war is demonstrating the triumph of Christianity on a large scale, the strong putting their strength at the service of the weak.

THE BUDGET PLAN.

IT IS TO BE expected that the initiation of so far-reaching and comprehensive a plan as that provided by the Budget Committee of the General Convention will be attended by temporary inconveniences and even apparent injustices.

It is so with great systematic changes in all fields.

The revision of the tariff is a case in point. Some interests find their revenues diminished, others are financially benefited.

The question, however, is broader than the welfare of any particular concern. It is a question involving principles of political and economic equity, and it concerns the welfare of the whole people.

Likewise the budget plan must be judged in the first instance with reference to the training of the churches to a sense of their responsibility for our whole enterprise. It is a great, concrete exhibition to the whole people of the principle of unity for which we stand. It is the abandonment of competition in favor of co-operation.

It is as certain as anything human can be that the inculcation of the budget idea will in a few years result in a more general prosperity of all our interests, and that, because of the spiritual uplift, sure to come through this triumph of the Christian principle of co-operation over the pagan one of competition, no worthy enterprise among us will lack support.

The danger is, that a childish prejudging of the system by certain temporary and incidental features will prevent it from having an adequate opportunity to demonstrate its value.

The situation is one calling for large-minded, unselfish, far-seeing statesmanship upon the part of those in positions of leadership. If all stand together none need fall.

THE CONSECRATION OF CHILDREN.

IT IS the deep conviction of Disciples and Baptists, along with many others who are members of pedo-baptist churches, that the baptism of children is an error and ought to be discontinued. By most Christian people it has ceased to have significance as a means of salvation. It is now recognized that the chief value of infant baptism is the recognition of the child as entitled to the earnest and prayerful consideration of the church into whose circle he is born.

On the other hand, Baptists and Disciples are beginning to understand that the long protest made by them against infant baptism has had at least one unhappy result. It has caused a reaction against any recognition of the little child as actually born into Christian relations, and under the supervision of the church, where the latter assumes its rightful function of guidance and protection.

Furthermore, there are many excellent people trained in pedo-baptist churches who no longer hold infant baptism to be a valid institution, but who feel very deeply that the church ought to give some kind of recognition to the child, and ought to make clear to its parents and to the community in general its concern.

For this reason in a number of Congregational and other pedo-baptist churches a rite of infant consecration or dedication is being substituted for infant baptism, as a means of correcting what is regarded as an error in former practice, but at the same time of preserving whatever values lie in the public recognition of the child as entitled to the prayerful and sincere regard of the church.

More recently still in churches of the Disciples and the Baptists the same practice has grown in favor. There are a number of our own churches which make a regular practice of dedicating children, either in the Sunday-school service, or in the regular church worship. It is a custom that ought to grow into general favor.

WOMAN IN THE PULPIT.

IT IS AN interesting fact that while women are pressing into many new activities they are not entering the ministry in unusual numbers. They are pressing into social service, journalism, politics, business and into the professions of medicine and law.

Why are they not eagerly turning to the ministry? The church is more than half feminine in its make-up. Women are more devoted to it. They are the Sunday-school teachers, the pastor's assistants, and the welding social influence. They can talk. Sermonizing should be easy for them.

Perhaps the hindrances are traditional prejudices. The Apostle Paul bade them keep silent in the church. But that does not keep them from participating by prayer and exhortation in the prayer-meeting and Endeavor society.

Maybe it is because the pastor of a church is an administrative officer, and therefore the church, like department stores and public schools, has a working force of women presided over and managed by men.

Or can it be that the young women feel in addition to these difficulties that the ministry is discounted in the esteem of our social order? Perhaps the fact that half of the churches of the Disciples do not support regular pastors, and rather poorly compensate those they have, discourages spirited women.

But there are reasons for believing that women will enter the ministry in greater numbers in the future. More are taking training for religious work and entering secondary pastoral positions in the larger congregations. Many have proved themselves efficient in missionary work and in the Young Women's Christian Association.

The great promise of an increase of women in the ministry, however, is in the fact that the church is cultivating a more humanitarian function. It is a neighborhood institution. It must mother the children, guide the youth, and radiate sympathy through all classes, and women excel in these things.

"ONLY THROUGH ME!"

"ONLY through Me!" . . . The clear, high call comes pealing
Above the thunders of the battle-plain;—
Only through Me can Life's red wounds find healing;
Only through Me shall Earth have peace again.
Only through Me! . . . Love's Might, all might transcending,
Alone can draw the poison-fangs of Hate.
Yours the beginning!—Mine a nobler ending—
Peace upon Earth, and Man regenerate!
Only through Me can come the great awaking!
Wrong cannot right the wrongs that Wrong hath done;
Only through Me, all other gods forsaking,
Can ye attain the heights that must be won.
Only through Me shall Victory be sounded;
Only through Me can Right wield righteous sword;
Only through Me shall Peace be surely founded;
Only through Me! . . . Then bid Me to the Board!"

JOHN OXENHAM.

The catholic and sweet-spirited plea for a reunion of Christendom was about to be obscured by a sectarian consciousness and a doctrinal system, all the more heady and stubborn, because it regarded itself as coming right out of the Bible.

The Disciples might have been a body like the Plymouth Brethren.

How they escaped will be an interesting narrative for the future historian.

What new elements entered into the Disciple mind to restore in some measure its catholicity and its sweetness?

The first was the modern missionary movement. Later than most communions, the Disciples came into touch with the world movement of missionary endeavor.

At first missions made but small headway against the provincial character to be found in isolated rural congregations that had no outlook except from the back-door. Gradually, however, the lingering traces of catholicity from the earlier tradition asserted themselves.

The Disciples in a few years have become missionary in a big way.

Furthermore, Disciples graduating from their own colleges began to go for post-graduate work to the great universities. After seventy-five years of intellectual inbreeding, the Disciple mind was cross-fertilized from Yale and Harvard and other universities.

The "fathers" had been university men. Alexander Campbell had used a great library in the wilderness. This taste for the intellectual life again asserted itself, until now there are often nearly as many Disciple divinity graduates as Congregational at Yale, and nearly as many Disciples as Baptists at the University of Chicago.

It is not to be wondered at that the forces of obscurantism among Disciples have fought both missions and higher education. Their instinct is a true one.

The old "covenant theology," with its "typology of the tabernacle," the old formularies that came near sectarianizing the Disciples, cannot live either in the atmosphere of missions or of education. Obscurantism, with its sectarian motive, does well to fight these great enemies of the provincial spirit.

In another generation the story will be told. It is given to a few great leaders to point the way to the light of the new day.

Are Disciples to be obscurantists or catholics? Are they to be leaders of the reunion of the Church, or sectarians?

Every one of us by our life and labors must vote which it shall be!

The Larger Christian World

A Department of Interdenominational Acquaintance.

A Deputation to the Orient.

The foreign mission work of the Presbyterian denomination in the Orient is to be inspected by a deputation from America composed of Secretary Robert W. Speer, Dr. and Mrs. Bovaird and two laymen of the denomination. It is expected that the visit of this department will result in more intelligent administration from the home base and also strengthen the ties between the missionaries and the home churches.

Brotherhoods Federate.

Ionia, Michigan, has been made to feel the power resulting from a union of the Christian men of the community. The brotherhoods of five religious bodies, Baptist, Disciple, Episcopal, Methodist and Presbyterian churches, have federated. The object of the federation is to work for civic and social righteousness, to supervise the charitable and benevolent work of the city, and to concern itself with sanitation and other matters of community welfare.

Mission Study at Winona.

Winona Lake, Ind., is the mecca for mission students every summer. This year the new home mission book, "Missions in Action," by Mrs. John Allen will be studied, with Mrs. D. B. Wells leading. Another book to be used will be "The King's Highway,' by Mrs. Helen Barrett Montgomery.

Dr. Lyman Abbott Reviews His Life.

Dr. Lyman Abbott of New York during his address recently before the Congregational Club in the Hotel La Salle, Chicago, told how he retained his strength and efficiency. Although seventy-nine years old, he showed no sign of fatigue after his address of more than one hour. I have never cared much for reputation, but I care much for friendships," he said. "With my friends I have been moving along with the age. I have not been a stationary engine at the top of a hill, but I have been moving upward. He reviewed the progress of religious thought during the last fifty years and traced the gradual changes in his own conceptions of God. I am an evolutionist," he said. "Evolution is God's way of doing things. All life is a growth. In my experience as a preacher to students I tried to show them that they could be evolutionsts and be Christians."

Presbyterians Secure Exile as Missionary.

City mission workers who speak the language are hard to secure but the Presbyterians of Pittsburgh have recently made a fortunate find. They have engaged the services of Frank Hornalek, a writer and publisher, who has been banished from Austria on account of his political theories, to serve as a special missionary and lecturer among the Bohemians of Pittsburgh. Mr. Hornalek has spent considerable time in France.

Missions for University Students.

The Protestant Episcopal church maintains a chapel for the students of the University of Illinois. In addition to the usual Lenten services, there were given a course of instruction in mission work in the Orient this year. Miss Fanny Greene, who spent many years in Japan, gave a course of instruction on "Life in Japan." Seventeen Japanese students were given a breakfast recently and they were addressed in Japanese by Rev. Alan W. Cooke, of Tokyo.

Religion for Sailors.

There are 600,000 sailors going and coming from the port of New York each year. The Episcopalians have provided the "Seaman's Church Institute," an organization to look after the social needs of the sailors ashore. Last year the institute housed 163,064, or an average of 543 guests a night. This Seaman's Institute has an employment bureau, a savings department, a postoffice, wash-room, barber shop, store for seamen, game room, and many other instruments of social service. A nautical college is operated in connection with the institute. The Episcopalian leaders are now at the task of raising money to free it from debt.

Orthodoxy for Presbyterians.

That the Presbyterians are in a sense drifting away from the faith will be a surprise to many Christian people, but a group of minsters of that denomnation have issued an appeal called "Back to Fundamentals." This appeal is signed by Doctors Maitland Alexander, M. A. Matthews, John F. Carson, James A. Frame, J. Wilbur Chapman, Charles R. Erdman, John R. Davies, D. S. Kennedy, John H. Boyd, Robert Hugh Morris, John B. Rendall, David R. Breed, John Balcolm Shaw and George L. Robinson, besides some laymen. The document wishes new stress to be placed on "the integrity and authority of the Bible as the word of God, the deity of our Lord Jesus Christ, his vicarious atonement on the cross—the only way of salvation—and his resurrection." In order to prevent the invasion of heresy the committee recommends, "when a church is seeking a pastor, that it shall not call any man save one who unreservededly and heartily accepts the great fundamentals herein enumerated." "Sessions are especially urged to take the suggestions made and to examine the ministers thoroughly. This is a critical age."

To the Aid of War Victims.

Pastor Charles Wagner, author of the book, "The Simple Life," has been asked to form a committee to disburse the funds collected by the Christian Herald in this country for the aid of the victims of the great war. On December 31, ten thousand dollars was placed in his hands and a committee composed mostly of laymen has been put in charge of the work of relief. These leaders are selecting the territory recently evacuated by the enemy as the place in which to disburse most of their funds. Women out of employment are being employed in making garments to be given to little children and many other useful forms of relief are being undertaken.

Cleveland Gospel Mission Reports.

The Utah Gospel Mission of Cleveland has issued its annual report of activities for the past twelve months. Under this organization eleven thousand calls were made and a million pages of literature were distributed. The plan of the work is to visit the Mormon settlements by wagon and distribute literature, holding public meetings and discussions wherever possible.

Chicago's Oldest Methodist Church.

There was a Methodist church in Chicago before the city had a charter. This church was organized in 1831 with ten members and met at the Log School House near Canal street and Wolf's Point. This church today owns a very valuable corner in the loop and upon this land a magnificent building will be built in the near future. This church has aided other Methodist churches in Chicago from the income of its property and in forty years 138 churches have received help to the extent of $632,583.93. Some of the eminent men of the denomination have served this church as pastor, and their present minister is Rev. William McAfee.

Churches Help the Unemployed.

The churches of New York have the Interchurch Unemployment Committee organized by the New York Federation of Churches. Dr. Nehemiah Boynton is chairman and Charles Stelzle is executive secretary. This committee is undertaking to cope with the unusual need that prevails during the present months. The committee offers many suggestions as to what each church may do. Among the more interesting suggestions are these: "Encourage families of the church to become personally responsible for others who may be in need of work, a doctor, or simply friendship. Vitalize the prayer-meeting by devoting a period to the 'good and welfare of our neighbor' by asking if any of our neighbors are in distress and what can be done about it. The church can do much to bring the manless job and the jobless man together. Encourage the people to turn over at this period of need leftover jobs about the house or in the office, repair jobs about the home or the church, which could be put off, but will be of immediate help to some needy person if done now when his situation is critical. Intelligent and persuasive church members can canvass their neighborhoods and friends for jobs for the needy much more effectively than the needy themselves. This should be looked upon as essentially religious work, a practical problem in applied religion. Urge employers to give part time work to all their workers and so give all a reasonable livelihood rather than full time to a few while the others suffer. Co-operate with the public school teachers who are in close touch with the situation in the homes of their pupils. Loan agencies can be established to help those temporarily embarrassed or who shrink from 'charity.'" The churches are advised to refrain from conducting soup-kitchens, bread-lines, etc., unless trained relief authorities approve. Family aid is, as a rule, much better. Overlapping and overlooking can be avoided by co-operation through the Federation of Churches. Unless a very unusual situation arises, the churches should not be used for temporary lodging houses, as has sometimes been urged, on account of the serious problem of sanitation. The public charities can provide shelter usually for the homeless men through the municipal lodging house, and in special emergency the churches can arrange with lodging house keepers for temporary care of homeless men.

Warring Nations Seek America's Favor.

The same mail brings to the editorial rooms of The Christian Century the Protestant Weekly Letter, mailed by Prof. Dr. Adolf Deismann, Berlin University, and also a printed document called "German Atrocities in France," being a translation of an official report. Prof. Deismann appeals to his former students in Germany for sympathy and arraigns the Americans for not refusing the allies supplies of ammunition. He says: "I cannot do otherwise than confess to you frankly in an open, brotherly way: I see in the growing antagonism between democracy and plutocracy in your country, not only the awful effects upon the nations in prolonging the war (there is no doubt but that with America's aid it would have ended shortly after Christmas), but also symptoms of disintegration in the forces of Christianity, where we expected united and unbroken strength. I repeat, I am not subject to Pharisaic moods; I belong to a class of many, who are more inclined to turn their eyes upon the faults of their own people, than to see the weaknesses of the stranger. However, I believe that in the question of furnishing war material to a belligerent nation, Germany has a good conscience." The French document has many pages of stories of murder, rape, pillage, and other atrocities of too horrible a character to repeat. If the stories are false, it is horrible to live in a time when men's imaginations work with such fiendish zeal on the morbid and wolfish in man. If these stories are in any measure true, war stands forever branded as the torch that brings the flames of hell into the lives of men.

Dr. Meyer Not Coming to Chicago.

Rev. F. B. Meyer, of London, has written the Moody Bible Institute of Chicago to cancel all his engagements this summer at the various Bible conferences and conventions in this country, partly on account of his return to his former pastorate of Christ Church, made vacant by the resignation of Dr. Len G. Broughton, but chiefly because of the war. Dr. Meyer was one of those who thought the war would be brought to an end in June of this year, but he now believes that the prospect is darker and that there is little hope of any cessation of the conflict before autumn, and perhaps not until 1916. He thinks that if the war grows more severe the necessity for ministering to the bereaved and suffering will demand the best service of all in the front rank of the church, while, if peace comes, they should all stand together for terms of settlement that shall be Christian as well as strong.

Anniversary of John Huss's Martyrdom.

The Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America has invited its constituent bodies to celebrate the 500th anniversary of the martyrdom of John Huss, on July 6th, 1915. The Board of Religious Education of the Moravian Church (Rev. F. W. Stengel, Chairman, Canal Dover, Ohio) has prepared a pamphlet of suggestions and helps for this observance. Prof. W. N. Schwarze, of the Moravian Theological Seminary, Bethlehem, Pa., has prepared a volume entitled, "John Huss," published by Revell, 75 cents net. The Presbyterian Board of Publication (Witherspoon building, Philadelphia, Pa.) has also prepared a complete, attractive, and illustrated order of service for a Sunday-school and church service. Price 5 cents per copy, $3.00 per hundred. Rev. David S. Schaff, D. D., Professor of Church History in the Western Theological seminary, Pittsburgh, Pa., has prepared a volume entitled, "John Huss, His Life and Teachings, after Five Hundred Years," published by Scribners. Denominations and churches which do not prepare special literature may avail themselves of these publications.

Patten Resignation Considered.

The resignation of John A. Patten, chairman of the book committee of the Methodist Book Concern, is a subject that probably will occupy much attention on the part of the twenty-five delegates now assembled at San Francisco in annual convention. Patten's resignation was discussed early in the sessions, but was turned over to a special committee for a report. Mr. Patten, who is proprietor of a patent medicine that has been attacked by the medical journals of the country, has been an important member of the committee.

Dr. Hamill's Successor.

That enthusiastic veteran Sunday-school worker, Mr. E. K. Warren of Three Oaks, Michigan, has been chosen to succeed the late H. M. Hamill, D. D., as president of the International Sunday-school Association. Mr. Warren has been vice-president of the association and chairman of the board of trustees. Mr. G. W. Watts of Durham, N. C., was chosen to succeed Mr. Warren. The election was made by the executive committee, which met in Chicago recently.

Bishop Anderson on President Wilson.

President Woodrow Wilson was likened to Lincoln by Bishop William F. Anderson of Cincinnati during his address before the Methodist preachers of Chicago last week. "Every person in this country who believes in prayer should pray for President Wilson and those associated with him during this world crisis," said the bishop. "No president has borne such heavy responsibility since Lincoln. We need to pray that he may be guided to keep this nation true to its basic principles as expressed in the Declaration of Independence and the Constitution and not permit scheming politicians to gain control." The bishop described his tour through Africa and Europe and declared that "the supreme need among the non-Christian nations of Africa was the same as the need in Europe and in this country—Christ."

Lyman Abbott Defends War.

"Supposing the Good Samaritan had come up an hour earlier, would he have any duty to help the traveler or should he have gone on his way in peace?" With this question, Dr. Lyman Abbott, editor of the Outlook, sought to refute the argument that war is necessarily an evidence of a decadence of Christianity, in an address at the University of Chicago, which established a record in drawing a bigger crowd than the Chicago-Wisconsin ball game at Stagg field. "The progress of the world has come because men have thought justice worth fighting for," said Dr. Abbott. He cited fighting under Cromwell and William of Orange, and in the Civil War, as examples of war for Christianity. Dr. Abbott believes the world is growing better.

AN ANNUAL REPORT.

A southern clergyman tells of a certain congregation whose annual report to its denominational authorities regularly reads like this:

"Number added last year by baptism, none.

"Number added by letter, none.

"Number dismissed by letter, five.

"Number of members who have died, three.

"Amount raised for State Missions, nothing.

"Amount raised for Home Missions, nothing.

"Amount raised for Foreign Missions, nothing."

Each year the letter closes with this request:

"Pray for us, brethren, that we may continue faithful to the end."

President Wilson Talks on China

President Wilson in an address in Washington, D. C., recently at a meeting of the Potomac presbytery of the Presbyterian church pictured China, awakened by the voice of Christ, and furnishing a great momentum in future to the moral forces of the world. He declared that as soon as the unity of China was realized its power would come in the world. "Shall we not see that the parts are fructified by the teachings of Christ?" he asked.

The President's address was devoted partly to incidents of his boyhood, when he assisted his father, a Presbyterian clergyman. "He had the risky habit of saying exactly what he thought," said the President, "a habit which I in part inherited and of which I have tried diligently to cure myself."

Before Mr. Wilson spoke, Warren H. Stuart, a missionary in China, had told of the great importance of the work for Christianity being done there. The President dwelt upon this in his address.

"When I think of the great bodies of opinion which sustain the affairs of the world, it seems to me that the heart and nucleus of them is the principle of Christianity," he continued, "and that, therefore, the conservation of that great fountain of all that is just and righteous is one of the most important things conceivable, infinitely more important than the things which those of us do who attempt to take some part in administering the external affairs of the world.

"When I hear men like Mr. Stuart pleading for the means to introduce this great influence into a part of the world now for the first time feeling its connection with the rest of mankind, now first awakening to the possibilities of the power that lies latent in it, I wonder if it is possible that the imaginations of Christian people will fail to take fire.

"Why, this is the most amazing and inspiring vision that can be offered you, this vision of that great sleeping nation suddenly cried awake by the voice of Christ. Could there be anything more tremendous than that? And could there be any greater contribution to the future momentum of the moral forces of the world than could be made by quickening this force which is being set afoot in China?

"China is at present inchoate, as a nation it is a congeries of parts in each of which there is energy, but which are unbound in any essential and active unit, and just as soon as its unity comes its power will come in the world. Should we not see that the parts are fructified by the teachings of Christ?"

Here and There

How Opinions Die.

"When an opinion that is opposed to the age is incapable of modification and is an obstacle to progress, it will at last be openly repudiated; and if it is identified with any existing interests, or associated with some eternal truth, its rejection will be accompanied by paroxysms of painful agitation. But much more frequently civilization makes opinions that are opposed to it simply obsolete. They perish by indifference, not by controversy. They are relegated to the dim twilight land that surrounds every living faith; the land, not of death, but of the shadow of death; the land of the unrealized and the inoperative. Sometimes, too, we find the phraseology, the ceremonies, the formularies, the external aspect of some phase of belief that has long since perished, connected with a system that has been created by the wants and is thrilling with the life of modern civilization. They resemble those images of departed ancestors, which, it is said, the ancient Ethiopians were accustomed to paint upon their bodies, as if to preserve the pleasing illusion that those could not be really dead whose lineaments were still visible among them, and were still associated with life." Lecky, History of Rationalism in Europe, vol. 1, p. 18.

Seeking the Old Paths.

Naturally, we love the old because we know it; we are fearful of the new because it is unknown. The old paths are trodden into the hardness of granite by millions of feet. It is easy to walk in them. But while we remember the setting of the prophet's exhortation and must do our best to follow it, there is also a time when the old paths no longer invite, when it is more difficult to walk in them than in some untried path. The very smoothness of the old becomes a hindrance to many feet, while the thorns and brambles of the wilderness may seem to others to be a shining road that fades over the hilltop into the radiance of the descending sun. Every reformer left the old paths at the behest of a voice that could not be resisted. The old paths may become the place whereon the unclean are found, and many a ravenous beast. Thomas and Alexander Campbell left one old path, at least, and but for their heroic lives the world would have been deprived of a worthy contribution to its religious life.

Every path whereon the individual finds clearer conceptions of God, of truth, and of duty is ever the old path to him.

The Logic of the Bellumists.

The present pro-armament agitation, let it not be forgotten, is in the interest of peace. Those who affirm otherwise will be set down as incorrigibly ignorant, if not insulting. Your fine military man is not a fighter; he is an apostle of peace. He may wear a gun upon his hip, but that is only to enforce his amiable doctrine. He means to have peace if he lay a dissenter dead at his feet. Recently organized army and navy leagues are peace societies, so we are told. According to Mr. Roosevelt, "the peace prattlers are in no way blessed. On the contrary, only mischief has sprung from the activities of the professional peace prattlers, the ultra-pacifists, who with the shrill clamor of eunuchs, preach the gospel of the milk and water of virtue, and scream that belief in the efficacy of diluted moral mush is essential to salvation." The only sensible peace advocate, according to the ex-president, is one who must arm to the teeth in the interest of peace. But if the present clamor is in the interest of peace, we should like to know how its advocates would proceed to make war.

Military Men Should Get Together and Revise Their Teachings.

General Homer Lea in his militarist work, "The Valor of Ignorance," says: "The deterioration of the military force and the consequent destruction of the militant spirit have been concurrent with national decay."

Says Theodore Roosevelt: "The Roman civilization went down primarily because the Roman citizen would not fight, because Rome had lost the fighting edge."

Other bellumists tell us that "all we know of the law of evolution forbids the conclusion that man will ever lose his warlike pugnacity, or that the nations will survive other than by the struggle of physical force."

Keep these quotations in mind, and remember that the pro-armament agitation is in the interest of peace, even Mr. Roosevelt's agitation. We are told that the best way to keep the peace is to be prepared for war. Now if nations fall into physical degeneracy by losing their fighting edge as did ancient Rome, why organize huge armaments to preserve the peace? If peace is poltroonry, if arbitration is moral insanity, if Mr. Carnegie has excited the pity of the civilized world because of his benevolent dream, why try to insure the peace of the world by arming? If peace will destroy any nation it should go to war. But the bellumist insists that he means to keep the peace. Verily, he is a strange fellow. In one breath he tells us that the warlike nations will inherit the earth; in the next he advocates big guns in the interest of peace, so that the MEEK will inherit the earth. Rome lost her supremacy because she would not fight; the bellumist means that we shall lose ours if we do—we must keep the peace with guns.

The bellumist position reminds us of some theological arguments we have heard: "You can and you can't, you will and you won't, you'll be damned if you do, you'll be damned if you don't."

The pro-armament arguments should be taken with heavy draughts of the mighty deep.

The Revival of a Medieval Practice.

Much has been made of late of those who believe that the Almighty has committed the destiny of the church to their superior wisdom, of the passage which forbids the receiving of an erring brother into our houses. Such a revival of intolerance is without excuse in a civilized age, and among our people. We seem to forget that in the early days of the Restoration movement many houses were closed against the pioneers. They were the hereties of the hereties, the dividers of churches, the sowers of discords in communities and homes. Now that we have won a large measure of success, the fathers are lauded as heroes and martyrs, and the advocates of closed doors are regarded as schismatics and bigots, men who would have burned at the stake if they had dared. Let us learn wisdom from the past, and above all the hopeless folly of attempting to compel the acceptance of any doctrine by force.

What are we to do with false teachers? Do what the most enlightened people of the age do with false teachers in church and state alike. Teach them, be patient with them, recognize that they seek the truth as earnestly as we, that their lives are Christ-like, despite their errors. Let us regard them living as we shall regard them dead—brave and true souls who, though mistaken, were true to the light that was in them, and probably sacrificed more for what they believed to be the truth than ever we did for what we believed to be the truth.

If it be said that the New Testament justifies harsh measures, we must remember that both sides to a controversy have access to the same teaching on that point. Those who burn today may be burned tomorrow. The heresies of the hour may be the commonplaces of next year. "But after the way that they call 'heresy' so worship I the God of my fathers." A few years later the friends of Paul were burning the heretics!

It is always better to run the risk of danger from a devout heretic through the exercise of patience than to slay a prophet in disguise through our impatience.

The sins of tolerance can be corrected; the sins of intolerance never can be.

What A Famous Actress Has to Say of War "Heroes."

The following from the "Christian Work" is of unusual interest just now when the effort is being made to prevent the awful tragedy of Europe from ever being re-enacted in human history.

"Military decorations and medals of honor for so-called bravery in committing wholesale murder," were denounced emphatically a few days ago by Mme. Alla Nazimova, the emotional Russian actress. "Medals of dishonor," she called them. The actress, whose role in "War Brides," now playing in a New York theater, has attracted widespread comment, asserted that women should show their opposition and disgust for warfare by snubbing military geniuses, who, she said, do their work of slaughter so well that life-destroying governments hang upon them these "bloody decorations" of military genius. "I refuse to shake hands. I refuse to show hypocritical courtesy to a man wearing the Iron Cross, gold braid stripes of promotion and other badges of military genius," said Mme. Nazimova. "We shrink from a man who has committed murder—the man who wears—what do you call them—ah, yes, prison stripes. Then how can a conscientious woman, one who frowns on murder, shake hands with and smile upon a man who has directed the murder of thousands, and been lauded and placed on the honor roll of governments whom he has so served. They are not heroes of brave deeds. They are cowards of the worst type. Instead of us women making army officers feel that they are brave men and heroes," continued Nazimova, "we should make them feel the weight of our contempt for this terrible crime of bloodshed and most horrible suffering. And we women should also say to those men marching off to kill, 'Go and fight if you will, but do not come back to us, your hands stained with blood.' Women do not realize their power," Nazimova went on. "If they did they would rise up—a most powerful army—and put a stop to this wholesale murder.

DAVID SPARES PAUL.

INTERNATIONAL UNIFORM LESSON FOR MAY 16.

Golden Text: Love your enemies, do good to them that hate you. Luke 6:27.

1. Samuel 26 Memory Verses, 11, 12.

American Standard Bible.

Copyright, 1901, by Thomas Nelson & Sons. (Used by permission.)

(5) And David arose, and came to the place where Saul had encamped; and David beheld the place where Saul lay, and Abner the son of Ner, the captain of his host: and Saul lay within the place of the wagons, and the people were encamped round about him.

(6) Then answered David and said to Ahimelech the Hittite, and to Abishai the son of Zeruiah, brother to Joab, saying, Who will go down with me to Saul to the camp? And Abishai said, I will go down with thee. (7) So David and Abishai came to the people by night: and, behold, Saul lay sleeping within the place of the wagons, with his spear stuck in the ground at his head; and Abner and the people lay round about him. (8) Then said Abishai to David, God hath delivered up thine enemy into thine hand this day: now therefore let me smite him, I pray thee, with the spear to the earth at one stroke, and I wil not smite the second time. (9) And David said to Abishai, Destroy him not; for who can put forth his hand against Jehovah's anointed, and be guiltless? (10) And David said, As Jehovah liveth, Jehovah will smite him; or his day shall come to die; or he shall go down into battle, and perish. (11) Jehovah forbid that I should put forth my hand against Jehovah's anointed: but now take, I pray thee, the spear that is at his head, and the cruse of water, and let us go. (12) So David took the spear and the cruse of water from Saul's head; and they gat them away; and no man saw it or knew it, neither did any awake; for they were all asleep, because a deep sleep from Jehovah was fallen upon them.

(13) Then David went over to the other side, and stood on the top of the mountain afar off; a great space being between them; (14) and David cried to the people, and to Abner the son of Ner, saying, Answerest thou not, Abner? Then Abner answered and said, Who art thou that criest to the king? (15) And David said to Abner, Art not thou a valiant man? and who is like to thee in Israel? wherefore then hast thou not kept watch over thy lord the king? for there came one of the people in to destroy the king thy lord. (16) This thing is not good that thou hast done. As Jehovah liveth, ye are worthy to die, because ye have not kept watch over your lord, Jehovah's anointed. And now see where the king's spear is, and the cruse of water that was at his head.

Verse by Verse.

BY ASA MCDANIEL.

5. And David arose. When he had ascertained for a certainty that Saul was in the neighborhood, he determined to locate him in person.—Abner. Abner was the uncle of Saul and the captain of his army, see 14:50.—Place of the wagons. The wagons and the people were arranged in a circle around the king when he slept. The thought is that Saul was in the best fortified place in the camp.

6. Ahimelech. He is mentioned nowhere else in the Scriptures.—The Hittite. The Assyrian and Egyptian inscriptions inform us about the Hittite who lived in the neighborhood of Carchemish on the Euphrates, and Kadesh on the Orontes rivers in the sixth and eighth centuries B. C. There were some Hittites in Canaan near Hebron. They were a powerful people at this time in their history.—The son of Zeruiah. Zeruiah was David's sister, hence Abishai and Joab were his nephews. These boys figured in the wars of the future. 2 Sam. 21:17; 2 Sam. 3:30.—Who will go down with me to Saul? David called for volunteers. Read in this connection 2 Ch. 11:14-25.—I will. This shows Abishai's courage, and personal loyalty to David.

7. To the people. Saul's army, see 1 Sam. 14:45.—With his spear stuck in the ground at his head. It was customary for a soldier in camp to place his spear thus, that he might quickly be ready to meet the enemy. It was also a symbol of royalty.

9. Destroy him not. David was not seeking to destroy Saul's life, but to save his own.—Jehovah's anointed. David's reverence for the king is the same here as in 24:6, but in the first instance it is more pronounced.

10. As Jehovah liveth. The usual form of a solemn oath.—Jehovah will smite him. Jehovah will fulfil his own purpose. By a direct blow. His day shall come. In accordance with a decree already fixed, or a natural death.—Go down in battle. This took place a few years later, see 31:1-6. In any case, David will not take the matter in his own hand.

12. A deep sleep. The sleep was so deep that they explained it as a sleep sent from God. This is perfectly natural, for the Arabs are heavy sleepers especially when they have been on a long march. Such an incident could happen at the present time among the men of the desert.

13. Went over to the other side. He crossed the valley and stood on the top of the mountain.—A great space. The thought is, to a place of safety.

15. Art not thou a valiant man? The word for valiant is not in the Hebrew which makes the sarcasm all the more cutting.—Who is like thee in Israel? This sarcastic way of putting the case made it vivid. Abner was like some of the Lord's followers today who are not watching their king's interests.

Magnanimity

The Lesson in Today's Life.

BY JOHN R. EWERS.

Between last week's lesson and this lie many events. Driven from the court of Saul, David, in reality, leads the adventurous life of an outlaw. About him gather many of his brave relatives and in addition a motley band of desperate men seeking any better chance. To govern this wild group taught him kingcraft. Now they protect some landowner from the raids of Arabs and receive in return food and clothing. Now they pilot some caravan through perilous districts and for this service are well repaid. Now they swoop down upon some enemy and help themselves to what they need. Let us notice a very few of the more important events of this outlaw period:

John R. Ewers

THE SHOW-BREAD.

Coming tired and hungry to the priest at Nob, David asked for food. The only bread at hand was the consecrated bread in the sanctuary. This David received and ate. It is worthy of note that Jesus referred to this event to teach that ceremonial law cannot stand in the way of humanity and its need. There is something nobler than slavish devotion to form. Jesus hated formality in religion. He wanted love and service. Evermore these are the highest motives.

ADULLAM.

Into the caves and hills now came that band of "down-and-outers" whom David molded into an army. The nucleus of his conquering army gathered here. If the general is great enough he can make an army out of almost any kind of material. A minister should not complain about the kind of people composing his congregation. If he has the right kind of stuff in him he will fashion them according to his will. Jesus worked with very ordinary men and women. David showed his master spirit by the way in which he organized his band of men.

HEROES.

Among the crowd of six hundred followers, drawn by his attractive personality about him in the hills, were certain of the most heroic men known to history. Never was greater personal devotion shown to a commander. One day as they reclined upon a mossy bank, David sighed for a drink from the old well by the wall of Bethlehem. Standing near their Master were a few of his most loyal men. Hearing this whispered wish, these men fought their way through the Philistines, who held the city, secured the water and brought it triumphantly to their lord. They were worn and possibly wounded. The natural chivalry of David appeared when, rising, he poured out the water as a libation saying that it was too precious for him to drink. The chronicles of David's mighty men make interesting reading. One finds the story of the man who stood alone and slew the Philistines, of the man who plucked the heavy spear out of his enemy's hands, a spear heavy as a weaver's beam, and of that bravest of all men who in time of winter went down into a pit and killed a lion. Hugh Price Hughes had a great sermon upon the man who could slay lions in winter time, i. e., the time of no hot enthusiasm!

HONOR THY PARENTS.

In the midst of this wild and dangerous life it appears that David took thought for his father and mother. He sent them for protection to the land of Ruth. There was always a warm love-side to his life that wins us.

NABAL—THE STINGY.

One of the men protected by David's band was Nabal. He was one of the type who is ready to receive everything and give nothing. The story reads like a romance. When David suggested some return for his protection, Nabal insolently denied him anything. He was not only stingy, but vicious as well. On his way to kill this wretch, David was met by the gracious and beautiful Abigail, who was quite the opposite of her husband. Her charming ways and generous gifts softened David's heart and he spared Nabal. Returning home Abigail found her husband in a drunken debauch. He was drowning his sorrows. A few days later he died and then Abigail became the wife of David. Moral: Thus in trying to save everything he lost everything, his property, his wife and his life.

LARGE-HEARTEDNESS.

The present lesson teaches only one great truth: It pays to be magnanimous. This lesson makes a good story. David and Abishai coming into the very center of Saul's camp. The scepter-spear stuck in the earth with the water-pitcher by it. The clever remark of Abishai that he would not strike twice! The sparing of God's anointed—excellent diplomacy. The call from the distant hill-top. The penitence of the king. It is a good story. Almost as good as the other one about cutting off a part of the King's skirt in the cave. David had learned to labor and to wait. He knew that when the time was ripe God would deliver him of his enemy. Events now follow swiftly and next week we shall read of the last fatal battle with the ancient enemy—the Philistines—and of the sad death of King and Prince.

Disciples Table Talk

Butler Preachers' Banquet.

On March 12, at the Chamber of Commerce, Indianapolis, the Sandwich Club, of Butler College, an organization of ministerial students, banqueted. Friends accompanied the young men. Presidents Howe and Paul, Professors Morro and Hall, and Ferris Stevens spoke. The speeches gave serious consideration to some of the practical problems of the ministerial students.

Wants to Help Terre Haute.

J. Boyd Jones, pastor at Anderson, Ind., has accepted a call to Central church, Terre Haute, the city where politicians are sent off to jail by the carload. In making a statement to the Anderson church as to his reasons for leaving a pleasant pastorate in Anderson, he asserted that he was desirous of sharing in the labor of building a new Terre Haute on moral lines. He will become pastor of a large church, which had a great influx of new members through some evangelistic meetings, and the situation is one that calls for a strong man.

Nebraska School Fights Tobacco.

Cotner university, of Bethany, Neb., has a new regulation: No tobacco user can represent the school in any athletic event, debate or oratorical contest. Students who persist in the use of the weed are finally dismissed from the student body. This same school is encouraging dramatics and an addition is being built to the gymnasium at a cost of two thousand dollars to care for this kind of work more conveniently. The debating teams won every debate in which they engaged this year. Prof. R. L. Hoff has trained the contestants and his work is regarded as being peculiarly effective.

N. B. A. Easter Offering Larger.

The total Easter offering this year for the N. B. A. to and including the eighth day after Easter is $8,572.31. This amount is $127.63 in excess of the amount received last year for a like period. The society urgently needs $40,000 in order to pay the present debts on the homes and to adequately care for the hundreds of wards now in these twelve institutions in ten different states.

Minnesota to Hold Convention.

The Minnesota state convention is to be held in a summer resort from June 28 to July 4. The convention will operate the hotel and furnish board and room for ten dollars per week. Among the leading speakers will be J. H. Goldner, Cleveland, O., and F. W. Burnham, president of the A. C. M. S. The convention promises to be an interesting and helpful one.

Will Not Live With the Mormons.

J. N. Crutcher says he will not live with the Mormons. He received a call to the Salt Lake City, Utah, church, but has decided not to accept it. He will remain in southern California as evangelist and supply preacher. He recently closed several months of supply work at Long Beach, Cal., during which time the church made progress.

An Address to Church Officers.

The Official Board of Norwood church, Cincinnati joined recently in a meeting of the church officials of their city to hear an address by Prof. G. W. Fiske, professor of Church Administration of Oberlin Theological Seminary. He spoke on efficiency in church management.

Envelope Collections in Sunday-school.

First church, Warren, O., is installing the dated envelope system in the Sunday-school. No pledges are being taken from the pupils, but it is desired to keep a record of the contributions of the members. The year-book of the congregation seems to do an injustice to certain families which contribute a large part of their money through the Ladies' Aid Society, or Sunday-school, or C. W. B. M. These families have not been shown in the annual reports as supporting the work generously. It is felt that the new envelope system will help correct this defect.

Church Enjoys Good Music.

Rosemont, Tex., church will have a concert soon by the foremost musical organization of the state. The Schubert Choral Club will give a concert on May 7. This church has for several weeks been using stereopticon missionary lectures at Sunday evening services.

R. F. Thrapp Takes Brief Vacation.

First church, Los Angeles, has granted Russell F. Thrapp a vacation following the sad bereavement which he has suffered in the death of his wife. He will spend some time with his son, Elbridge, at Leland Stanford University. The pulpit is being filled by W. H. Bagby, F. M. Rogers and B. C. Hagerman.

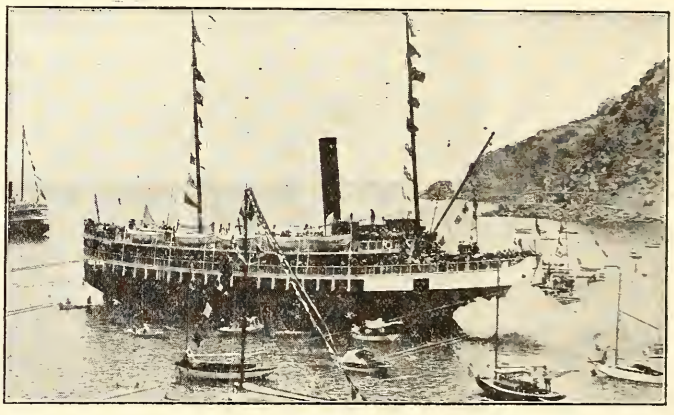
Disciples Churches in Los Angeles

There are few sections of the country where the Disciples are so numerous and aggressive as in Southern California. There are eighty-eight churches in the five counties comprising Southern California, with a membership of about eighteen thousand. But few of these members are native to the state. Most of them, during the last few years, have come from other parts of the country. A great many come who never affiliate with the churches, but those who do take membership are naturally from among the very best churches elsewhere. This fact makes the membership of our churches especially strong. In the city of Los Angeles, which now has a population of half a million people, there are twenty Disciple congregations. Besides these twenty churches, is Christ's Mission, work maintained by the Endeavorers of Southern California on San Pedro street. H. A. Sullivan is the superintendent. This mission holds services nightly, and many men have been led into the better life through this work. The Japanese church is ministered to by Rev. T. Kawai. The national Christian Woman's Board of Missions also does work through the Japanese Institute. A splendid new building has been lately dedicated. A mission is also supported among the Chinese by the Southern California Board of Missions. Mrs. L. S. Blakeslee is superintendent.

The names of the churches in Los Angeles, with pastors, are as follows: Alvarado, W. H. Salyer; Boyle Heights, L. F. Stevens; Broadway, C. F. Hutslar; Central, E. H. Kellar; Cypress Park, Booker Smith; East Eighth St., D. L. McMickens; East Side; Thos. G. Pieton; South Figueroa Boulevard, Leonard G. Thompson; First, Russell F. Thrapp; Highland Park, Dan A. Trundle; Hollywood, Lloyd Darsie; Magnolia Avenue, R. W. Abberly; Naomi Avenue, Nelson H. Browning; Pico Heights, S. M. Bernard; Shorb Avenue; F. W. Jackson; South Park, Scott Anderson; University, J. W. Maddux; Vermont Square, J. R. McIntire; West Side, D. W. Honn; Wilshire Boulevard, J. P. McKnight.

Every church in Los Angeles has regular pastoral work. In fact, all of the churches in Southern California constantly support regular preaching. The churches which are best known in the city are: The Magnolia Ave. church, in which Rev. J. P. McKnight did a monumental work; the Broadway church, founded by the millionaire merchant, B. F. Coulter; the Wilshire Boulevard church, situated on the finest drive in the city; and the First church. It has a central location, at Eleventh and Hope streets. Its membership is the largest in the city, and its downtown location naturally attracts large numbers of people.

During the past year the Boyle Heights church has entered a beautiful and commodious new building. The University church has moved its location to one of the finest boulevards in the city, and is planning to erect a forty thousand dollar edifice. The South Park church, also, has plans for a thirty thousand dollar building, and the basement is already completed and roofed over, and services will be held there for the present. The Pico Heights church has also enlarged its building. In fact, it may be said of every church in the city, that the move is forward. The Hollywood church is unique in its architecture; the Ladies' Home Journal recently published a picture of it as a type of the bungalow style of building for church worship.



Avalon Bay, Santa Catalina Island, which will be seen by convention goers

On account of the fact that there is no rain in Southern California from the first of April to the first of November, and the further fact that the days and nights are always cool in the summer time, the summer attendance is nearly as large as during the season known as winter. One preaches to about as large audiences in August as in January. The membership cannot be said to be altogether stationery. For example, the pastor of the First church, during the last three and a half years has dismissed almost two-thirds of the people who were members at his coming, and has supplied their places with new material. This is true, in some sense, with all of the Los Angeles churches.

The work in the city is carried forward, principally, by an organization known as the Joint Board of Christian Churches, planned somewhat after Kansas City Board. This board has already raised considerable money with which to assist in the erection of new buildings in the city, and the fellowship cultivated has been delightful.

The Disciples stand high in Southern California. They are recognized as leaders in several departments of work. They are never referred to as "Campbellites." In Los Angeles, they are at the forefront of every good work, and are esteemed very highly by the city at large.

Third District (Ill.) Convention.

The annual convention of the Disciples of the Third District of Illinois will be held at First church, Quincy, May 11-13. A splendid program has been prepared and everything points to a good convention. Lodging and breakfast will be furnished free. The ladies are preparing to serve dinner and supper at the church. Every church in the district is urged to send representatives. L. Huff is the secretary.

Dedication of Lemoyne Church, Harrisburg. Pa.

After twenty years of worshiping in a small, unpretentious building, the Lemoyne congregation, assisted by R. H. Fife, on March 28 dedicated a splendid edifice. The new building cost $16,500, and is worth considerably more. It will seat between 750 and 800 people in view of the platform and is dividable by means of movable partitions into various departments thus adapting it to efficient Sunday-school work. There is a fine basement under the entire structure containing large social hall, kitchen, robing rooms and space for an enlarged school when it is needed. It is the most beautiful and convenient, and also the largest, of the churches in the town and gives the Disciples a standing in this eastern community where they are almost unknown, such as they have never enjoyed before. The pastor, Melvin Menges, writes that many persons deserve mention as having helped to make this building possible, but mentions especially Dr. J. W. Bowman, D. C. Hamilton, Prof. W. C. Bowman and H. B. Witman whose steadfastness and generosity through a long period of years have been largely responsible for the establishing of the church in this place and for its present magnificent equipment.

An Efficient Church.

W. H. Baker went to First church, Keokuk, Ia., last September and since that time there have been 42 accessions to the church, 14 by confession and 28 by statement. The church has made good progress. The Sunday-school has increased in average attendance nearly 40 per cent. A Boy Scout troop has been organized with E. G. Weisman as scout master. Mr. Baker is pushing all departments of the church work and the congregation is very carefully organized with a view to finding something for all to do. Revival services held recently brought 12 accessions to the membership. Harry W. Talley assisted with the music.

Wednesday Night Evangelism.

The series of meetings held by H. G. Connelly at New Albany, Ind., for the past two weeks have closed, but for some time to come the Wednesday prayer service will be held on the evangelistic plan, with a sermon by the pastor and special music by Mrs. Connelly, whose beautiful voice and winning personality have done so much to aid Mr. Connelly in his successful work at New Albany and other places. During the two weeks' meeting there were twenty-six confessions and six by statement. The names of all new members will be kept on the visiting list of the Aid Society and each one, if possible, will be visited by two ladies each week for the next two months. The Aid Society is of much assistance to the pastor, two visitors from its membership aiding him in his pastoral visits each week.

Dedicate New Edifice at Kenney.

Kenney, Ill., church has a new building and a new preacher. With this combination, optimism flows bountifully. The old building dedicated in 1883 has been discarded and a fine brick structure costing $12,000 has been consecrated to religious purposes. The new pastor is Mart Gary Smith, at present at the University of Chicago. Mr. Smith has studied at Texas Christian University, Drake University, and late in June will receive an A. M. degree at the University of Chicago. Mr. Smith has served as public school teacher, newspaperman and preacher. In his preaching experience, he spent a term in far away Arizona. The congregation at Kenney is greatly pleased with the work of Mr. Smith, and he is rapidly growing in the esteem of the people.

See Southern California

Vice-President Marshall favors cutting out the last year in high school and the senior year in the university and giving a tour to the golden West instead. One should take in all the "by-products" enroute to the Coast—the Grand Canyon, the Canadian Rockies, Yellowstone, Yosemite and many other attractions, going by the southern route and returning by the northern, or the reverse. It is equal to a year in Europe to spend ninety days in this fashion, and far more safe just now.

Mr. C. C. Chapman, Chairman of the Convention Committee of Arrangements

A retired British army general said of one of the choice spots of the charmed West: "My wife and I have traveled over the world for forty years, and we do not hesitate to say that this is the most sublime spot that we have ever witnessed in Europe, Asia, Africa or America." Mountains, lakes, rivers, seas, gulfs, "sweet fields arrayed in living green," buttes, mesas, canyons, arroyos, forests (live and petrified), beautiful valleys, long vistas of corrugated, terraced, undulating foothills, with massive mountain ranges rising majestically in the background to give them a delightful setting, flowers, oranges, olives, walnut and eucalyptus groves, all may be seen in rich profusion and charming variety.

Nowhere in all the world can one see so much in so short a time and distance as you can from Los Angeles as a starting point. You may see more beauty and variety in one day's ride by train, car or auto, than elsewhere in a week. It only requires a few days, after or before convention, to see wonderful Redlands with her Smiley Heights, Riverside with her Mt. Rubidoux, San Bernardino with her Arrow Head Springs, Uplands with its world-famed streets, Pomona the beautiful, Pasadena the Crown City, Corona with her lovely valley, Whittier fringed with glory, Santa Ana the wonderful, Orange with her charm of scenery, Fullerton with her world famed oranges—all these come within close range of your wondering eyes, on your one day kite-shape track trip. This is but one of a score of possible trips. This is giving you a hurried glance at the index page. You should read this marvelous volume. It will linger in your memory as its most precious heritage.

Finishes Useful Pastorate.

R. L. Handley will close a three and a half year pastorate on May first, at Kalamazoo, Mich. In that period there have been 165 accessions to the church and the building debt has been materially reduced. Many substantial improvements have been made on the house of worship. Mr. Handley has not accepted a call yet, nor has his successor at Kalamazoo been chosen.

Pageant at William Woods.

A jubilee pageant on May 25 is a feature of the 1915 commencement exercise program at William Woods College, Fulton, Missouri. That successful Disciple school for young women celebrates its twenty-fifth birthday at this time, when all the important epochs in its history will be presented in pageantry. William Woods is one of the leading schools for the education of young women in the middle west.

Successful Pastorate Ends.

J. W. Darby has had 510 accessions at Washington, Ind., in three years and the membership is now over a thousand. The Bible-school attendance has trebled in this time. He has resigned this pleasant pastorate and will shortly go to Tulsa, Okla. The church at Tulsa is planning the erection of a hundred thousand dollar building.

Louis R. Patmont Lecturing Again.

Louis R. Patmont, with his brother, Oscar, and his father and mother all visited at Griswold, Ia., recently and Mr. Patmont spoke to a large audience.

Rural Life Conference Held.

The Rural Life Association of Indiana will hold a session at the College of Missions this week. Prof. F. E. Lumley is to speak on "Social Service and the Rural Church." E. C. Good Work at Steubenville, O.

E. H. Wray is minister at Steubenville, O., and his report is full of good cheer. During the past year there have been 151 accessions to the church by confession and baptism. The total receipts of the church have been $7,096.79 of which $1,100 went for missions. Mrs. C. S. Settlemeyer, Nanking, China, is a living link missionary of the church. The Mission Circle has assumed full responsibility for the education of a young woman in the mountain school of Tennessee.

Oliver Stewart Smiting Drink Demon.

Oliver Stewart is a prominent member of the "Flying Squadron," a temperance movement which will visit 250 cities in a preliminary campaign to make the United States dry in 1920. Some of the greatest temperance speakers in the country are on the team. They recently visited Des Moines and made a strong impression on that city.

A New Parsonage in Norfolk, Va.

The movement for building parsonages is being felt in various parts of the country. First church, Norfolk Va., is building a home for its minister, C. M. Watson.

Professor Now a Preacher.

Prof. Alfred Fairhurst, formerly on the faculty of Transylvania University, has abandoned the classroom for the pulpit. He recently accepted the pastorate of Garfield Park church, Santa Cruz, Cal. Another professor to seek the joys of the pastoral relation is E. W. Stairs, who taught several years in Berkeley, but who will soon go into pastoral work again. He has been resting and rusticating in Illinois for some time.

Housing the Bible School.

Prairie City, Ia., church is building a house for its Sunday school, and when dedication day comes around, there will be no money to raise, for it is being provided in advance. On a recent Sunday, they raised money at the rate of a hundred dollars a minute.

Oklahoma Church on Fire.

The edifice at Chickasha, Okla., caught fire on Easter Sunday in the basement, and narrowly escaped destruction. Aside from this unhappy incident, the day was a very encouraging one for the local church.

Sunday-school Trebles in a Year.

Bowling Green, Mo., has a Sunday-school which has trebled in attendance in one year. The pastor, Arthur Stout, recently held two weeks of revival meetings in which 31 members were added to the church.

C. W. B. M. Remembers Orphans.

The C. W. B. M. auxiliary at Rising Sun, Ind., has recently made garments for the children of the St. Louis Orphanage. A total of fifty-one pieces of clothing were sent.

In and Around Chicago

Ed Witwer, a well-known Chicago layman of Jackson Boulevard church, who has been dangerously ill with pneumonia, is still at the hospital but has passed the crisis of his disease safely and may be expected to make full recovery soon.

A device in use in Jackson Boulevard Sunday-school to increase attendance and missionary interest is giving out flags representing the missionary lands. Each Sunday a talk is given on some mission station and the flag representing the country where this station is located is given out. The device is called "A Trip Around the World."

Rev. Lloyd H. Miller, new pastor at Metropolitan Church, Chicago.

The Englewood Christian Orchestra gave an entertainment in West Pullman church last week which was much enjoyed. The numbers were well chosen and rendered with good interpretation.

A number of the Chicago churches have announcements out for Mothers' Day, on May 9.

The young men of Irving Park Sunday school won second place in an inter-church field day held in Irving Park recently. The church is establishing tennis grounds and a training track on the church property to develop budding athletes.

In Park Ridge, a suburb of Chicago, there is a federated church, uniting the Congregationalists and Methodists. Two new members recently asked for baptism according to the custom of the New Testament church and were brought to Irving Park church where they were baptized.

The Chicago Christian Missionary Society will meet in the Ohio building, Wabash avenue and Congress street, Friday evening of this week at which time a number of matters very important in the work of the society will be discussed. F. W. Burnham, president of the American Christian Missionary Society, will be present and speak.

The Christian Endeavor society in Evanston church has been rehearsing a home talent play which will be given on Friday evening, May 7. The name of the play is "Our Neighbors." A Sunday-school class of this church composed of young women, and called The Loyal Daughters, have issued two hundred books of gummed fruit labels, which were printed on the church press by the men helpers in that department.

Charles M. Sharpe continues his ministry at Monroe street church. There is a steady growth in optimism and other things that count.

Evanston church observed Boosters' Week recently. The members received by mail a circular showing from the statistics of the church all the good things that might be said of the church and the pastor, and they were asked that the week be spent in promoting the church in the community.

New York Missions

The three English missions and the Russian mission of Greater New York, show continued growth and healthy interest.

Accessions, during the month, 3; total church members 1,171; enrollment in Sunday-school, 1,010; average attendance Sunday-school, 765; total money raised on the field, $532.86.

Ridgewood Heights mission church, with a floor space of about 35x40, is endeavoring to take care of a Sunday-school of over 200 average attendance. This is an impossibility as far as Sunday-school efficiency and teaching are concerned. With proper equipment there could be a school of 500. Unless they can be assisted in providing larger and better quarters they will have to change the Sunday-school hour for the sole purpose of reducing the attendance about 40 per cent.

The Russian mission has reached its highest point of efficiency under present conditions. With its Sunday-school, outdoor services, English classes, singing classes, etc., nothing can be done meeting in rented rooms in the basement of another church with these same rooms being rented to other nationalities also.

It is for the brotherhood to say whether the Disciples of Christ in New York City shall advance the kingdom, or merely mark time.

M. M. A.

Notes from the Foreign Society

For the first twenty-one days of April there was a gain in the receipts as compared with the same days a year ago of $1,335.52. There was a gain from the churches in the same period of $404.92. It is greatly to be desired that the offerings this year may exceed the offerings of last year by at least twenty per cent.

S. J. Corey delivered four lectures at the College of Missions last week, on the following topics: "The Type of Missionary Needed in the Far East," "The Missionary Challenge and Opportunity of the Far East," "The Missionary's Dynamic," and "Scenes of Mission Work in China and Japan." The last lecture was illustrated by moving pictures secured by Mr. Corey on his recent visit to the Orient.

W. H. Hanna, of Vigan, Philippine Islands, writes that Ilocos Norte should have two families, or workers, at once. He says: "The ten years we have been at work have been a time of seed sowing. The work in the hospital has given us prestige. A new generation has sprung up which know not the old time Romanism and this generation is found now in the intermediate schools and high schools. The time of reaping seems to be at hand."

Owing to the failure of crops for two years, Dr. Osgood, of Chuchow, China, writes that the city reform society has not been able to raise as much money and push forward financial enterprises, but they have carried on two schools in the church for illiterate men and women. There were more than 150 in attendance during the winter. The city teachers gave their time without charge and one of the rich men found the money to finance the enterprise, so it has cost the scholars nothing. He says: "The Society is just finishing a large stone bridge to the park and when that is done they hope to put more buildings in the park and enlarge the present playgrounds. Our schools are about as large as usual. We have about 150 day pupils. Eight pupils and two teachers were baptized this winter, also the wife of another teacher, who is himself a Christian."

R. A. Doan has been asked by the missionaries in Japan to stop on his way back to America and attempt to organize adult Bible classes among the Japanese Christians. There are no organized Bible classes in China except those Mr. Doan has organized since the beginning of the year.

W. L. Burner writes: "Personally, we are more encouraged than ever over the work here in Cuba, but understand that we are just beginning to get into shape to do the work. It will necessarily continue slow, but it is responding and will do even better, I am sure. Our greatest need is a larger force, also a school here in Matanzas. I go to Manguito Monday, where some half dozen are waiting to be baptized. I consider this one of our very best works. The people meet in a private home. They have great hopes for a church building. We have kept them waiting long and must soon make good to them with a building."

Memorial Service for Mrs. R. F. Thrapp.

Mr. and Mrs. R. F. Thrapp spent a number of happy years in the Jacksonville, Ill., church. This church on hearing of the recent death of Mrs. Thrapp from cancer, sent telegrams to Mr. Thrapp and his son, Elbridge. On Wednesday evening, April 14, a memorial service was held in the church at Jacksonville in honor of Mrs. Thrapp. Several papers were read, full of beautiful tributes. Among them was the following: "Her life and influence in the home centered around the one idea of extending the work of the Master through the tireless efforts of her husband. She was heard many times to say that the home of a public man must be so kept that when he entered that home those influences which would be most helpful must surround him, and give that rest and quiet so much needed."

Modern Methods at Nickerson, Kans.

Kansas is always progressive and even in church work there is every evidence that Kansas wants the best. The church at Nickerson, of which Frank G. Richard is pastor, is planning for an every-member canvass and will also join in a union meeting next fall. The Sunday-school at Nickerson is ordering a Bulletin Board and putting the "Conquest" in the hands of its people. A church with such good aids as these should go forward continually.

Veteran Disciple Likes the "Century."

Miss L. Pollard of McAlester, Okla., is a well-read Disciple and is now in her 79th year. She has watched the Disciples grow from a small beginning. Writing with regard to The Christian Century, she says: "I find great pleasure and comfort in your most excellent paper. While I am too old and belong, I guess, too much to the past with its battle for 'first principles,' to keep step with you along some lines, I get strength and inspiration from the sweet, Christ-like spirit you manifest, and I enjoy the paper from a literary standpoint. Down deep in my heart, I believe you are blazing out the only possible way to Christian union. I hope to send you some new subscribers soon."

Indiana State Convention.

The seventy-sixth annual convention of the Disciples in Indiana will be held at Marion, May 10-13. Four full days will be occupied and the workers propose one of the best programs ever presented at a state convention. Free lodging and breakfast will be provided for all delegates. Other meals will be served in the church at a reasonable rate. The programs are off the press and can be secured of C. W. Cauble, 427 Law Building, Indianapolis. John M. Alexander is Indiana's president.

Paris, Ill., Church Wins Civic Victory.

The secular papers of the country have advertised Paris, Ill., far and wide as a city of great wickedness. The friends of Paris do not deny but that there have been some very bad conditions in the city and in all of Edgar county for that matter, for some time. But there has been a campaign on for at least six months and the reform element of the city has scored several victories. Three of these stand out as remarkable achievements. Early last fall a campaign to enlarge the water supply was carried on and a proposition to bond the city for $90,000 for this purpose was carried eight to one. The reform element encouraged by this victory began a campaign for the Commission Form of Government. This had been defeated twice before. But this time it carried five to two. On Tuesday, April 20, a complete reform ticket consisting of mayor and four commissioners was elected by majorities ranging from 150 to 650. H. H. Peters, pastor of First church, has been in this clean-up campaign from the very first and has served on committees in each case. He writes: "Let those who have Paris written down as a town that is totally depraved, revise their report. Bootleggers and gamblers and political crooks will have to leave or change." This is a sample of what could be done in many other places by persistent campaigning.

Men Promote a Revival.

A Union Men's Bible class meeting at the court house in Princeton, Mo., has brought great religious uplift to the town. This class was organized last fall by B. G. Reaves while holding evangelistic services, and has been fostered by the pastor, Edwin T. Cornelius. This spring the class promoted evangelistic meetings and called W. H. Pinkerton to do the preaching. There were 215 penitents during the meetings, which were held in the largest auditorium in town, and nearly half of them went into the Disciples' church. The great majority of the converts were men. This has compelled the church to plan a new building at an expense of twenty thousand dollars. The pastor calls the men's class "the Princeton Idea," and invites pastors to write him about it.

Pen Points of Home Missions

Alberta, Canada, has a growth in population of 413 per cent the past decade. We have ten new churches in that great territory each with a membership of less than 100. Their total membership is about 400. They contributed last year $667.02 to missions and raised for local expenses $5,878.77.

Saskatchewan had a growth in population of 439 per cent. We have eight churches in that province with a total membership of 262. They contributed last year $210.45 to missions and $3,672.11 for local expenses.

British Columbia had a growth of 119 per cent and its present population is 392,480. In this vast domain we have two churches both of them located at Vancouver with a total membership of 108. They contributed last year $75.30 to missions and raised $4,046.44 for local expenses.

The largest gain in the past decade in any one of the states of the Union was in Washington with 120 per cent. In that state we have 133 churches with a total of 16,959 members. They contributed last year to missions $14,948.28 and raised for all local expenses $83,827.89.

We need workers in Utah with the same settled conviction that takes others to the foreign field—a conviction that God has called them there as a life-work.

The development in the Dakotas is so rapid as to submerge all present home missionary provisions to meet the situation.

At Reno, the capital of Nevada, there are students who, until they entered the state university, never had the opportunity of attending a church service or Sunday-school.

The church which keeps in touch with Wyoming for the next few years and shows its faith by generous reinforcements of money and workers, will raise up for itself and the kingdom a mighty following.

The foreign field will find in Texas and Oklahoma another strong base of supply for the future.

300,000 Indians, 100,000 Mexicans, 75,000 Japanese and 70,000 Chinese magnify the missionary opportunity of the great West.

Fundamental to the history of the United States is its location on the Atlantic opposite Europe, and a significant fact connected with its future is its location on the Pacific opposite Asia.

Japanese Buddhist missions expend $40,000 per year to plant that faith on the Pacific coast. This is twice what any Protestant church appropriates for Japanese work there.

From a handful of Disciples meeting in a plumber-shop to a self-supporting church with a building costing $50,000 in six years is neither "a peanut business" nor a waste of missionary money. It cost the American Society $3,000 to do the job.

There is no richer mission field in all the world than the vast Northwest.

In Washington there are 937 towns and villages without any religious privileges whatsoever.

Home Missions and the Rural Church

BY ALVA W. TAYLOR.

Four out of every five churches among the Disciples of Christ are either in the open country or the village where they are supported by farmers. Less than one-half of them are making any progress. They were founded by an evangelism that was superb in its vigor and zeal; they must now be nurtured by a pastoral oversight that is no less vigorous and zealous.

The average membership of the rural church is small; it is able to support preaching for only a part of the time; but the average of giving for the membership is only about one-third that for the members of city churches. There is great need for teaching in regard to stewardship. The country church can give as much per member as the town church and it will when it is cultivated.

The greatest need of the rural church is that of pastoral care. No city church would expect to prosper without it; the country church is no different. Co-operation between rural churches and a vigorous campaign among them for greater giving would enable many to employ pastors. Here is one of the largest pieces of home missionary work offered.

The country churches furnish the larger number of ministers and missionaries. If they decay there is danger ahead for the ministerial supply. But they give little to missions; not more than one out of seven of them contribute regularly to both the home and foreign societies and the average of their gifts is less than ten dollars. To cultivate them and arouse them to some sense of efficiency would bring back many times the money spent in course of time.

There are too many churches in the average rural community. There is scarcely a rural church that does not have from two to four others within four miles of its church yard. Here is one of the largest open fields for the practice of Christian union. The church will live in the country that most effectively serves its community and is least sectarian. The rural church field affords a fine opportunity to a people who preach union.

The American Christian Missionary Society is co-operating with state and district societies in the supervision and conservation of the rural church and is anxious to enlarge this work. It awaits only upon funds to do so. As an example of its activities Missouri may be cited. In that state the work is done on the field by district superintendents; these men oversee all the rural churches; they hold efficiency institutes, keep them in touch with preachers when they are unpastored, cultivate the missionary spirit among them and seek in every way to guide them into a more active and efficient life.

In work for the rural church there is then; (a) a large field for religious consecration, to save religion for the rural community; (b) a fertile source for larger missionary income; there are 5,000 churches of the Disciples of Christ that are doing nothing substantial for our missionary work; one-third of our membership is enrolled out of a million to the annual missionary resources of the brotherhood; (c) the American Christian Missionary Society is anxious to enter this field in a larger way; give it the funds and it will do a great work for the rural church.

MISSION WORK IN NEW MEXICO.

Perry J. Rice has made a tour of the principal mission points in New Mexico and west Texas. He has visited Carlsbad, situated in the lower Pecos valley, Artesia, Roswell, and Clovis. The Roswell church is an independent church and under the leadership of the veteran preacher, Frank Talmage, is a strong supporter of all the missionary enterprises.

Passing north from Clovis, Mr. Rice will visit, on this tour, Tucumcari, where O. W. Hearn is the missionary pastor, and where for more than a year he has been heroically leading the forces, both at Tucumcari and at Roy. J. H. Whistler is preaching for important missions at Raton and East Las Vegas, and in both places the work is making progress. C. L. Dean has recently become pastor of the important church in Albuquerque, where a new building that will cost about ten thousand dollars is under construction; this church has been a mission under the A. C. M. S., and under the immediate direction of the New Mexico West Texas Missionary Society for a number of years, and promises to become self-supporting in a very short time. Hermon P. Williams, formerly of the Philippine Islands, was the missionary pastor here for a number of years, and did a very remarkable work.

There are a number of other points in this state where work is being carried on under our board, and everywhere the congregations are making fine progress. They are looking forward to the response which the stronger churches in the East and central states will give in the May offering to the appeal of the American Society.

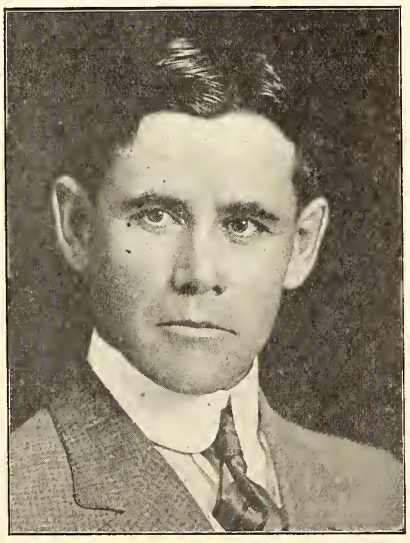
Butler Admitted to North Central Association.

For the first time Butler college has recently made application for admission to the North Central Association of Colleges and Secondary Schools. Surprise was expressed that the application had not been made sooner, because the standard of work was so high. The admission came with a good clean record, and a unanimous vote.

Butler Men Have Many Contests Ahead.

On April 9 Wabash college debated Butler college at Butler chapel on the question,



Rev. Melvin Menges, who is doing a splendid work at Lemoyne Church, Harrisburg, Pa. (see page 17)

"Resolved, That the United States government should own and operate public service telegraph and telephone systems." Butler's debaters are Bruce Robinson, Stanley Selick and Myron Hughel. On April 16 Ferris Stevens represented Butler in the State Peace Contest in oratory, at Vincennes. On Saturday, April 17, Oscar Hagemeier represented Butler at the State Prohibition Oratorical contest at Richmond. On April 23 two teams debated Indiana university on the question of increased armament by the United States as a means for promotion of international peace.

Many Disciples at Purdue.

Purdue university is an institution chiefly for the training of engineers, located at Lafayette, Ind. When a freshman enters this school, he is asked to sign a card showing his church membership or preference. The results for the past year are interesting. They are: Methodist, 674; Presbyterians, 293; Disciples of Christ, 245; Baptists, 119; Catholics, 106; all other religions bodies, 377; no preference, 71. Total 1,885. About seventy per cent of the students are actually members of the churches. But little has been done, until recently, by the denominations for the care of these students; the Methodists are just beginning a student work. The Disciples are doing nothing except through the local church in Lafayette.

Parcel Post Sale Succeeds.

The Christian Endeavor Society of Mt. Sterling, Ill., recently held a "parcel post sale." The young people had solicited their friends at a distance for parcel post packages and these were auctioned off without being opened. The results were very interesting. A total of $150 was cleared from the sale. The pastor, Allan T. Shaw, is much in demand this spring for baccalaureate sermons and commencement addresses. The business men's class had an attendance of over two hundred on Easter.

A Popular Pastor.

J. Clarence Read is much esteemed in his community as is evidenced by the demand upon his time for special services. In a seventeen months' pastorate at Minerva, O., he has conducted thirty-two funerals, made thirteen special addresses and officiated at fourteen weddings. He has received into the church 148 people in that time. The membership of the Minerva church is now 575.

Who Wants a War Trumpet?

A war trumpet should not go begging in these stirring times. W. R. Holder has an ivory war trumpet he secured in Africa which is said to be effective as a noise maker. He also has a number of other African curios that he would like to dispose of. He may be addressed at Roanoke, Ala.

Thirty-four Missionaries.

Thirty-four missionaries from one congregation is a record to arrest attention among the Disciples. This is one item contained in the report of University Place church, Des Moines, which has had thirty-four of its members go to the foreign field. Sixteen have gone to China, seven to India, four to the Philippines, two to Japan, two to Africa, one each to Porto Rico, South America, Turkey, Tibet and one Japanese among his own people in California.

President Serena "Doing Things" at Keuka.

Joseph A. Serena is a bachelor, a preacher, a Harvard alumnus, a financier and a college president. Five years ago he was called to the head of Keuka college, situated on the "Crooked Lake." At that time it was a practically defunct institution with little more than a site and a building. There was scarcely a dollar endowment, a few friends and fewer students. In the five years President Serena has created a good constituency and has compelled the respect of the citizens of Yates county and the Disciples throughout the state. The buildings, which were in a sad state of repair, have been put in first class condition and new lighting and heating systems installed. New cement porches and walks take the place of the old board steps and walks. Through the large campus a new sewage system has been laid. Formerly the large college farm land was non-productive. Today it brings forth its harvests of vegetables and fruit. Several thousand fruit trees are now growing into value where but a few years ago there was nothing but grass and weeds. By his splendid optimism President Serena has secured valuable properties from citizens of the neighborhood. Among the financial backers of the work are the Ball brothers of Muncie, Ind., and Walter Bush of New York City. There is need of the small college. But until recently many of the Disciples in the Empire state have doubted the wisdom of supporting Keuka college. It was thought that a college would not be supported. But President Serena has gone in to spy out the land and to the waiting and dubious hosts of Israel he brings back encouraging reports and the cluster of grapes. Keuka is the annual meeting place for the Disciples of the Empire state. Here, following immediately upon the state convention, will be held the second Eastern School of Methods under the management of the American Society.

DISCIPLES PUBLICATION SOCIETY, PROPRIETORS, : 700 EAST 40th ST., CHICAGO

Disciples Publication Society

The Disciples Publication Society is an organization through which churches of the Disciples of Christ seek to promote undenominational and constructive Christianity.

The relationship it sustains to the Disciples is intimate and organic, though not official. The Society is not a private institution. It has no capital stock. No individuals profit by its earnings. The churches and Sunday-schools own and directly operate it. It is their contribution to the advocacy and practice of the ideals of Christian unity and religious education.

The charter under which the Society exists determines that whatever profits are earned shall be applied to agencies which foster the cause of religious education, although it is clearly conceived that its main task is not to make profits but to produce literature for building up character and for advancing the cause of religion.

* * *

The Disciples Publication Society regards itself as a thoroughly undenominational institution. It is organized and constituted by individuals and churches who interpret the Disciples' religious reformation as ideally an unsectarian and unecclesiastical fraternity, whose common tie and original impuse are fundamentally the desire to practice Christian unity with all Christians.

The Society therefore claims fellowship with all who belong to the living Church of Christ, and desires to co-operate with the Christian people of all communions as well as with the congregations of Disciples, and to serve all.

* * *

In publishing literature for religious education the Society believes a body of such literature prepared by the co-operative effort of many communions reaches a much higher level of catholicity and truth than can be attained by writers limited by the point of view of a single communion.

* * *

The Sunday-school literature (The Bethany System) published by this house, has been prepared through the Society's association with the writers, editors and official publishing houses of the Methodist, Presbyterian, Congregational and other communions. In its mechanical and artistic quality, its low selling-price, its pedagogical adequacy, and, still more, in its happy solution of doctrinal differences it is a striking illustration of the possibilities of the new day of unity into which the church is now being ushered.

* * *

The Christian Century, the chief publication of the Society, desires nothing so much as to be the worthy organ of the Disciples' movement. It has no ambition at all to be regarded as an organ of the Disciples' denomination. It is a free interpreter of the wider fellowship in religious faith and service which it believes every church of Disciples should embody. It strives to interpret all communions, as well as the Disciples, in such terms and with such sympathetic insight as may reveal to all their essential unity in spite of denominational isolation. Unlike the typical denominational paper, The Christian Century, though published by the Disciples, is not published for the Disciples alone. It is published for the Christian world. It desires definitely to occupy a catholic point of view and it seeks readers in all communions.

Our Success Depends Upon You!

The Christian Century and the Disciples Publication Society belong to the Disciples of Christ, not to private individuals. With the steady enlargement of the volume of its business the Society will ultimately be on a self-supporting basis and its earnings will go to the cause of Christian education and missions. At present it depends for its existence upon gifts offered by friends who believe in the work it is doing and wish to see its ideals prevail among the Disciples and the larger Christian world.

You are one of the friends of this great work.

Our success depends upon you!

The list of our supporters has been steadily growing. A few generous men and women have shown especial devotion by making large gifts. Every layman and minister who cherishes hopes for the success of such an enterprise will wish to make a gift to its support.

In addition to your own gift, you know of others in your congregation who, if the matter were brought forcefully to their attention, will find pleasure in making a gift. We depend upon you to secure their support.

The usefulness of the Christian Century and the Disciples Publication Society can be extended immeasurably by the prompt assistance of our generous friends.

We depend upon you to stand behind us! And we need your support now!

Do not let our call pass unheeded but fill out this blank and mail to us at once.

APPROACHING SELF-SUPPORT!

On this page two weeks ago appeared the following itemized exhibit:

Increase in Patronage

In the quarter beginning Oct. 1, our volume of Sunday School business showed an increase over the corresponding quarter of the previous year of 33⅓%

In the quarter beginning Jan. 1, the increase over the corresponding quarter of the previous year was . . . . . 35 %

In the current quarter, beginning April I, the increase over the corresponding quarter of last year has already reached . . . . . 38 %

The circulation of The Christian Century shows an increase during the past year of . . . . . 20 %

The Conquest is but one year and three months old but it starts its second year with an increase in circulation of . . . . . 45 %

Our general book trade shows an increase for the past year of . . . . . 52 %

A question: How much more must the volume of patronage be increased in order to put this enterprise to the point where it will support itself without further help from gifts?

Upon the basis of conservative calculation we make the following statement:

An increase of 50% in our Sunday School patronage for the year beginning October 1, 1915—

Another increase of 50% in our Sunday School patronage for the year beginning October 1, 1916—

Will give us a total volume of business sufficient to make the Disciples Publication Society a self-supporting institution!

A Reasonable Expectation

An increase of 50% each year for the next two years may seem to some an unreasonably optimistic expectation. But in the light of past progress and of present prospects we have courage both to ask for it and to expect it.

The Office Manager of the Society is now in correspondence with a sufficient number of Sunday Schools to bring about this result this very year if they could be brought to a decision before next October!

These schools are favorably considering the Bethany System of Literature.

Most of them are dissatisfied with the literature they are using.

Many of them are already convinced that the Bethany System is the greatest body of Sunday School literature ever produced.

Most of them are actively interested in the principles of religious education of which this house is the leading exponent among the Disciples.

It would be expecting too much, perhaps, to hope that all these schools will adopt the Bethany System next October, but certainly it is not unreasonable to hope that a sufficient number of them will do so to give us a 50% increase next year above the patronage of this year.

We lay this situation—this great opportunity—frankly and impressively upon the loyal hearts of pastors and Sunday School leaders and ask them to begin now to take active steps to turn the patronage of their Schools to this their own brotherhood publication house.

Now is the decisive hour for all friends of this cause to see that it receives the patronage its pre-eminent literature justly deserves!

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY
CHARLES CLAYTON MORRISON, EDITOR HERBERT L. WILLETT, CONTRIBUTING EDITOR

The Garden of the Lord

SOME favored agricultural regions are known as "veritable gardens of the Lord."

The Lord has a great many such gardens. They are in all zones and altitudes. For the Lord is a great specialist in diversification.

He is also conducting a vast number of agricultural and horticultural experiments. When he wants especial help he calls on Luther Burbank. But while the Lord is interested in fruits, potatoes, cacti and rutabagas, his chief crop is men and women.

All over the habitable globe he is growing them. In the tropics a species, under Polaris another, and several varieties between.

In the valley of the Ganges, on the "roof of the world," and in Terre Haute, Indiana.

Sometimes the Lord can not bring a man to full stature in one soil, climate or atmosphere. He has to transplant him, even if the tearing up of his roots seems to threaten his very life.

God could not mature Wilfred Grenfell except by taking him to Labrador.

Dr. Macklin grew to his full size by going to China. Dr. Shelton is making brain and heart in far Thibet.

To finish Abram E. Cory God had to start him in Illinois, U. S. A., afterward take him to China, bring him back for a graduate course of extraordinary, itinerant, apostolic mendicancy, and known only unto the Lord himself, is it how many more degrees Dr. Cory is to take before he reaches the limit of his capacity for growth.

When God wanted a bard to sing into the Western Aryan soul some fine, subtle melodies of the spirit no occidental poet had ever heard, he took the rare, dreamy mystic, Rabindranath Tagore, from the banks of the sacred river. Him already heavy laden with the fruits of Vedic culture, and having strewn his own land with flowers of choicest poesy, God planted for a season by waters of western Babylon. Here he grew to his predestined stature, and became a world poet, singing in the strangers' tongue, with more skill than his teachers, the wonderful works of God.

We do not know, we can not predict, what sort of men and women are going to spring up in some plot of the Lord's garden. The Master Gardener is crossing and fertilizing the stocks of earth socially, religiously, even biologically.

Our own America is the greatest experiment station of all just now.

Herbert Spencer, in spite of his religious agnosticism, was most hopeful of the outcome of the vast experiment conducted by the "Unknowable" in this American "melting pot" of the peoples. The gardening of the Lord is with a view to fruitage. He is never satisfied with mere foliage. The barren fig tree was cursed to teach this lesson.

Even flowers are not enough in a plant whose nature reaches its goal in fruit-bearing.

Frustration of fruition is the supreme negation. The Lord will not suffer it without final and stinging rebuke.

Yet his gardening is with infinite patience, and he waits long for results. "Behold these three years I come seeking fruit on this fig tree, and find none: cut it down." Thus the impatient owner of the vineyard. But the hopeful, solicitous gardener replied, "Lord give it another year. Let me dig about its roots, and fertilize it."

That is God's remedy for barrenness, either in an individual life or the life of a movement.

God is a radical.

He digs about the roots.

He stirs up the people to a sense of the things that are fundamental.

He calls us back from the things that are superficial and adventitious to those that are central and vital.

He calls us away from strife about forms and methods to an earnest inquiry into living principles.

The Divine Gardener is now digging about the roots of the Disciples' enterprise in a very determined and persistent way. He is sending us back to our origin; back to our Bethel where our fathers saw the vision of a united Israel of God.

He is causing us to take an inventory of our present stock of theological and ecclesiastical properties. He is asking us what relation these acquisitions have to the accomplishment of the purpose with which we set out from Washington, Pa.

And, while digging about our roots, God is fertilizing us with all manner of social, humanitarian, scientific and missionary interests and motives. We are not going to fail of fruit-bearing if God's radicalism can prevent it.

But while doing all this root work for us, God is not neglecting other peoples. Everywhere his spading fork is busy in the hands of his many under-gardeners.

There is much human criticism and objection with reference to the Lord's horticultural method.

Paul had much trouble with his Jewish brethren when he digged about the roots of Judaism and showed that "the covenant of promise through faith confirmed unto Abraham, the law, which came four hundred and thirty years after, could not disannul," and that men are the children of Abraham through faith in Christ.

Likewise today when Christian scholarship is digging about the roots of early Christianity, removing the hardpan and gumbo of contemporary Judaism, and revealing the ethico-spiritual significance of Jesus' personality and message, the cry of "heresy" and "infidelity" is raised.

When the historian digs about the roots of the Church and discovers that there are no rites, forms, dogmas, or orders that can certainly claim the prescriptive authority of Jesus, or even the collective authority of the primitive Christian churches, he is looked upon as an iconoclast.

So he is—an idol breaker. But what Christian will not be glad to have the idols overthrown?

How can the church grow to its destined stature and power if it is to be encased in the straight-jacket of a first century, or sixth century, pattern?

Many thoughtful Disciples have come to believe and to feel that the roots of our movement tend to become encrusted with a hard, non-porous, unspiritual, legalistic mode of thought. They feel that this tendency, unless thoroughly overcome, will defeat the fruit-bearing purpose with which the movement began.

They are of the opinion that the Disciples have not, any more than others, a doctrinal and ecclesiastical scheme which can constitute a basis of Christian unity.

A digging about the roots of the movement is needed to discover whether the plea for the "restoration of primitive Christianity" is co-ordinate with the plea for the union of all Christians.

Woe to any movement in our times that can not stand to have its roots digged about, and to be fertilized by streams of influence from many sources!

This radical work going on in the Garden of the Lord signifies "the removal of the things that can be shaken, in order that the things which can not be shaken may remain."

The City of the Blind

What Will the War Do With Constantinople?

BY WILLIAM E. BARTON.

IT IS said that there is one city on earth which no living man ever visited without an ardent desire to return, and that is Constantinople. Long the capital of the Roman Empire, it has been for nearly five centuries the capital of Turkey, and its fate is one of the most interesting of the contingencies of the present great war.

Constantine was not the first man who founded a city there, though he it was who traced with his spear the line of its walls and made it in his time the foremost city in the world. Several centuries before Constantine, a band of Greek adventurers made their home on the Asiatic side of the Bosphorus just opposite the point where the Golden Horn pours its waters into the outlet of the Black Sea before it empties into the Sea of Marmora.

The Galata Bridge, Constantinople

In process of time a second band of Greek colonists appeared in the vicinity and consulted the oracle as to where they should build their town. "Build over against the city of the blind," replied the oracle. Seldom was the message so free from ambiguity. Who were the blind if not those men who had built on the southern shore of the Bosphorus, failing to realize the overwhelming advantages of the opposite location? They built their city there on the peninsula washed on three sides by the Sea of Marmora, the Bosphorus and the Golden Horn.

BEGINNING OF CONSTANTINOPLE.

When Constantine became emperor and sought to build a newer and greater Rome, he discovered the advantage of the same location. Three of its boundaries had been defined by nature. He traced the fourth with a trailing spear. He named the new and greater Rome after himself, and Constantinople became the capital of the world.

From the first it was a Christian city, for Constantine was the first Christian emperor. It was the meeting-place of many ecclesiastical councils, some of them ecumenical. It was filled with churches and monasteries; it was enriched with the reputed relics of prophets, saints and martyrs. Many older cities were plundered that their wealth might increase the glory of this new built-to-order town. It was built so large that all Constantine's advisers declared its bounds too wide, but within eighty years its walls were found too narrow and it had to be enlarged. It now has spread across the Golden Horn and beyond the Bosphorus. The old part on the peninsula is known as Stamboul; the portion across the Bosphorus in Asia is Scutari, while the most modern part, northeast of the Golden Horn, and containing, by the way, the principal palaces of the sultan as well as the residences and hotels most frequented by Americans and Europeans, is Pera.

WHAT OF THE FUTURE?

What is going to happen to Constantinople when the war is over? This is, perhaps, the most important single question involved in the present struggle. Russia wants it. She would give the lives of a million men for Constantinople and count their loss but gain. If the allies are successful and she does not get Constantinople as a part of her share of the spoil, it is not impossible that she would be willing to fight the whole of western Europe for its possession. Earl Grey has said that Great Britain was in full sympathy with Russia's desire for an outlet to the sea. This is a diplomatic statement and lacks something of saying that Britain is willing Russia should have Constantinople, but it is hardly likely that Russia will interpret it as meaning anything less.

If Russia gets Constantinople through the active co-operation of Great Britain, it will be one of the strangest instances on record of war or politics making strange bed fellows. Great Britain fought the Crimean War to prevent Russia's getting a hold on Constantinople. She kept Turkey alive long decades after that country had come to be known as "the sick man of Europe," not because she loved Turkey, but because she hated Russia. To prevent Russia's gaining her coveted foothold on the Bosphorus the immortal six hundred made their heroic charge at Balaklava, when

> "Cossack and Russian
> Reeled from the sabre-stroke,
> Shattered and sundered."

To prevent this Kipling wrote his "Adamzad," warning England to beware of "the bear that walks like a man." To prevent this Britain endured the scorpion lash of William Watson's sonnets holding Britain morally responsible for the bloody massacre of the Armenians by Turkey. England has held her nose with one hand over the atrocities of the Turks, while with the other hand she has held Russia back from the possession of Constantinople. Not without deep searchings of heart will she yield to Russia now her long-contested protest against the western foothold of her long-hated rival.

THE TURK MUST MOVE.

But whatever happens in this war, the Turk must move out of Europe, and when he moves he leaves Constantinople behind him. He was on the march before this war began. Thousands of families of Turks from the Balkans have been making their way through Constantinople into Asia Minor ever since the first Bulgarian war. They have presented a strange appearing procession and have looked like the pageant of the Middle Ages suddenly come to life and parading through the twentieth century back into the dim region from which they emerged. They are going back and their kindred will follow them till the last province of the Turk in Europe is lost to him.

Interior of the Church of Sancta Sophia

Fifty years before Columbus discovered America occurred the siege of Constantinople. Mohammed captured it in 1453. The lines of his fort on the European side traced the initial of his name. Long stretches of these walls still stand well studded with strong round towers. It is a remarkable coincidence that just above this fort, and in close proximity to it, stands the American institution, Robert College, which is educating the leaders of the new Turkey.

I well remember the day I stood on the platform of the chapel in Robert College and addressed the student body there. When I had finished what song do you think they sang? It was

"My country 'tis of thee,
Sweet land of liberty,
Of thee I sing."

Liberty is a word they dared not use in their own language, but they could sing it in a song of the country that is to be theirs when tyranny and oppression, such as they have known under the rule of the sublime porte, shall finally come to an end. As our launch steamed back to Constantinople a body of the students climbed one of the towers of Mohammed's old fort and waved a farewell at us with a national banner. It was not the star and crescent; it was the Stars and Stripes.

WHERE HISTORY ERRED.

The fall of Constantinople in 1453 was one of the worst and one of the best things that ever happened on earth. It drove learning westward. It sent the scholars and merchants of Christendom to Italy and western Europe. It gave a powerful stimulus to the waning Renaissance, and brought about a new activity of commerce and science, one of whose results was the discovery of America.

But it enthroned the Turk on one of the most important waterways of the world. It gave over the capital of Christendom into the hands of the Mohammedan. It made what had been the center of the Christian world a new center of the Mohammedan world. It devoted to oppression and misrule the spot which held the keys to East and West.

And the Church of Sancta Sophia became a mosque!

That even the site of Solomon's temple in Jerusalem was already devoted to a mosque seemed not less terrible than this. For the Church of Sancta Sophia was the central church of Christendom. There every Friday for nearly four and one-half centuries the Koran has been read with a drawn sword, to signify that this spot was taken and is held by the power of the sword.

MARK TWAIN ON SANCTA SOPHIA.

Mark Twain, who saw all holy places more or less irreverently, said that the Church of Sancta Sophia seemed to him the rustiest old barn in Europe. It is not prepossessing in its outer appearance, and when one is inside he meets a double disappointment. Its perfect symmetry prevents one's realizing its immensity and its walls are so covered with tawdry decorations one finds it difficult to believe that it is really a beautiful place. Beautiful it certainly is, however, and cost not less than $5,000,000.

Who was Sancta Sophia? She was no one. This church is dedicated to no individual saint, but to Holy Wisdom, the wisdom of God. It is the third church that has occupied this site. The first was dedicated February 15, 360, but was burned in the riots caused by the exile of Chrysostom. The second church was dedicated in 415, but was burned in 532. The foundation stone of the present church was laid by the Emperor Justinian February 23, 532, only forty days after the fire. It was five years and ten months in building and was dedicated on the following Christmas in 537. For it every species of marble, granite and porphyry were brought from far away ports. Ancient temples of Egypt, erected to the worship of Isis and Osiris; the temple of Pallas at Athens, that of Phœbus at Delos, and that of Cybele at Cyzicus—all were plundered of columns and ornaments for the erection of this great sanctuary. When it was completed Justinian entered the church and exclaimed, "Solomon, I have surpassed thee."

The Sublime Porte

A FAMOUS CHURCH.

There is an interesting old legend to the effect that Justinian refused to permit anyone but himself to contribute to the building, and caused a tablet to be prepared with his name as the sole builder. On the day of the dedication, however, his name was found to have been erased and that of an unknown woman substituted. The woman was sought and found to be a poor old widow living in a hovel near the wharves. Trembling and frightened, she stood in the presence of the emperor and he demanded what she had done to rob him of his glory. She answered that in her great desire to help she had pulled a little straw from her bed and given to the oxen that drew the material for the building. Then Justinian knew that an angel had blotted out his name and inserted that of the one giver whose gift represented sacrifice.

In plan, the Church of Sancta Sophia approaches a square, being 235 feet north and south by 250 east and west, exclusive of the narthex and the apse. The great dome rises to a height of 179 feet and is 107 feet across. It is a very little lower than a hemisphere. It is not the widest dome in the world—that of the Pantheon is 130 feet in diameter, that of St. Peter's and of the Duomo in Florence are each 126 feet. The dome of St. Sophia is almost exactly as large in diameter as that of St. Paul's in London, which is 108 feet. In its symmetry and majesty, however, it probably deserves to be called what Ferguson has called it, "The most perfect and most beautiful church which has yet been erected by any Christian people."

Russia wants this church as the royal cathedral of her national religion, and she is very likely to get it. It is hardly to be expected that it will remain much longer a center of Mohammedan worship.

If Constantinople should give up Sancta Sophia as a place of Christian worship, the Mohammedans still would not lack for mosques in Constantinople in which to worship God according to the commands of Islam. Indeed, there are likely to be quite as many mosques as they need, for there will be fewer people in Constantinople of worship after that fashion. Technically, Sancta Sophia is not the most sacred mosque in Constantinople. That honor is accorded to the Mosque of Achmed I, the only mosque outside of Mecca which has seven minarets. Unlike Sancta Sophia, this mosque has a very pleasing exterior and so has that of Sulieman the Magnificent.

"THE CITY OF THE BLIND."

There are no bridges across the Bosphorus, but there are two across the Golden Horn. Like everything else in Constantinople, they are rickety. The Galata bridge is a place where one may stand and see all the civilizations of the world go by. Across it travels not only every sort and condition of Turk, from the hideous crippled beggar to the sultan on his way from his palace to the mosque, but representatives of every other nationality on earth. I was standing there one night waiting for the boat which was to take me over to Scutari and saw a little group of people a little further along the bridge, and wondered who they were, when a young woman among them started an American popular song, and the whole group joined in that ragtime jingle. A meeting-place of the nations it has been for generations. It was on that bridge the Armenian massacres started and there at any minute something is liable to happen that shall change the destiny of nations.

"The City of the Blind" was what the oracle called the old village on the site of Scutari. Constantinople grew to include that site, and there has been blindness and bigotry and sin and folly throughout its long, eventful history. Let us hope a better day is coming for Constantinople, but will it come through Russia? England did not think so yesterday. When this cruel war is over one of the most difficult and momentous questions to be settled will be the disposition of Constantinople.

Evangelist and Parish Minister

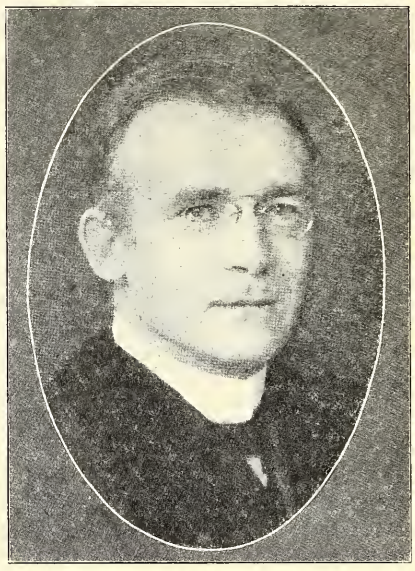
BY CHARLES E. JEFFERSON.

The sensational prominence attained recently by several evangelists has been the occasion of many invidious remarks about the steady-going pastors of the land. Compared to the outstanding success of the evangelist the ordinary pastor is a pitiable and exasperating failure. Here, however, from the pen of Dr. Jefferson, the Broadway Tabernacle minister of New York, is an analysis and appraisal of the two types of men which is illuminating. The article first appeared in The Christian Work.

WHENEVER a successful evangelist goes flaming through a community the temptation presents itself to a certain type of mind to institute comparisons between the evangelist and the parish minister, always to the disparagement of the latter. There are persons who are never so happy as when they are jabbing at the church, or cudgeling the ministers, and the triumphal march of a prosperous evangelist gives these critics a spacious opportunity. They dwell with glee upon the enormous audiences of the evangelist, the inference drawn being that if ministers knew how to preach, their audiences would be equally enormous. When you compare a man who preaches to ten thousand with a man who preaches to a few hundreds, the latter looks much like a dwarf. And then the number of converts is never lost sight of. A famous evangelist can make as many as five hundred converts by a single sermon. If you compare him with a man who preaches an entire year with less than a hundred converts to show for it, the latter seems to be either lazy or incompetent, or to have forsaken the faith once for all delivered to the saints. The evangelist gets into the papers. All his actions are exploited and his words are quoted. The parish minister seldom or never gets into the paper, and it is reasonable to infer that this is due to the stupid and ineffective manner in which he carries on the Lord's work. The fact that an evangelist draws enormous crowds and produces numberless sensations, and stirs things up, is held before the public in such a way as to convey the impression that the average minister is a bore and a drone, that he is smothered by conventionality and stupefied by dignity, and does not know how to do the work to which he has been called.

"RELIGION IN THE SPOT LIGHT."

A wiseacre of the first order has recently called attention to the fact that a certain popular evangelist puts religion under the "spot light." Whereupon the wiseacre proceeds to sneer at the sensationless character of the average church, and to jeer at the poor ministers who have an idea that to preach religion in a way that grips the attention and imagination is a sin. Now to get under the "spot light" is the first instinct of a showman. That was where Barnum wanted to be, and all his successors have had a similar ambition. To keep oneself in the spot light, however, is a different undertaking, and heroic measures must be resorted to if one is to succeed. If a minister of the gospel is willing to say things which no other minister in all the country is willing to say, and to do things which no other minister is willing to do, he becomes at once a unique man, and thousands of people become curious to see and hear him. Any man who can do a more thrilling stunt than any other man in his profession, is certain to draw an immense crowd whether he kills bulls, fights prize fights, or rides circus horses, or preaches religion. A crowd is always an impressive phenomenon, and to no one is it more impressive than to an American. Matthew Arnold long ago pointed out our national weakness for numbers, and it is a weakness which we show no tendency to outgrow.



Rev. Charles E. Jefferson

A FEW FACTS TO BE CONSIDERED.

Now before we belabor the parish clergyman for not drawing the crowd, there are a few facts to be considered. In the first place an evangelist is always dependent, in large measure, for his crowd on the ministers. No evangelist who is careful of his reputation ever ventures into a community without securing in advance the promised co-operation of all or nearly all of the leading ministers of the town. Without them he realizes he can do little. He must use not only the ministers, but he must have the choirs and the congregations of their churches. Unless he is promised all these, he will not come. Churches must be closed, ordinary church work must be in large measure suspended, officers and laymen must come to his assistance, otherwise he cannot be induced to come. He makes sure of a crowd before he dares show his face. Unless he is certain of a packed house he will not open his mouth. This is the inexorable rule of all successful evangelists. We do not criticize it: we simply state it. An evangelist stands therefore on a platform which his brother ministers have erected for him. If he is seen farther than they are, it is because he stands on their shoulders. If he has a great body of men and women ready to back him up, it is because these people have been trained by the pastors. Something of the glory of the work of the evangelist therefore is certainly due to the obscure and faithful men who are not mentioned by the papers. If the evangelist, having utilized the ministers and churches, pours upon them opprobrious and insulting speech, this is because the big crowds have turned his head and made him bumptious.

CROWDS ARE EPHEMERAL.

Moreover big crowds are ephemeral. They can be held only for a limited number of weeks. No matter how startling the gestures or how amazing the adjectives, these speedily lose their power. Sensationalism is always transitory. Thrills cannot be indefinitely continued. When the evangelist has exhausted the nerves of one community, he can pass on to another, and repeat his triumph there. But parish ministers cannot become itinerants. They must bear the burden through the heat and stress of a long succession of months and years. The 157,000 Protestant ministers of this country are not at liberty to drop their work and flee to another parish as soon as attention flags or enthusiasm wanes. It is for them to plod on through the toilsome years, steadfast and immovable, knowing that their work is not in vain in the Lord. We do not question the service which an evangelist may render to a community, but no matter how great it is, it is not so great as the service rendered by the pastors who labor there straight onward through the years. These are the men who build up the temper of heart and frame of mind upon which the spiritual progress of mankind depends. A cyclone sweeping through a town will cause a deal of comment, and attract more attention than the quiet shining of the sun and moon and stars, but it is the sun after all upon which the lawns and gardens all depend. Brilliant evangelists are like comets. By their eccentric movements they may induce many to gaze heavenward, but it is the quiet and steady shining of the settled pastors upon which humanity must evermore depend for growth in grace and in the knowledge of Jesus Christ our Savior.

ARE MINISTERS INTERESTING?

As to ministers not being as interesting as they ought to be, the accusation must be confessed to have, at least in many instances, solid foundations. But no one ought to expect a man who preaches ten or twenty years in the same pulpit to be so fascinating as a man who preaches a few weeks. Novelty is one of the elements of charm, and a stranger has a freshness which the settled pastor cannot have. But even a blazing and coruscating evangelist would become tame enough if compelled to face the same congregation for a dozen years. Soon his freshness would wither, his strings of glittering adjectives would fail to stir, his amazing periods would lose their magic, and he would become very like the men whose dry-as-dust performances are now the scandal of the critics. America has probably not produced three evangelists in two centuries who could maintain themselves for a dozen years in the same pulpit. The red pepper type of evangelist is the shortest lived of them all. The stronger the stimulant which a speaker uses, the shorter the time which it is efficacious. Hot sauces create a raging thirst, but only for a season. There are not many geniuses in the pulpit, but there are as many there as one finds in medicine, or law, or business, or teaching, or literature. The number of fine talented men in the pulpit is not large, but it is as large as in any other profession. After all, God does not seem to be dependent on brilliant men. The world gets on by the plodding fidelity of men who have intelligence enough to see what they ought to do, and have grace enough to do it. To expect every minister, or half the ministers, or one minister in five, to equal an exceptional evangelist of many and extraordinary gifts, is as foolish as to find fault with poets because they do not write like Browning or Tennyson, and with artists because they do not all paint like Millet or Burne-Jones.

PERSPIRATION VERSUS CALM CONFIDENCE.

The furious activity of an evangelist gives the scribes a chance to scoff at the sloth of the ministers. It is intimated that "if there were more perspiration in the pulpit there would be more power"—a fair sample of the smart sayings in which superficial men take special delight. Perspiration has nothing to do with pulpit power, as every man of sense knows. The most influential preacher in Oxford in the nineteenth century was John Henry Newman, and no one ever saw a drop of sweat upon his brow. John Wesley was a giant who changed the face of England, but he was a quiet little gentleman who curbed great mobs, not by physical exertions, but by the calm strength of an intrepid spirit. An evangelist does most of his work in public view. He preaches sermons which he has already preached scores of times, and therefore he can preach a dozen or more of them a week. He has no pastoral work. He does not visit the sick, comfort the bereaved, talk to the dying, or bury the dead. The executive work of a parish does not lie on his shoulders. He knows nothing of the hundred problems which every pastor faces every week. He is not responsible for the performance of denominational duties. On the other hand, only a small part of a pastor's time is devoted to preaching. He is an executive officer, he is a pastor, he is a servant of the town. Many organizations inside of his church and outside of it look to him for guidance. Without him many causes would weaken and fail. He is an indefatigable worker, and his work is more indispensable to the progress of the world than is that of any evangelist however gifted. In his patience he saves his soul and the souls of others. He does more than he seems to be doing. An evangelist is at liberty to indulge to the limit his gift of denunciation. Some men love to make the fur fly. They revel in the art of skinning people. This is always interesting. A crowd loves to see a preacher flay human beings. A man with a copious vocabulary and a marked talent for acting, can jump upon sin in such a way as to tickle the hearts of all who see him. But here again the parish minister is at a disadvantage. He denounces wrongs now and then, but his denunciation cannot be a continuous performance. If he scorches wrong-doers continuously he makes himself a bore. No congregation could possibly endure a preacher for five years who in every sermon hurled flaming thunderbolts. There is nothing which becomes so wearisome as continuous invective. Thunder is bearable now and then, but we soon tire of it. An occasional flash of lightning may clear the air, but continuous lightning becomes a nuisance and at last a pain.

GIVE EVERY MAN HIS DUE.

It is not because ministers are cowards that they do not give themselves up to the unceasing denunciation of evil. It is false to assert that "the pulpit today has lost the words of satire, scorn and condemnation from its vocabulary." The American pulpit has never been so bold and hot in its denunciation of sin as it is today.

Let us give every evangelist his due, but let us be careful not to exalt him at the expense of the men who are bearing a heavier burden than he. It is the ministers who make it possible for an evangelist to come into a city, and it is the ministers who have to pick up the work after the evangelist has gone. A depressing reaction usually follows the excitement caused by a so-called revival, and it is the ministers who have to tide the community over these periods of spiritual demoralization. An evangelist starts men to thinking about spiritual things, but it is the minister who must feed them and train them to walk the difficult way. An evangelist stirs the emotions and awakens the conscience, but it is the pastor who by patient and long continued efforts builds men up in Christian character and makes them workmen of whom no one needs to be ashamed.

"IT REMAINS FOR THE CHURCHES."

An enthusiastic devotee writing recently of the phenomenal tabulated results of a revival in a nearby city, after exploiting all the figures he could get hold of, closed his article with these words: "The evangelist has stirred up things. That is a real service. It remains for the churches to measure up. Will they do it? Can they do it?" So it always is. "It remains for the churches!" Yes, and it remains for the ministers. It is one thing to stir things up, and it is another thing to build things up. It is one thing to create a great furor which burns like a fever for a few weeks, and it is another thing to train men in the sober ways of a godly life. And so the pastor must not only precede the evangelist, he must follow him. The poor, stupid, uninteresting, lazy, cowardly ministers must prepare the way for him, and they must, after he has gone, perform the quiet drudgery which is noticed in heaven, but which always escapes the eyes of the scribes.

Self-Possession the Present Need

Another Message from President Woodrow Wilson.

The need of self-possession, calmness and a judical temperament on the part of the United States in the present world crisis was urged last month by President Wilson in a speech before the session of the twenty-fourth centennial congress of the Daughters of the American Revolution, held at Washington, D. C. The President said self-possession was the supreme test of a nation's mettle, and urged the congress to rally to the cause of righteousness, as ministered by those who hold their minds quiet and judge upon principle. The following is the substance of the President's address.

IN THESE times, when unusual things are happening and there are many queries as to the future, I suppose that these associations whose business it is to commemorate the past must be asking themselves what part they have in the future. Our business, of course, is not merely one of recollection, not merely the business of remembering and revereneing the traditions of the country that we love. There is no dignity in a tradition which has lost its practical energy, and our interest in traditions is that they should bear fruitage in the present and a still richer fruitage in the future.

Your society is particularly intended to commemorate the circumstances of the birth of this nation, but I take it for granted that it is not your thought to create an exclusive company of those whose recollections by heredity run back to that great day, but that your thought is also of the constant rebirth of the nation.

In a peculiar degree the United States seems to be reborn from generation to generation, because renewed out of all the sources of human energy in the world. There is here a great melting pot in which we must compound a precious metal. That metal is the metal of nationality, and if you will not think I am merely playing upon words I would like to spell the word "metal" in two ways. For it is just the mettle of this nation that we are now most interested in.

There are many tests by which a nation makes proof of its greatness, but it seems to me the supreme test is self-possession, the power to resist excitement, to think calmly, to think in moments of difficulty as clearly as it would think in moments of ease—to be absolutely master of itself and of its fortunes.

HUMAN LIBERTY THE CHIEF THING.

We are interested in the United States, politically speaking, in nothing but human liberty. We are not interested in politics or government for their own sake. I venture to say that if there should ever be discovered a better form of government than the Democratic, we should wish to adopt it, because it was better, for our object is not to stick in the bark, our object is not merely to preserve forms, but to preserve a precious essence, and that is the essence of equal opportunity and essential human rights.

America forgets what she was born for when she does exactly the way every other nation does—when she loses her recollection of her main object, as sometimes nations do and sometimes, perhaps, she herself has done, in pursuing some immediate and transitory object.

I cannot speak in more than general terms. Indeed, it is indiscreet for me to speak at all. But I can ask you to rally to the cause which is dearer in my estimation than any other cause, and that is the cause of righteousness as ministered to by those who hold their minds quiet and judge according to principle. We must preserve the judicial temperament, not because we would sit in judgment upon others, but because we should ultimately wish to sit in judgment upon ourselves, because we should ultimately wish to be justified by our own consciences and by the standards of our own national life. Do you wonder that, hoping for such things and expecting such things from bodies of people like this, I should be glad to come and greet you? That I should esteem it an honor to say that I hope I shall have some part in the great things that you are trying to do and to create in the field of the national spirit?

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY

EDITORIAL

TO OUR READERS.

FOR the past three weeks The Christian Century has been edited and issued without the participation of the editor. Mr. Morrison has been compelled to yield to the advice of his physician and take a rest. The combination of editorial and administrative responsibility which he has carried since the death of Mr. J. C. Kilner, the business manager, over three years ago has worn down his strength and he is now under the physician's care in Springfield, Ill.

Until his return the editorials are being provided by a group of our ablest and best known writers, whom our readers can identify by their familiar initials which appear from week to week under the "first page" editorials.

Readers and friends of The Christian Century will no doubt join the office staff in earnest wishes for Mr. Morrison's speedy recuperation.

IS ROOSEVELT FOR PEACE OR WAR?

SINCE taking the Nobel Peace Prize of $40,000, Mr. Roosevelt has stood in the minds of most Americans as preeminently a man of peace. But the few utterances from him on the subject of peace and war since the opening of the present war, have given his admirers a fear that he was rapidly developing into a militarist; and the expression has frequently been heard that if Mr. Roosevelt had been in the White House instead of Mr. Wilson during the past two years, the United States would have been at war with Mexico and probably also with one or the other side in the European war.

Colonel Roosevelt's soldierly career in the Spanish-American war, his fighting qualities as a politician, and his constant war upon the unrighteousness of big business and political bossism, coupled with his advice to get ready for war in time of peace, as the surest way to prevent war, or to prevent utter disaster to the country in case of war, have given the popular impression that he would like to plunge the United States into a career of militarism.

Then, too, he has said some rather blunt things against the program of peace advocates.

Americans were startled a few days ago when they took up their morning papers and read the big headlines announcing that Mr. Roosevelt had "plucked some more feathers from the dove of peace." He had spoken his mind again on the foolishness of peace advocates in reply to an inquiry as to his opinion of the Women's Peace Convention at the Hague.

But after a careful reading of Mr. Roosevelt's letter one concluded that he may have had some ground for his opposition to peace. It appears that he is not so much against peace as against peace on the wrong terms. There is a peace which is the first step toward war—peace on the basis of wrong, injustice and unrighteousness.

Mr. Roosevelt hates war, but he hates wickedness more; and he believes that it is a good peace policy to keep up the fight until wrong is overthrown and peace can be made on the basis of righteousness.

There is some ground for difference of opinion between those who advocate "peace on any terms, just so it is peace," and those who want peace on such terms as will mean permanent peace and justice to all.

That kind of peace will be longer coming, and it will cost more, but it will be worth more.

THE SUNDAY REVIVAL CAMPAIGN.

A SMALL group of ministers in Chicago has labored long and earnestly to secure Mr. Sunday for an evangelistic campaign here.

At first it was to be limited to the West Side. But later on, at Mr. Sunday's own suggestion, or perhaps his insistence, it was widened to include the entire city.

This situation is presenting a somewhat difficult problem to many ministers and churches. Mr. Sunday brings into a community a whirlwind type of evangelism, which brings large results in members added to the churches, and in much wholesome reconsecration of life.

On the other hand, he presents Christianity in crude and obsolete forms with which modern interpreters of the gospel have no sympathy.

Ministers do not wish to take the position of opposing any good work. They are only concerned that the good that is done shall not cost too much to make it profitable.

There is little objection to the money required for such an enterprise. Nor does any reasonable person find fault with the gifts Mr. Sunday receives personally. The bizarre features of tabernacle, sawdust trail and pulpit gymnastics can all be passed over as perhaps necessary items in Mr. Sunday's program.

The deepest question is this: Granting the thousands of converts, the good records of transformed lives, the many testimonials to the permanence of results gained, is not the price still too great? That price has to be paid in the total influence of Mr. Sunday's work on a city, the interpretation of Christianity presented, the utter defiance of all commonly accepted ideals of constructive religious education, and the lowered tone of church life which can hardly fail to follow such a campaign.

These questions are being seriously and anxiously asked by hundreds of Chicago preachers today. They do not want to stand in the way of any good work. They wish to be true servants of Jesus Christ. But is the proposed campaign likely to aid or hinder the work of the church in Chicago?

THE TWENTY-THIRD PSALM.*

THE LORD is my shepherd, I shall not need;
He maketh me in pastures green to lie,
He leadeth me the restful waters by,
My soul he doth restore and me doth lead
For his name's sake the rightful paths to heed;
Yea, though I walk death's vale of shadow, I
Will fear no evil there; for thou art nigh,
Thy rod, thy staff they comfort me indeed.
Before my foes a table spreadst thou me,
My head thou hast anointed oil withal,
The brimming cup for me is running o'er;
Goodness and loving kindness verily
Shall follow me what days of life befall
And I will dwell in the Lord's house evermore.

FREDERICK A. HENRY.

PRESBYTERIANS AND UNION SEMINARY.

THE Union Theological Seminary in New York City, now affiliated with Columbia University, was formerly a Presbyterian school in good and regular standing.

When its leaders, such men as Prof. C. A. Briggs and Prof. Francis A. Brown, were accused of heresy, because they accepted as valid the processes and results of the historical method in Bible study, the institution, partly on its own initiative and partly as the result of denominational influence, was gradually separated from the jurisdiction of the church, and today is an independent foundation.

This situation has never been accepted with grace by the more conservative denominational leaders; partly because Union is now a far more influential institution than Princeton or any other regular Presbyterian school, and partly because its broad teachings and frank acceptance of critical and scientific views are a constant challenge to the older types of orthodoxy.

Two years ago the latest of a series of efforts was made to bring the church and the Seminary together again. But the sort of men placed on the commission appointed for that purpose by the General Assembly made it clear that nothing more than a new campaign against Union could be expected.

Rev. Mark A. Matthews of Seattle, a former Moderator of the Assembly, was made chairman. His extreme conservatism would render him unfit to have any dealings with men of the modern type, or to represent the moderate and progressive sections of the church in the proposed negotiations.

The commission made no report last year. This year they announce their purpose of presenting a statement at the approaching Rochester Assembly. It is safe to predict the failure of any efforts made by a group of men so constituted to bring the church and the school into closer co-operation. At best any report presented can only widen the breach.

This is to be regretted. The Presbyterian Church needs Union Theological Seminary. But it is beyond hope that any renewal of relations can be contemplated which does not preserve the freedom of the Seminary from ecclesiastical or dogmatic control.

ROOSEVELT AS A POLITICAL BOSS.

WHATEVER else the libel suit against Mr. Roosevelt will prove, it is helping to clear up the secret of his success as a political leader. The attorneys prosecuting the case against him have been trying to show that he was on intimate terms with the bosses he denounces; that he used their methods, conferred with them before acting, and was himself one of the bosses. All of which they have succeeded in proving on him to his delight.

But there are two kinds of bosses: there are bosses who rule to benefit themselves, and there are bosses who rule to benefit the people. And by a singular divination of the difference, the people will forgive the one, but not the other.

Mr. Roosevelt was loyal to the bosses of the Republican party, who promoted his candidacy for the governorship of New York and for the presidency, and he is provokingly proud of it. He did not try to conceal the fact of his intimate correspondence with Bosses Platt, Odell and Barnes. But secreted in every letter to these men which was produced against him, was the antidote for the poison of such correspondence.

When Platt would write to him asking him to veto some piece of legislation which hurt big business interests, Mr. Roosevelt would reply: "I should be very sorry to see them hurt, but you would not expect me to do anything against my conscience."

When asked to appoint some friend of a boss to a fat position, he would reply: "I thank you for calling my attention to Mr. So-and-So for the position in my gift; and I shall be happy to appoint him if I find that he is the best man for the place, for what we must do both for the good of the party and of the state is to put the best men in office."

When asked what his purpose was in consulting with Senator Platt, he said:

"My purpose in consulting with Mr. Platt was partly to see if I could not come to an agreement with him which would prevent me from breaking with the Republican organization. I realized that in my official position I could prevent wrong-doing, but alone I could not get affirmative right-doing."

MORAL OPTIMISM.

OURS IS AN age that believes in recovery. It does not snivel much over lost ground. It is sparing of Alases, Eheus and Misericordias. It has a feeling that every experience means something positive, and enters into the texture of reality. The contrary winds are not contrary but contributary.

The typical man of our time faces the slings and arrows of outrageous fortune with a certain bonhomie and sportiveness that discounts their impact at least by half. He believes in compensation and the "come-back."

Apropos of this expectant, optimistic attitude even in the midst of suffering, we cite the following verses written by a Disciple minister while lying in a hospital:

WHEN YOUR BACK COMES BACK.

When your back comes back,
That has been all out o'whack,
Oh, then there's hallelujah in your sole.
You caper and you dance,
You tango and you prance,
You can fill most any role,
When your back comes back.

When your back comes back,
To the functionable knack,
It has had these many, many years,
O it's then you're feelin' gay,
O it's then you'll make some hay;
Faith! it is no time for tears,
When your back comes back.

When your back comes back,
Wiry, flexile—nary crack,
All the devils couldn't make you have the blues;
O it's then you get so busy,
It almost makes you dizzy,
For you've got no time to lose,
Now your back's come back. —Rev. Lum. Bago.

It should be stated that Mr. Bago's back has since come back and he is on his job as usual.

PRAYER.

BE not afraid to pray—to pray is right.
Pray, if thou canst, with hope, but ever pray,
Though hope be weak; or sick with long delay.
Pray in darkness, if there be no light.
Far is the time, remote from human sight
When war and discord on the earth shall cease;
Yet every prayer for universal peace
Avails the blessed time to expedite.
Whate'er is good to wish, ask that of heaven,
Though it be what thou canst not hope to see;
Pray to be perfect, though material leaven
Forbid the spirit so on earth to be;
But if for any wish thou canst not pray,
Then pray to God to cast that wish away.
—Hartley Coleridge, in The Lutheran Observer.

Five Souls

FIRST SOUL—
I was a peasant of the Polish plain;
I left my plow because the message ran:
Russia, in danger, needed every man
To save her from the Teuton; and was slain.
I gave my life for freedom—this I know:
FOR THOSE WHO BADE ME FIGHT HAD TOLD ME SO.

SECOND SOUL—
I was a Tyrolese, a mountaineer;
I gladly left my mountain home to fight
Against the brutal, treacherous Muscovite;
And died in Poland on a Cossack spear.
I gave my life for freedom—this I know:
FOR THOSE WHO BADE ME FIGHT HAD TOLD ME SO.

THIRD SOUL—
I worked in Lyons at my weaver's loom,
When suddenly the Prussian despot hurled
His felon blow at France and at the world;
Then I went forth to Belgium and my doom.
I gave my life for freedom—this I know:
FOR THOSE WHO BADE ME FIGHT HAD TOLD ME SO.

FOURTH SOUL—
I owned a vineyard by the wooded Main,
Until the Fatherland, begirt by foes
Lusting her downfall, called me, and I rose
Swift to the call—and died in fair Lorraine.
I gave my life for freedom—this I know:
FOR THOSE WHO BADE ME FIGHT HAD TOLD ME SO.

FIFTH SOUL—
I worked in a great shipyard by the Clyde,
There came a sudden word of wars declared,
Of Belgium, peaceful, helpless, unprepared,
Asking our aid; I joined the ranks, and died.
I gave my life for freedom—this I know:
FOR THOSE WHO BADE ME FIGHT HAD TOLD ME SO.

Union Seminary Men Ordained.

The Presbytery of New York went into executive session on April 12 to examine candidates for the ministry from Union and Princeton Theological seminaries. Dr. John Fox made a formal protest against the admission of Union students, but the young men were accepted after being given a rigid examination. It is said that, "None of them denied the virgin birth, bodily resurrection or inspiration of the Bible, but made a distinction between literal and figurative interpretations." Dr. J. H. Jowett was present at the meeting of the presbytery and made a statement denying that he had allied himself with certain ultra-conservative elements in the denomination. He desired that the meeting of the presbytery should be private and free from the intrusions of reporters and casual visitors during the examination of candidates for the ministry.

Baptist Deacons Will Not Commune.

The churches of New York are planning a big revival movement for their city and a number of the ministers had planned to hold a union service at which the communion service would be held. "The right way to begin a revival is not with a banquet, but with a communion," the chairman of the committee, Rev. Charles W. Welch, had said. The pastor of the Baptist church where the union service was to be held was entirely in favor of the union communion service, but his deacons objected and it was necessary to have the union meeting without the communion.

Bross Lectures at Lake Forest.

The Bross Lectureship at Lake Forest University, Lake Forrest, Ill., has given rise to such volumes as "The Bible—its Origin and Nature," by Dods; "The Sources of Religious Insight," by Royce, and others. This year the lectures will be given by Rev. John Neville Figgis, of the House of Resurrection, England. His theme is "The Will to Freedom, or the Gospel of Freedom and the Gospel of Christ."

Mormons Make Financial Report.

The Church of Jesus Christ of the Latter Day Saints for the first time in its history has made public a financial report. It is not audited by any chartered public accountant, but, whether accurate or inaccurate, it contains many interesting statements. It was submitted to the annual conference of the Mormon Church in the Salt Lake Tabernacle on Easter Sunday, and shows that the tithe collections for 1914 were $1,887,920. Of this sum $731,000 was spent for church buildings, $331,000 for schools, $64,000 for church temples, $228,000 for missionary work, $136,000 for the church hospital in Salt Lake City, $116,000 for poor relief, and $99,000 for church offices. This leaves what would seem to other churches a large sum unaccounted for. The birth rate among Mormons is reported to be thirty-nine per thousand per year and the death rate eight per thousand. The increase of membership from 1901 to 1914 is said to be 129,000.

Schools of Methods.

The International Sunday School Association has issued a bulletin showing the proposed Schools of Principles and Methods scheduled for the summer. Some of these schools are to be held under organized Sunday-school supervision, while others are under the direction of denominational leaders. The bulletin gives the time and place of each meeting, and the name and address of the person to whom inquiries from interested persons should be directed. The association will be glad to mail copies of the bulletin to those who write, enclosing a stamp, to the Educational Superintendent, 1416 Mallers Building, Chicago, Ill.

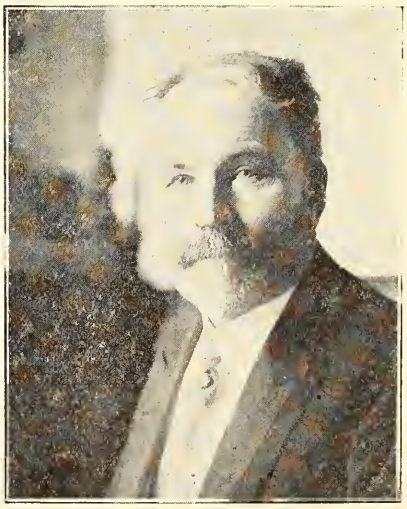
Christian Endeavor to Storm Chicago

The Fifth World's and Twenty-Seventh International Christian Endeavor Conventions, Chicago, July 7-12, 1915.

BY A. G. FEGERT.

At least sixteen thousand delegates are expected to attend the Fifth World's and Twenty-seventh International Christian Endeavor conventions to be held in Chicago July 7 to 12 of this year.

The "Chicago, 1915" convention committee has held meetings weekly for the past eighteen months to provide accommodations for the delegates during their stay in Chicago besides arranging for all the other details of the convention. H. H. Marcusson is chairman of this convention committee.



Hon. J. A. Macdonald, famous Toronto editor, one of the speakers at the coming Christian Endeavor Convention

The principal sessions of the convention will be held in the now historic Coliseum, the political storm center of the United States. It is in this building, with a seating capacity of fifteen thousand, that the national political conventions have been held, which nominated McKinley, Roosevelt and Taft. Churches within a radius of two miles have been secured for the various denominational rallies to be held in connection with the convention.

Leading pulpit and platform orators from all parts of the world will address the delegates. The program will be one of the best ever offered at a Christian Endeavor convention.

President Woodrow Wilson and Secretary of State William J. Bryan have agreed to speak provided affairs of state will permit their absence from Washington. "Billy" Sunday, who was converted in Chicago, will conduct a series of evangelistic meetings at noon every day during the convention.

Hon. J. A. Macdonald of Toronto, Canada; Rev. Dr. F. B. Meyer of London, England; Dr. Royal Dye of Africa; Dr. Francis E. Clark, the founder and president of the Christian Endeavor movement; Jane Addams, Mrs. Mary Harris Armour, Rev. Floyd Tompkins are others who will speak. Besides these all the leading Christian Endeavor field secretaries will give addresses.

A chorus of one thousand voices assisted by a brass band of sixty pieces will lead the music of the convention under the direction of Professor H. Augustine Smith, Chicago's most noted leader. His vested choir of two hundred voices will form the nucleus of the convention's chorus.

Since "I Will" is the motto of Chicago, the Chicago 1915 convention committee has adopted as the convention motto the following: "Trusting in the Lord Jesus Christ for strength, I will." This motto is being used on the advertising matter of the convention, on the convention badge and in the convention song.

Among the special features of the convention will be the athletic contest, to be held on Stagg Athletic Field, University of Chicago, under the direction of Coach Alonzo Stagg of the University. City, state and provincial Christian Endeavor unions will compete for the honors. A full program of field and track events will be scheduled. There will also be relay races, baseball games and tugs of war between teams representing the various unions.

It is estimated that five hundred thousand Christian Endeavorers live within a ten dollar railroad rate zone of Chicago. Arrangements have been made by which a limited number of delegates can be housed in private residences at a cost of not exceeding a dollar a day. Rooms in first class hotels convenient to the Coliseum will range from one dollar to two dollars a day per person without meals, depending upon the location of the room and the number occupying it.

Chicago is now in the midst of a campaign to submit the question of saloons or no saloons to the voters at the election in April, 1916. All temperance organizations of every description, civic bodies, women's clubs, besides the churches and allied associations, are united in the campaign under the direction of the Dry Chicago Federation. As a result of the past activity of the reform forces in Chicago and the concerted movement to oust its saloons, Chicago has become in the opinion of politicians and church leaders alike—the most moral large city in the United States.

Information regarding the convention may be obtained by addressing E. P. Gates, Chairman of the Promotion Committee, 406 Association Bldg., Chicago.

New Methodist Book Men.

Two new members were elected by the book committee of the Methodist Book Concern at the annual meeting last week, at San Francisco. John W. Fisher of Newport, Tenn., was elected to represent the sixth district, succeeding Dr. John A. Patten whose resignation, recently accepted, was offered because of magazine comment on his business as a proprietary medicine manufacturer. Jesse R. Clark was elected a member of the local committee in charge of the publishing plant at Cincinnati, Ohio, to fill the vacancy caused by the death of Robert T. Miller.

"A Voice From the Crowd."

People want a preacher "to be an intelligent man and a man with gumption enough to administer congregational affairs." But the increasing cry is for a spiritually minded man along with these other things. This thought is one of the "submarines" launched by Geo. Wharton Pepper, L. L. D., a lawyer of nation-wide reputation, in a series of lectures on preaching delivered at Yale last month entitled, "A Voice from the Crowd." The exclusive serial rights to publish the heart of this series of lectures has been granted to The Sunday School Times, an every-week religious publication. A post card request addressed to The Sunday School Times, Philadelphia, will bring a three weeks' free trial of that paper containing a detailed announcement of this series of articles.

College Class Taboos Liquor.

The class of 1915 at Williams college has taken a new stand in that institution by voting solemnly through its class rules, that it will never permit liquors to be dispensed at any of the reunions it expects to hold on the college campus in years to come.

Publicity and Church Attendance.

A six weeks' go-to-church campaign recently held in Newburgh, N. Y., has again proved that it pays churches to advertise. The campaign was conducted by both Protestant and Catholic churches of the city, the committees being made up entirely of laymen. The publicity committee obtained the co-operation of experts on the local papers and large paid advertising space was used. Across the principal street of the city for six weeks hung the banner, "Say, friend, will you go to church next Sunday?" Many sorts of advertising cards, slides in moving picture theaters and other special publicity assisted. Money for the campaign was subscribed before the committees began work. As a result, over 16,000 persons were in the churches each Sunday during the campaign in a population of 29,000. Sunday-schools and midweek services have also been much better attended. New sets of workers have been brought to the front.

Advertising Men to Fill Pulpits.

For five days, beginning on June 20, Chicago will entertain the biggest gathering of advertising and publicity men ever assembled in one city. Delegates to the number of 10,000, representing 160 organizations comprising the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World, will come to Chicago from every state in the Union, Canada, England and the English-speaking islands of the Pacific. Plans which comprehend a program of business and publicity events designed to attract the attention of the business world rapidly are being completed by the convention committee of the Chicago association. The most spectacular event of the convention will be a "night pageant" in which fully 10,000 men are expected to take part. Delegates from each state will act as escorts to floats displaying the products of the national advertisers of that state. On the morning of the opening day, Sunday, June 20, pulpits in fifty Chicago churches will be filled by business and advertising men of national prominence, who will deliver lay sermons on business ethics. For the afternoon of that day a big inspirational meeting is planned in the Auditorium theater, where delegates will bring before the public the "new business conscience" idea, for which the Associated Advertising Clubs are the sponsor. President J. H. Fahey of the Association of Commerce of the United States will be one of the speakers.

New Summer Instructors at the University.

Among the summer faculty of the Divinity School at the University will be Francis A. Christie, Professor of Church History in Meadville Theological School, Ozora Stearns Davis, president of the Chicago Theological seminary, and Leroy Waterman, Professor of Semitic Languages and Literatures in the University of Michigan.

Huerta Expelled from Masonic Order.

Church and lodge are not on good terms in Mexico. Victoriano Huerta has been expelled from Concordia lodge in Jalapa, Mexico, for alleged betrayal of the interests of the republic to the Roman Catholic church. The incident helps reveal the religious situation in the neighboring republic.

Annuities, Not Charity, for Old Pastors

This Idea Favored by Methodist Bishops in Annual Meeting of Conference Claimants.

Preachers should not be the recipients of charity after having spent their lives in the ministry; they, their widows and their orphans should receive annuities.

Speaker after speaker expressed this sentiment at the Methodist convention under the auspices of the board of conference claimants (which corresponds to the Ministerial Relief among the Disciples), which was held in Chicago last week.

Five bishops addressed the meeting at night.

Bishop Thomas B. Neeley of Philadelphia criticised the terms "retired preacher" and "conference claimant," declaring "superannuated preacher" more nearly described the real beneficiary of the fund.

"Everybody knows that a 'superannuated' preacher has completed his full term of service honorably," he said, "while a 'retired' preacher may have retired for one of many reasons—some not as honorable as others.

"Then that term of 'claimant' is an unfortunate one. A 'claimant' is one who is asserting his claim, while the minister who is a superannuate should march right up and take his pension without apology, because he has a right to it.

"The system should be such that there should be no inquisition regarding whether he has a strip of land before the conference decides whether he is entitled to a pension.

"Nobody has a right to ask him how much money his wife has saved. The law of the church should be that it will take care of him and assure him when he enters the ministry that his old age will be provided for."

Bishop R. J. Cooke of Portland, Oregon, told the convention the surest way to kill the church was to "starve the ministry."

"If I wished to kill the church I would not attack the religion nor its doctrines," he said.

"The people don't care about doctrines; they don't even know them. If you desire proof of this see how easily they go from one denomination to another without any thought about the things their fathers died for.

"We need an educated ministry. The people will not listen to an ignoramus. It's not enough that a man can shout 'hallelujah' to advance the cause of the gospel. He must have intellect to influence the sharp, discriminating men in the pews.

"The fine, strong men of intellect who are university graduates will not become pastors until the church takes care of its ministry. The church that would preserve itself must do this."

Bishop Homer C. Stuntz took exception to some of the remarks of those who preceded him.

"Be careful how you attribute commercial motives to young men who are looking toward the ministry for their life work," he said. "You have plenty of other arguments to get your fund without cheapening the ministry.

"I would have been insulted had anyone come to me when I was called of God to His blessed service and suggested that I count the cost before leaving my law business to become a preacher."

The convention sessions were opened by Bishop William F. McDowell, president of the board of conference claimants.

Dr. Clarence True Wilson of Topeka, Kan., gave the principal address.

"As this nation can never pay the soldiers that saved its life," said Dr. Wilson, "so the church can never pay enough to the soldiers of the cross.

"The preachers are the pioneers of an enlightened education. The world cannot do without them, the church cannot do without them and we cannot do without them.

"After a faithful and well spent life all that there now is to compensate these men who have spent themselves in sacrificial service can be expressed in two words—pauperism and heaven."

The meeting was preliminary to the convention called for the purpose of raising a $10,000,000 endowment fund to pension the preachers, their widows and orphans.

President Wilson sent the following greeting to the conference:

"I hope you will convey my greetings to the aged ministers who are expecting to convene on the 27th of this month and also express my sincere interest in the objects they have at heart."

A letter was read, which had been received from Governor E. F. Dunne, in which he said:

"I trust the object of your meeting will be attained and the funds provided for the hard-working and ill-paid veterans of the cross."

Here and There

The Pest of Numbers Again.

So devoted are we to size that to get away from the illusion seems impossible. If we can only get a crowd, we fear not what man can do unto us, so we seem to say. The new slogan is, "Give me crowds or give me death!" While we talk of numbers unceasingly someone ought to rise to remind us that Jesus was never conspicuous because of the crowds that waited upon his ministry. The multitudes were present at times, but the Twelve were his dependence. But that is neither here nor there. In our state the Sunday-schools report their attendance of one hundred and fifty or more to the Weekly Bulletin. One school adds those who attended the preaching service to those who were present at the Sunday-school. The justification for this is that the combined Sunday-school service gives the right to add the congregation to the Sunday-school. Another school includes in the report those who attend a Monday and a Wednesday evening Bible class. For the benefit of all such we wish to suggest that they include those who were absent in body but present in spirit; those who expected to come but were unavoidably detained. We do not see why the evening congregation should not be included in the count. Worst of all, there seems no way to correct the abuse. Those who could won't, and those who would can't. It remains for those who report to follow the method of counting as the offending school counts.

Wanted—A Religious Journal With Teeth?

Recently in New York City a number of men were discussing the question of religious journalism. It was agreed that the English journals are far superior to the American in point of leadership. One of the speakers thought we needed to have religious newspapers with teeth. We wonder if he is acquainted with the journalism of the Disciples. We can give him all varieties of teeth except hen's teeth. We recall rake teeth, harrow teeth, fine tooth comb-teeth, fangs, and store teeth. All of which have appeared at one time or another in print!

Had we been present at the discussion, the advocate of teeth in journalism would have been invited to retire peaceably if he would, but forcibly if he had indicated any dissent. He certainly ventured to be wise above what was written and should have paid dearly for his folly.

If ever we see a journal with milk teeth we gird up the loins of our faith and hope for the best, or we take to the woods. As for us, we propose to establish a chair of dentistry, when we get rich, hard by every aspiring journal. The dentist will get busy whenever a sprouting tooth appears. No teeth in ours, please.

The Sun Worshipers.

In these glorious days when the sun is etching pictures of beauty upon our globe as a film we are reminded of the ancient sun worshipers. What wonder if they did look upon the sun as the source of light and beauty, the great painter, the life-giver, the nourisher of men! We have learned to look beyond the sun to Him who kindled its fires, who can transform its flame into myriad hues, and by its power bring life out of the caverns of death. And are not the revelations of this spring time to the earnest soul but glimpses of beauty which shall be ours to enjoy after all the mists of life have cleared away? And after all, what is the light of sun or moon or star to that unapproachable light in which dwells the King, immortal and invisible?

"Enthroned amid the radiant spheres,
He, glory like a garment wears;
To make a robe of light divine,
Ten thousand suns around Him shine."

Is the Argument Valid?

It has been our custom to refer to the passage, "One Lord, one faith, one baptism," as conclusive proof that the one baptism was immersion as opposed to sprinkling or pouring. But were sprinkling and pouring known in the church when the Ephesian letter was written? In addition, was not the apostle speaking of something besides baptism and used it to strengthen his argument? In any case, the affusionist, satisfied with the merits of the argument in support of his proposition, could use the passage to maintain his contention as well as the immersionist. The immersionist weakens his case when he affirms that the "one baptism" is emphasized to minimize either of the other two forms, since that is an admission that these forms were known to the apostle. And if three forms were known it seems that he would have been bound to specify which form was the one baptism.

The Commencement Season.

It will soon be here, and the youthful orators will settle for us the vexing problems of the European war, they will tell us of the follies of ambition, of the principles which make for success, why Rome fell and why America will go the way of all flesh—unless, etc. If there is anything you need to know, your ignorance is culpable if you live within a hundred miles of a college in the month of June. A score of years ago or a little more we had the honor of settling several problems which had disturbed the human race from the creation of Adam down to the period of which we speak. But we learned then and since that mankind hails from Missouri

Our Entrance Into Union Meetings.

As this is to be discussed at one of our summer assemblies, it is in order to call attention to those evangelists among us who do not believe in union evangelism, but who invite any to "come forward and indicate any church you wish to join." The main thing is to find Christ, so the exhortation runs, and then you may join the church of your choice. We have all heard it, and wondered what the difference between that and out and out union evangelism could be. Then we should like to know the difference between following a union evangelist, as many of our churches have done, and being led by one of our evangelists in a union meeting. If it is right to follow it cannot be wrong to lead. As for ourselves we hope that our evangelists will take the field for union meetings, go in heart and soul, reach the largest numbers, do all the good they can, and by their presence testify to their belief and ours in Christian union, and their disbelief in the unreasoning prejudice that thus far has kept them out of the larger field.

Special Days in the Church.

Just now because of their increasing number we are likely to make merry over them, and suggest humorously other days for observance. Of course, we can overdo a good thing, but, on the other hand, the special day has its merits. One can concentrate the minds of the people upon it, and present an array of facts that would hardly be possible otherwise. The Episcopal Church has its special days all through the year on which some great doctrine of Scripture is emphasized. Why would it not be a good thing to have a missionary month in which many phases of that subject could be discussed; a patriotic month, a month with the great leaders of the Church, or with the great singers and their songs, or with the reformers and philanthropists of the past or the present century? Then we could have a month to talk about the doctrines of the Church, the resurrection, the Bible and its authority, the person of Christ, the miracles, etc. To outline some such work for the year, would be a relief to the minister who is always on the wing for themes and texts, and what minister is not? He would be compelled to prepare himself if he would set aside days or months in this manner.

Crowning the Past With Halos.

This is one of the cardinal virtues of humanity. Death raises the commonplace into the realm of poetry; the everyday path becomes a highway of holiness for the saint who went through life unnoticed, the work that a man did for a bare living is seen through a golden haze, and the sermon the minister prepared with great care, but which provoked no comment, become memorable once death lets fall its terrifying pall. We know several ministers for whom an immortality is assured by the community as soon as they die, but who are having a hard time to keep off the rocks while in the flesh.

He's Not the Only One.

The Westminster Gazette tells of the American tourist doing the sights of Edinburgh who, on being informed by his guide that he was in John Knox's house, put the question, "Who was John Knox?" In a scandalized tone he got the reply, "Man, d'ye never read yer Bible?"

THE NEW MAN OF THE CENTURIES.

EDWIN D. SCHOONMAKER IN THE CENTURY MAGAZINE.

I MEET him as I come and go
Along life's paths from day to day,
And, town or field, I always know
His heart is placid, come what may.
And always the quiet of the trees
Is round him as he passes by;
He leaves with me his kindly eye,
The New Man of the Centuries.

At business when the knot is hard
And the quick word is on the lip,
A mild hand stays the lifted whip,
A gentle presence stands on guard.
And ever when I feel he sees
I struggle with my baser part:
He makes his daily life his art,
The New Man of the Centuries.

And when I walk with him alone
The crowded street, the country lane
(This kindred soul that knows my own),
Between us lies the loud world slain.
A face, a star, a passing breeze
Goes whispering by; we understand:
His faith is in his farewell hand,
The New Man of the Centuries.

You, friend, have met him, have you not,
Who takes the stranger at his worth?
You seem to have known him from your birth.
Something divine, you know not what,
Something that puts you at your ease,
Is his; a simple man and strong:
His face goes with you like a song,
The New Man of the Centuries.

And, young or old, he seems to me
An elder brother of the race,
The World Man as he is to be
Disrobed of sham and pride of place.
He keeps the common road, and sees
And makes the best of life his own:
Perhaps he goes his way unknown,
The New Man of the Centuries.

Yet great he seems among the great.
And when I see the courtesy
Wherewith he greets full brotherly,
The Prince, the beggar at his gate,
Almost it brings me to my knees.
Of every race and creed is he:
I meet in China or Chile,
The New Man of the Centuries.

THE MESSAGE OF THE GRAND CANYON.

BY JACK BORLASE.

A PURPOSE He had when He builded me,
When He covered me o'er with rock and tree,
And the purpose He had I will tell to thee;
For it seems that you do not know.
The lynx and the lion, the lean coyote
And the mountain-sheep and the bearded goat
Have ever and e'er understood the whys
And the great wherefores of the painted skies
Where the waters of myst'ry flow;
But the "all-consuming" brain of a man
Is a bit too weak to fathom the plan.

Since the day when the Master came and said,
"Now be a mountain instead of a bed,
And grit your teeth while I cut your head
And your trunk and your tail clear through,"
I have often wept and I've often smiled
When I've thought of the poor fools, running wild,
And to tell the truth, there are moments still
When I weep my weep and I laugh my fill
As I listen to some of you;
But the message I bring is a vital thing,
And a worthy song is the song I sing.

The old Piute and the Navaho,
Though their skins are bronze and their ways are slow,
Both listened to me in the long ago

Alfred Noyes, Author of "Drake" and a recent volume, "A Belgian Christmas"

When I acted most infernal;
And above their failings, above their fears,
And beneath their smiles and beneath their tears,
Is the hope of a happy hunting-ground,
And the hope of a future to be found—
Yea, faith in a life eternal.
And this is the message I bring to you,
Which is old as the hills and ever new.

THE TREES AND THE MASTER.

Into the woods my Master went,
Clean forspent, forspent,
Into the woods my Master came,
Forspent with love and shame,
But the olives they were not blind to Him;
The little gray leaves were kind to Him.
The thorn tree had a mind to Him
When into the woods He came.
Out of the woods my Master went,
And He was well content.
Out of the woods my Master came,
Content with death and shame.
When Death and Shame would woo Him last,
From under the trees they drew Him last;
'Twas on a tree they slew Him—last
When out of the woods He came.

AT SIXTY-TWO.

Just sixty-two? Then trim thy light,
And get thy jewels all reset;
'Tis past meridan, but still bright,
And lacks some hours of sunset yet.
At sixty-two
Be strong and true,
Scour off the rust and shine anew.

'Tis past meridian, but still bright,
And fight fresh battles for the truth;
For what is age but youth's full bloom,
A riper, more transcendent youth,
A wedge of gold
Is never old;
Streams broader grow as downward rolled.
At sixty-two life is begun;
At seventy-three begin once more;
Fly swiftly as you near the sun,
And brighter shine at eighty-one.
At ninety-five,
Should you arrive,
Still wait on God, and work and thrive.

THE BRAVEST BATTLE.

The bravest battle that ever was fought—
Shall I tell you where and when?
On the maps of the world you will find it not;
'Twas fought by the mothers of men.

Nay, not with cannon or battle shot,
With sword or nobler pen;
Nay, not with eloquent word or thought
From mouths of wonderful men.

But deep in a walled-up woman's heart,
A woman that would not yield,
But bravely, silently bore her part—
Lo! there is that battlefield.

No marshaling troops, no bivouac song;
No banner to gleam and wave.
But, O, these battles they last so long—
From babyhood to the grave.

Yet, faithful still as a bridge of stars,
She fights in her walled-up town—
Fights on and on in the endless wars,
Then, silent, unseen, goes down.

O ye with banners and battle shot
And soldiers to shout and praise,
I tell you the kingliest victories fought
Are fought in these silent ways.

Joaquin Miller.

I AM HIS.

Better in bitterest agony to lie
Before thy throne,
Than through much increase to be lifted up on high,
And stand alone.
Better by one sweet soul, constant and true,
To be beloved,
Than all the kingdoms of delight to trample through,
Unloved, unloved.

Yet best—the need that broke me at Thy feet,
In voiceless prayer,
And cast my chastened heart, a sacrifice complete,
Upon thy care.
For all the world is naught and less than naught,
Compared with this—
That my dear Lord, with his own life my ransom bought,
And I am his.

—John Oxenham.

THE MOUNTAIN TOP.

I stand on high, close to the sky,
Kissed by unsullied lips of light;
Fanned by soft airs,
That seem like prayers,
Floating to God through ether bright.

This emerald land with love-clasped hand,
In smiling peace below outspread;
Around me rise
The amber skies,
A dome of glory o'er my head.

Wind-swept and bare, the fields of air
Give the weaned eagles room for play;
On mightier wing
My soul doth spring
To unseen summits far away.

DAVID KING OVER JUDAH AND ISRAEL.

INTERNATIONAL UNIFORM LESSON FOR MAY 23.

II Sam. 2:1-7, 5:1-5. Memory Verses, 5:2, 3. Golden Text: Jehovah is my strength and my shield; My heart hath trusted in him, and I am helped. Psalm 28:7.

American Standard Bible.
Copyright, 1901, by Thomas Nelson & Sons.
(Used by permission.)

2. (1) And it came to pass after this, that David inquired of Jehovah, saying, Shall I go up into any of the cities of Judah? And Jehovah said unto him, Go up. And David said, Whither shall I go up? And he said, Unto Hebron. (2) So David went up thither, and his two wives also, Ahinoam, the Jezreelitess, and Abigail, the wife of Nabal the Carmelite. (3) And his men that were with him did David bring up, every man with his household: and they dwelt in the cities of Hebron. (4) And the men of Judah came, and there they anointed David king over the house of Judah.

And they told David, saying, The men of Jabesh-gilead were they that buried Saul. (5) And David sent messengers unto the men of Jabesh-gilead, and said unto them, Blessed be ye of Jehovah that ye have showed kindness unto your lord, even unto Saul, and have buried him. (6) And now Jehovah show loving-kindness and truth unto you: and I also will requite you this kindness, because ye have done this thing. (7) Now therefore let your hands be strong, and be ye valiant: for Saul your lord is dead, and also the house of Judah have anointed me king over them.

5. (1) Then came all the tribes of Israel to David unto Hebron, and spake, saying, Behold, we are thy bone and thy flesh. (2) In times past, when Saul was king over us, it was thou that leddest out and broughtest in Israel: and Jehovah said to thee, Thou shalt be shepherd of my people Israel, and thou shalt be prince over Israel. (3) So all the elders of Israel came to the king of Hebron, and king David made a covenant with them in Hebron before Jehovah: and they anointed David king over Israel. (4) David was thirty years old when he began to reign, and he reigned forty years. (5) In Hebron he reigned over Judah seven years and six months; and in Jerusalem he reigned thirty and three years over all Israel and Judah.

Verse by Verse.

BY ASA MCDANIEL.

2:1. After this. The death of Saul and his sons, and the events connected therewith, 1 Sam. 16.—David inquired of Jehovah. In this crisis David wanted divine direction. No man errs if he intelligently seeks the guidance of Jehovah. Go up. Judah's territory lay on the highlands. Ziklag was lower, and the place where David lived at the time. —Hebron. One of the oldest towns in the world. It was the home of Abraham, and the burial place of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, the chief city of Judah, and a fitting place for the capital. Today it is called El-Khalil by the Arabs.

2:2. Two wives. Polygamy was a common practice of the time.—Jezreelitess. Native of Jezreel, see 1 Sam. 25:43, 44.—Abigail. She was the former wife of Nabal. After the death of Nabal she became the wife of David. See 1. Sam. 25:36-42.

2:3. His men. Six hundred of his chosen men, who were devotedly attached to him. 1 Sam. 27:2; 1 Chron. 12:1-40.—The cities of Hebron. The cities in the district around about Hebron.

2:4. The men of Judah. The elders of the tribe of Judah. They were well disposed toward David. This fact is shown by the reading of 1 Sam. 30:26-31.—Anointed David king. Some years before Samuel had anointed David king (1 Sam. 16:1-23), but this was the public recognition by the people.—House of Judah. Over the tribe of Judah.—The men of Jabesh-gilead. These were the men whom Saul had saved from the Ammonites. 1 Sam. 1:1-14.—They that buried Saul. See the account of it in 1 Sam. 31:8-13.

2:5. David sent messengers. David remembered the valiant men of Jabesh-gilead after his coronation.—This kindness. To bury the dead was considered an act of piety.

2:6. Jehovah show loving-kindness and truth. David invokes the divine blessing upon them.—Requite. Repay, reward. David was not an enemy of Saul, even if Saul was an enemy of David.

2:7. Be ye valiant. The times demanded courage on the part of Jabesh-gilead.—The house of Judah has anointed me king. The house of Judah has anointed me king, and it will be the part of loyalty to concur. It will be to your advantage.

5:1. Then came all the tribes of Israel to David. Seven and one-half years connect the first and second parts of our lesson. The events narrated in these chapters should be read. All the tribes came to David through their representatives except Judah, over which David reigned. They would by union with David conserve their best interests.—We are thy bone and thy flesh. Their relation to David was the first reason for making him king. They were descendants from the same ancestors.

5:4. Thirty years old. This was the age of maturity. Joseph was made ruler of Egypt at thirty. Priests entered upon their work at thirty. It was the time at which Jesus began his public ministry.

5:5. In Hebron. The capital during the time David was king of Judah alone.—Jerusalem he reigned thirty and three years. This was the capital during the later period of David's long and prosperous reign.

Go Up!

The Lesson in Today's Life.

BY JOHN R. EWERS.

"Shall I go up into any of the cities of Judah?" And the Lord said, "Go up."

Here we see the secret of David's success brought to the light. He sought God's will, and, finding it, obeyed. He was just emerging from his outlaw existence. The vast successes of his mighty empire were before him. He goes forward on his knees. He seeks and finds God's will. "Not my will but thine." That is the only petition that a mature man will make. Childish natures may ask other things, but a tall character asks only that.

"GO UP."

That is God's word for today. The Christian church has yet to win its empire. Why, four-fifths of the world is yet in darkness and almost two-thirds of the United States is non-Christian. "Go up," that is the command for this hour. We need to know that we are facing a very real crisis. The Wall Street Journal comes out in a strong editorial asking if faith in the future life is weakening. Asking, also, if church attendance is falling off. Asking if the fundamentals of the Christian faith are crumbling. That journal says that business men want to do business with those who believe in the future life and that if this faith is failing a substitute must be sought. No pronouncement is made; no conviction is stated; but religion is recognized as vital even to business.

WAKING UP.

The church is slumbering. The average man thinks that if he goes to church on Sunday morning and gives a dollar per week to the church that his work is done. Unless the church and Sunday-school rouse themselves and catch the evangelistic spirit they are smitten with death. The ratio is forty Christians to sixty who are not in the U. S. Population is increasing at the rate of 2 per cent and church membership at the rate of 1 4-5 per cent. We are not holding our own. All the Protestant churches added only 450,000 last year! Catholics and Protestants together only 631,000. Shall we go up and take the land? "Go up."

PAY THE PRICE.

The average church member is of little account. Out of a congregation of 674 members, only 26 are doing any definite work for souls. A church of 1,000 adds 100 and boasts of it. Any man who cannot win one other in twelve months is a poor stick and he ought to be told so. We want something for nothing. Notice our hymns. We are long on the song and short on the service. We are willing to let Jesus bear it all. We love to sing our souls away to everlasting bliss. We sit and sing. GET UP AND GO! O, that some one would give us a hymnal with some stirring songs. Give us some more like this:

"O, Zion, haste, thy mission high fulfilling,
To tell to all the world that God is light:
That he who made all nations is not willing
One soul should perish, lost in shades of night."

"Give of thy sons to bear the message glorious:
Give of thy wealth to speed them on their way:
Pour out thy soul for them in prayer victorious:
And all thou spendest Jesus will repay."

Chorus:
"Publish glad tidings of peace
Tidings of Jesus, redemption and release."

There is a real hymn. We sing it almost every Sunday. Would that some great soul would give us more of that type.

SPURT OR SPIRIT?

The passion for souls seems soon to burn itself out. We evangelize in spurts. What we need is the spirit. We must take off our coats and go to work. There must be individual work for individuals. Dr. John Timothy Stone has 200 men organized into a personal workers' class in Chicago and he is doing business for God. More voices must speak the message. More men must testify. We need a revival of the old-time testimony meeting on sane lines. If Christ can do anything for you, let us know. If He can't, let's stop fooling. There is no cheap way. You cannot buy souls. You must toil and toil hard to win them.

DOING PRETTY WELL.

The Disciples of Christ think that they are doing pretty well! Recent statistics ought to stir up our righteous souls. Pretty well, when half our country churches are dying? Four-fifths of our churches are in the rural communities. Pretty well, when last year showed only thirty-some thousand actual additions? Pretty well, when only a few of our members are working? Pretty well, when two-thirds of our churches care not a fig for missions either foreign or home? Ah, the day of empty boasting is over. The tumult and the shouting die. Lord God of Hosts, be with us in personal evangelism or there will be no HOSTS!!!!

Franklin Circle, Cleveland, Reports Show Good Year.

The reports at the annual meeting of Franklin Circle church, Cleveland, showed $14,651 raised for all purposes, $4,916 of which went to missions and benevolences. The church includes in its annual budget a scholarship which it presents to one of its own young men for entrance to Hiram college. Fifteen young people were in college last year and fifty-five in high school. The opening evening service each fall is in charge of the college people and seeks to stimulate the educational ideal. Seventy-nine persons were added to the church membership at regular services, making the resident membership 858. The Sunday-school average of the year exceeded 600 and a Chinese school is conducted on Sunday afternoons. The church is a Living Link in the state and American societies and last year assumed the support of sixteen native workers at Nantungchow, China. The every-member canvass made on January 10 included the raising of a building fund. The work of seventy men during the afternoon resulted in the raising of $29,000 for all purposes, including an adjoining lot presented by A. R. Teachout for building purposes. Plans are now completed for a modern Sunday-school and community house adjoining the present plant and work will soon begin. The new equipment and the splendid vision of the membership promise to make the church a powerful religious and social center in the Sixth City. William F. Rothenburger is the pastor at Franklin Circle.

Church Interested in Life Problems.

For five successive Sunday evenings, H. E. Stafford filled the auditorium and Sunday-school room of his church with people interested in the discussion of their common problems. Such subjects were used as: "The Ideal Home," "The Kind of Young Man a Young Lady Ought to Marry," "The Kind of Young Lady a Young Man Ought to Marry," "Why Men Do Not Go to Church," and "Why Women Go to Church." The local papers are giving much space to the work of this church.

Work at Broadway, Los Angeles, Prospers.

The reports for the first quarter of this year in Broadway church, Los Angeles, Cal., indicate great interest. There have been 1984 calls made, 236 letters written, 29 additions, and $1,798.04 received during the quarter. C. F. Hutslar is the aggressive pastor at Broadway.

Young Men Do Personal Work.

Report has come of an organized Bible class in Iowa of fifty young men, who have assumed responsibility for caring for all the young men who came into the church during a recent revival. These same young men were active in bringing young men to the services from night to night.

Los Angeles as a Summer Resort

The average American tourist views Los Angeles and Southern California as winter resorts, but it is beginning to be understood that this is the best place in the United States in which to spend a summer and that the summer is really the best time of the year for pleasure and comfort.

I now give the reasons in support of the above statement:

First: The low temperature compared to the eastern cities. Our thermometer shows that on July 1, when St. Louis had a temperature of 96, and Kansas City 100, Los Angeles had a temperature of 73. On July 5, when Chicago had a temperature of 102 and Kasas City 104, Los Angeles had a temperature of 79. The evident reason of this is that we are near the ocean and its cooling breezes moderate the temperature.

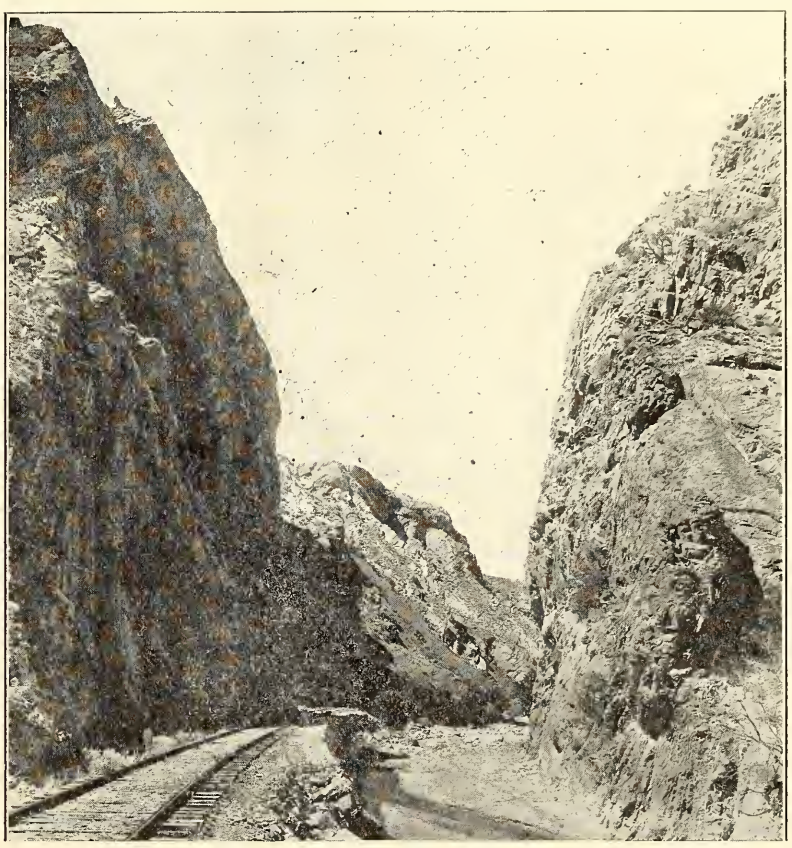
Second: You can go anywhere in the summer around Los Angeles without any fear of being overtaken by rain. We have our rains in the winter and early spring and then put our umbrellas away. Baseball and outdoor sports are very rarely interfered with here in summer time on account of moisture.

Third: There are myriads of flowers in bloom here in summer and every home, rich or poor, is adorned by them, if it so desires. Roses grow as high as the house tops of our bungalows and all sorts of vines clamber over the homes. There are hedges of geraniums from six to twelve feet high.

Fourth: This is a great fruit country in summer time. The late variety of oranges may be seen upon the trees and grape fruit, watermelons, cantaloupe, figs, peaches, apricots, cherries, apples, plums, pears, prunes, nectarines, strawberries, blackberries, etc.

Fifth: Automobiling. Los Angeles county boasts of three thousand miles of good roads, probably the smoothest in the country, for automobile travel. The state of California is expending eighteen million dollars on good roads. Los Angeles owns one-third the automobiles in California, and California is the second state in the Union in the record of ownership, New York only exceeding it.

Sixth: The pleasures of the ocean. In less than an hour one may be at the beach enjoying bathing, rowing, sailing. Splendid places for women and children to learn to swim. There is the skiff, the row boat, the launch, the sail boat, the motor boat, according to one's inclination. One may sail the summer seas without fear.



On the Way to Los Angeles—"Rainbow Canyon on Salt Lake Route"

Seventh: Fishing. In the pure streams of the mountains are caught the beautiful trout. You may climb through the picturesque canyons and sleep at night about the camp fire under the fragrant pines, cedars and firs, but if you want to catch the big fish, go to Catalina Island and, having once gotten him upon your hook, it may take you three or four hours to land him, but the game is worthy of the effort.

Eighth: Last but not least, during the coming summer you will have the opportunity of visiting two great fairs—one at San Francisco and the other at San Diego. Remember that Los Angeles is the main gateway to this two-ringed circus and you will certainly want to stop off here and enjoy the climate and at the same time attend the greatest international convention ever held by the Christian church, in the most commodious building, seating four thousand two hundred people, right in the heart of our city.

Three Disciples Represented in Sermon Volume.

The University of Chicago has published a volume of sermons representing the religious attitude of a number of the instructors in that institution. The book is called "University of Chicago Sermons," and is edited by Prof. T. G. Soares. Eighteen men contribute sermons and of these three are Disciples. Sermons by Disciples are as follows: "What Jesus Thought of His Own Death," by Errett Gates. "Prayer," by Edward Scribner Ames; "The Significance of Jesus," by Herbert L. Willett.

Disciple Student Wins Peace Prize.

The Church Peace Union, which is financed by Andrew Carnegie, has offered prizes for the best peace essays. The prizes for the theological students have awakened much interest and first place was won by R. W. Nelson, a Disciple student at Phillips University. Second and third prizes went to men at Andover and Yale. Phillips University has reason to be proud of her representative.

Sell Magazines for Mission Money.

A Sunday school class at Terre Haute, Ind., has been collecting old magazines and selling them for waste paper. They propose to add the proceeds to the Children's Day fund.

Clifford G. Roe at Drake.

Clifford G. Roe, whose work against the "white slave traffic" has given him an international reputation, was in Des Moines two weeks ago and spoke at Highland Park college, and at Drake University. His addresses in Des Moines were well received. He is a member of Hyde Park church, Chicago.

Finis Idleman Ill.

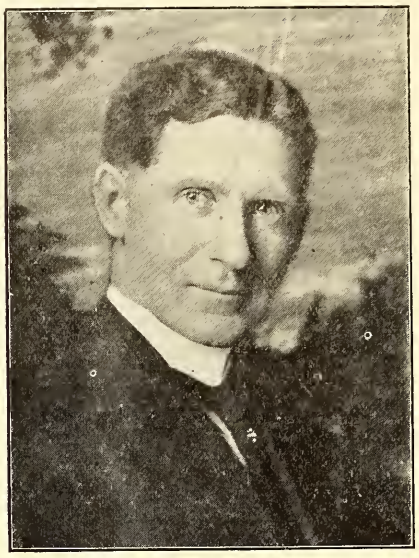
Finis Idleman has been out of the pulpit of Central church, Des Moines, for two Sundays with rheumatism. He is beginning to recover, however, and it is expected that he will be able to preach again very soon. Some members of the Gospel Team in Des Moines filled his pulpit while he was ill.

Lawyer Chooses the Ministry.

J. W. Burns is a successful young lawyer of Oklahoma City, Okla. He was formerly a Methodist, and prepared himself for the ministry, but he went into law in which field he has had a very successful practice. Mr. Burns was set apart to the ministry with the assistance of the state secretary, A. R. Spicer. He is now preaching for some country churches while he continues his law practice but hopes soon to have a call to a church that will claim all his time.

Kansas City Notes

L. J. Marshall went to a hospital last Tuesday and was operated upon the following day for chronic appendicitis. He was well prepared for the ordeal and came through in very fine shape. Wabash Avenue church has been very prosperous under his ministry this year.



Rev. L. J. Marshall

The event of the week in Kansas City circles last week was the presence of Dr. Herbert L. Willett, of Chicago, who delivered a series of lectures in Linwood Boulevard church. This splendid church has a building worth two hundred thousand dollars and the auditorium is proving inadequate for the morning service these days under the ministry of Burris A. Jenkins. The Men's Class, taught by Fletcher Cowherd, a prominent real estate man of Kansas City, and an organization of great significance in the life of the local church, was responsible for Dr. Willett's coming. Some of the topics for the week were "The Book of Books," "Isaiah, the Prophet-Statesman," "The Man of Tarsus," and "the Man of Nazareth." The lectures proved very popular and were waited upon by large audiences each evening. Dr. Willett also delivered a number of special lectures in the day-time while he was in the city, his analysis of the oriental situation before the City Club being especially noteworthy.

The same week, E. E. Violett, of the Violett Travel Bureau, went to the hospital for an operation. The surgeon in this case was Dr. Minor, a prominent physician of Kansas City and a leader in the work at Linwood Boulevard church. The operation was a major one, lasting an hour and a half, but it was made less difficult by the use of the new local anesthetic.

Quindaro church has received 117 new members through evangelistic services held by James Small. R. H. Heicke is the pastor. One of the devices to increase popular interest was a series of talks on "In His Steps." Pictures of the Passion play were also used. The new members have been enlisted in the financial support of the church, and the Sunday-school attendance has increased fifty percent.

One of the features of Kansas City life this past week was the meeting of the Woman's Council, a county organization in which the C. W. B. M. workers of the county in which Kansas City is located, are gathered together. The meeting was held in First church on Wednesday. Dr. Willett was invited to make an address and women workers of note were on the program. Kansas City is the leading city for support of the C. W. B. M. in the brotherhood.

The Ladies' Aid Society of Linwood Boulevard church will soon finish the season in their work. A recent money-raising device was the distribution of small socks which were given out with a request for pennies sufficient to fill the socks. The device brought in nearly two hundred dollars.

The Disciples in Big Cities.

The Bible school secretary of the American Christian Missionary Society has compiled Disciples' statistics from the year-book on the great cities of America. These tables furnish some very interesting bits of information. Cincinnati has a larger number of organizations than any other city, 28. Kansas City, however, leads all cities in the number of members, having over 11,000 in twenty-six organizations, which is nearly twice as many Disciples as are to be found in any other city. Kansas City also has the largest Sunday-school enrolment, over 8,000, though this is less in proportion to the church membership than is found in most of the cities enumerated. Kansas City churches lead all cities in their gifts to Church Extension and to the Christian Woman's Board of Missions. Chicago is seen to lead all cities of America in the amount of her offering to home missions, though she has but twenty-four organizations, with 5,391 members. Cleveland, with eleven churches and 5,265 members led all the cities of America in the total offering to foreign missions. St. Louis led all the cities of the country in their offering to the National Benevolent Association. The largest per capita giving to missions was credited to New York, with an average of $2.65 for 1,963 Disciples. The statistics for the local expenses of the church in these cities is admittedly very inadequate. It is estimated that the local church expenses in eighteen leading cities is a million dollars.

Report of Commission to Far East.

The Commission to the Far East, composed of W. C. Bower, R. A. Doan, and Stephen J. Corey, have issued their report in the form of a booklet of forty pages which is well illustrated with pictures taken on the journey. The mission situation in each land visited by the Commission has received special consideration. In the later pages of the booklet are some of the conclusions arrived at by the Commission, these being stated in the form of recommendations. Prominent among these is the suggestion that President A. McLean should visit the Orient for an unhurried trip, as it is now twenty years since he was there and conditions have changed greatly in that time. The report may be had at the office of the Foreign Society.

Foreign Missions Personals.

Mrs. Maude W. Madden of Osaka, Japan, writes that the first meeting of the fathers of the kindergarten children was held in March. Quite a number were out and seemed glad that they were to have an opportunity to study Christianity. The regular monthly attendance of mothers was forty, besides other women. At the last meeting there were six factory women—superintendents—brought by one of the new Christian girls.

At Nelsonville, Ohio's Convention City

A Human Interest Letter Looking Forward to the State Meeting, May 24-27.

BY I. J. CAHILL.

I have just been to Nelsonville. Not over a Sunday. Only a few hours on Monday morning. But even Monday morning is inspiring in some places. I dropped in to arrange certain details of the coming convention which meets there May 24-27. We arranged the details. Then we talked—Pastor W. H. Boden and I. And we walked.

He did not know it was blue Monday. This is why: A team of his Endeavorers had been out to Millfield Sunday night conducting a service there. The house was packed and the service was inspiring.

A group of his men also had been up at New Straitsville on Sunday afternoon. They frequently go out to hold special services. A couple of weeks before they were at Chauncey and seven men and four women confessed Christ. At Jacksonville the following Sunday another eleven were added to the Lord.

All this and much more Pastor Boden told me as we talked. Such a Monday could not be blue.

The Nelsonville men do evangelistic things, at home as well as away from home. They do it in cottage prayer-meetings on Thursday nights. Then the women thought they wanted prayer-meetings, too. So they have a prayer-meeting Tuesday night. Not an evangelistic meeting; just a prayer-meeting. And, do you know, a leader came to the pastor not long ago and said: "Do you think we could have an invitation at our prayer-meeting?" "Certainly you could." "Why, how could we do it?" "Just do it, that's all. Do it yourselves." "Well, what in the world would we do if anyone should come?" Now, isn't that just like a woman? They went ahead just like women and did it in one of their recent meetings and a woman, a mother of children, became a Christian mother.

This is Nelsonville, nestled in the beautiful valley of the Hocking. From the fine hill top just back of the church the whole city can be seen winding in and out between the hills. That is, all the city that is above the ground. Some thousands of her citizens spend the major portion of their waking life below ground extracting from the hills the wealth of treasure for human comfort.

R. A. Doan's Brick Plants.

Up the valley there beyond the bridge you can see the brick kilns, two large plants where R. A. Doan worked in clay to pay expenses while he was doing his real work of molding and fashioning immortal souls. The business flourished—the brick business—and he made money so fast he ran away. He had to, to save his soul. And now our R. A. Doan, having opened heaven to hundreds of men in Nelsonville and gotten a little of it in advance into their homes, is ours no longer. He belongs to the world. At this writing he is on the King's business in China. He will be at the convention if possible.

This is Nelsonville, whither the tribes go up. No wonder fleets of automobiles from all over the state are planning to be there.

If any church will send six choice spirits to the convention they will bring back inspiration equal to a revival. If four hundred churches would each send six the Disciples of Ohio would do such things in days to come as would thrill the world.

Bethany College Gymnasium Burns.

Early on Tuesday morning of last week the Bethany gymnasium burned to the ground. It is a total loss except for a fire insurance policy for $2,000. The origin of the fire is not known. No plans for the future have been made.

New Pastor at Loveland, Colo.

J. E. Linn, who has reeently entered upon the pastorate of First church, Loveland, Colo., is planning a roll call for the second Sunday in May, with the purpose of having in attendance at ehurch and Sunday-school every member of these organizations. This will be followed by an every-member canvass in the afternoon. The church is making a fine response, and is lending splendid support to the work and plans of the new pastor. There have been twelve additions to the church at recent services.

Church Young People Publish Paper.

The new church paper published by the Christian Endeavor Society of the Pane Ave. Church of Christ, North Tonawanda, N. Y., is the most ambitions paper we have seen coming from the young people of any church. The following quotation is indicative of the spirit of "The Way": "Let us strive to put a definite and easily distinguishable stamp upon our people, so that the flavor, the distinctive characteristics of Payne Avenue folk may be recognized readily."

Good Showing at Janesville, Wis.

The chureh at Janesville had an attendance of 120 in the Sunday-school and the same day five men made a confession of their faith. The church entertains the state convention in September.

WILLIAM WOODS COLLEGE

(Owned by the Christian Churches of Missouri.)

FULTON, MISSOURI.

Bloomfield, Ky., Church Prospering.

R. H. Crossfield, President of Transylvania university, gave a splendid address at Bloomfield chureh Sunday morning, April 25, and one at Chaplin, Ky., in the evening. The average attendance at Sunday-school at Bloomfield has been about 35. Since March 1, when the new pastor, Paul B. Rains, came to the field, the average attendance has been sixty-five with 116 present on Rally day.

A Serious Situation With the Foreign Society

These are days of keen anxiety at the offices of the Foreign Society as well as on the mission fields. It has been quite evident that if the receipts did not come up to those of last year, it would be necessary to resort to serious retrenchment. At the beginning of April the ineome from all sources was $16,000 less than for the same period last year. While it looks as if the returns would be better for April than they were for Mareh, yet the increase is not sufficient to allay grave fears. One not intimate with the work can hardly appreciate what the necessity of retrenchment means on the foreign fields. Missionaries go out for life service, the work they have built up is of a wide and varied nature, and a large force of native helpers are engaged in the work. Retrenchment means the reducing of salaries, the discharging of workers and the closing of work already established at great sacrifice. Just now, when the force is so meager as compared with the marvelous opportunities in all fields, such a consummation would mean irreparable loss to our work.

It seems impossible to think that our churches will not rally sufficiently to sustain the work this year of all years. News eomes that two English societies, in spite of terrible war conditions in that country, have increased their receipts. Surely with our relatively great prosperity in America our people will take no backward step.

The churehes are not responding as quickly as they did last year. May we not urge that where offerings have not been taken, this matter be attended to at once. This is the hour for real sacrificial response to the crisis which is upon us. Ernest expression of interest should be evident from many sources.

Send all offerings to F. M. Rains, Secretary, Box 884, Cincinnati, Ohio.

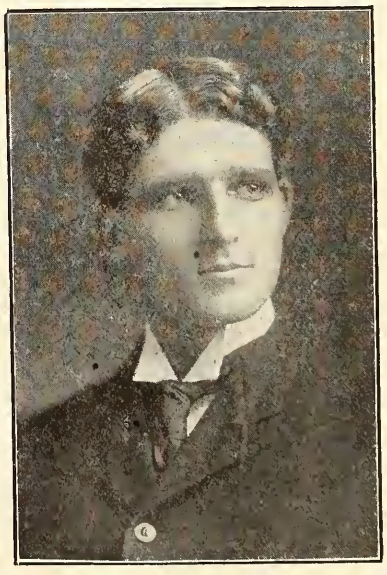
News Notes.

W. R. Hunt on his way to China has visited Transylvania university and Hamilton college. He spoke at the chapel hour for thirty minutes. By unanimous request of the students, he was asked to continue for another half hour, which he did, to the delight of all.

Dr. E. I. Osgood, of Chuchow, China, whose furlough is due this year, has decided to remain on the field until 1916. He has not led the Reform Society as far as he would like. He wants the men who are interested in Christianity to become Christians before he leaves for home. This is the reason for his postponing his furlough a year.



Mr. Guy W. Sarvis, who has been appointed Dean of the Cottege Department of the University of Nanking.

The most interesting event in China since the Eddy meetings is the work of Mr. Doan in the South Gate chapel. His message has been very acceptable everywhere. It has been especially helpful at this point. Over 190 persons sent in their names as desiring to study the Bible afresh or desiring to become inquirers.

David Rioch, of Damoh, India, writes that at the convention it was decided that he should proceed home on furlough in the spring of 1916. He was entitled to his furlough this year, but the work would not permit him to take it. By the time he leaves India on furlough, he will have been eight and one-half years on the field.

Alexander Paul has been operated upon for appendicitis. The operation was successful anl he is doing very well. He is coming home this summer for a short furlough, though he is entitled to a full year of rest.

Dr. Butchart has been appointed superintendent of the medical department and Guy W. Sarvis has been appointed dean of the College department of the University of Nanking.

Wilford H. Scott of Jubbulpore, India, writes: "I am out in eamp with our evangelists. This is real missionary work—this village touring, and I am more and more interested in it."

Ray E. Rice, of Damoh, India, states that the missionaries who have been in India for twenty-five years are the most enthusiastic of all. They have seen ehanges. They have seen Christian eommunities spring up where idolatry once reigned. They can see the hopeful sides now. Mr. Rice adds: "We like this eountry. It is going to be a great privilege to work here."

Wm. H. Erskine of Osaka, Japan, writes: "The night school goes on increasing. Eighty students are enrolled and more are expected. Twenty minutes each night are given to Bible study. All who attend the school will know something about Christianity."

Miss Jessie Asbury states that during the two months while she was busy with various household duties and moving, the faithful Bible woman, Mrs. Suto, was going out in snow and wind and calling on the people in their dark and cold homes. In January she made eighty-four ealls, and in February, seventy-five.

R. A. Doan is spending a week at each station in Japan. His plan is to organize Bible classes among the Christians and inquirers. Prof. Ishikawa goes with him as interpreter. The visits and work of these men will do much to deepen the spiritual life of the Japanese Christians and will do much to cheer the missionaries.

I. J. Cahill, the state secretary of Ohio, spent Sunday, April 25, with the church at Lancaster.

Ordination at Eminence, Ky.

John Gano Herndon, a member of the church at Eminence, Ky., who for the last four years has been in college preparing for the ministry, was ordained to the ministry Sunday morning in his home church. W. G. Eldred, his pastor, performed the ordination service. Prof. A. W. Fortune, of Transylvania university, will hold a meeting for this church beginning Sunday, June 13.

Church Has Weekly Seminary.

The church at Charleroi, Pa., conducts a weekly seminary on Thursdays. Music, missions, elocution, teacher training and church history are taught by the six members of the faculty. Rev. Eugene N. Duty is the dean and pastor of the church. The pastor is preaching a series of sermons on The New Testament Church.

E. D. Salkeld His Own Evangelist.

The card announcing the special meetings at Frankfort is striking. "Thou Art the Man" is the display line, in heavy type. The card announces a meeting for men only at the church Sunday afternoon. Judging from the advertising the meetings should be a success.

Odd Fellows Go to Church.

All the branches of Odd Fellows in Norwood, O., joined in a service at the Disciple church on a recent evening, celebrating the 96th anniversary of the order. The subordinate branch, two Rebekah lodges, and the Encampment, turned out in goodly number to listen to a sermon by C. R. Stauffer.

O. P. Spiegel Tells of Southern Opportunities.

O. P. Spiegel reports the southland a favorable field for the Disciple message. There are vast stretches of country without churches, or very meagerly supplied with churches that are often non-progressive in character. He says: "Going south, from Montgomery to Mobile, 180 miles, there is but one small congregation of Disciples, and they without a minister for two or three years. Going north, to Birmingham, 97 miles, there is not a single congregation of Disciples; going west, to Selma, 50 miles, no church; east, to Savannah, 300 miles, no church known to me, over either the Seaboard or Central of Georgia; northwest, to Tuscaloosa, 107 miles, no church; northeast, to Atlanta, 175 miles, but two small churches, one 46 miles from Montgomery, the other 89 miles from Montgomery; southeast, over the coast line, it is 255 miles to Valdosta with no church. Northeast, to Anniston, it is 167 miles with no church. In this territory there are scores, hundreds, of good towns from a few hundred to fifteen thousand, many of them county seats, fine radiating centers, and the people are anxious to hear. In many of these places there are one or more Disciples."

Good Record at Steubenville, O.

That First church, Steubenville, O., is a live one is a statement that is beyond question, as was shown by the reports that were read at the annual meeting held recently. The church under the ministry of E. H. Wray is in the most flourishing condition. During the past year there have been 151 accessions, 109 of this number making confession of faith. The church is in fine financial condition, the total receipts for the year being nearly $7,000, of which nearly $1,100 was for missions. A Living Link missionary is supported on the foreign field (Mrs. C. S. Settlemeyer of Nankin, China). One of the auxiliaries, composed of the young ladies of our congregation, is doing missionary work in the home land by assuming the responsibility of the education of a young lady in one of the mountain schools of Tennessee. A new Austin pipe organ has been installed at a cost of $3,300 and $1.500 was donated by Andrew Carnegie. The remainder was raised entirely by subscription. All mortgages have been paid off, so that now the church feels like doing larger things. The total receipts during the year for all purposes were $7,096.79.

Notes from Alberta

The writer has been four years in the province of Alberta as evangelist under the American Christian Missionary society. The first three years were spent wholly in field work in endeavoring to strengthen the cause at points where it had already been started and in cultivating new fields. We had not at that time a single man in the entire province who was giving all his time to the work of the ministry, save one who was pastor of a union church. Two brethren, Percival Boker of Ponoka, and R. H. Simpson of Ardley, were ministering regularly for congregations in their home communities, while they pursued farming operations through the week. These men are still shepherding the people in their communities and the work is being prospered under them. Three years ago we had no organization of our people in either Lethbridge, Calgary or Edmonton, nor any definite work in the immediate vicinity of these cities.

There is today a promising church in Edmonton, the capital of the province, a city of over fifty thousand population, and the educational center of the province. They own a neat church building and have a flourishing Sunday-school of about seventy. R. W. Stevenson, late of Toronto, has been called as pastor-evangelist on that field. At Clyde, fifty miles distant, a neat church property has been secured, and a number of people are earnestly working to build up the cause. Mr. Stevenson visits the Clyde church monthly in connection with his work in Edmonton. There are other points near the city where an interest is growing and can be fostered.

Calgary, the largest city in the province, with a population of seventy thousand or more, has a church of about sixty members, with a fine growing Sunday-school, averaging about seventy. The writer served this church as pastor, in addition to the superintendency of the field work. The church meets in a rented building. It owns lots in a suburban locality where a mission may be started as the city continues to grow.

All these new churches are supported by the American Christian Missionary Society with generous appropriations. In addition to this the American Society returns ninety per cent of all the offerings for home missions in Alberta churches for mission work in Alberta.

This enables the Alberta Board to aid the work of the Erskine field where W. L. McIllvaine is doing good work, and to make an appropriation to the Vermilion field, where J. E. Tyner is doing successful work as pastor of union churches.

At the new town of Hanna an organization of Disciples has been formed, and church lots in a choice location in the town have been secured.

There are many other localities in this great new province where our work could be successfully promoted if we had the men and the means. M. B. Ryan.

Students Dedicate College Magazine to Pres. Zollars.

"The Slate" is a college magazine which is published by the students of Phillips University, End, Okla. In view of the recent resignation of President Zollars, the students have dedicated the April issue of this magazine to him. Resolutions of appreciation from the board of trustees, are printed. The magazine is full of the human quality; the students have preserved some of the jokes and every-day characteristics of their revered leader, whom they call affectionately "Pa Z." The magazine is illustrated with some good pencil drawings made by local artists.

IN AND AROUND CHICAGO.

In another two weeks, Memorial church will make the every-member canvass. The church has been spending considerable time getting ready.

The meeting of the Chicago Christian Missionary Society which was announced in last week's Christian Century for April 30 was changed to May 3. F. W. Burnham was present as chief speaker.

Asa McDaniel has been engaged by the Odd Fellows of Harvey to make the Memorial Day address for them the fourth time. He recently delivered the Anniversary day sermon. He is greatly in demand for special addresses in fraternal circles. He has resigned his work at Harvey, but has not accepted another church yet.

News Notes from the American Society

Bourbon County, Ky., is Living Link.

Bourbon County, Kentucky, is one of the cradles of the Restoration movement. The old Cane Ridge church still stands in the county with an aggressive church and Sunday-school meeting where Barton W. Stone began his early work in 1798. There are today eleven Sunday-schools in the county.

These schools meeting in annual convention a few years ago decided to become a Living Link in the home land. They chose St. Petersburg, Fla., as the field where J. E. Gorsuch was at that time the missionary of the American Society. They went to work, apportioned the six hundred dollars among the schools and in a little while the whole sum was raised.

On April 1, the St. Petersburg church became self-supporting. Helped for many years by the American Society, it has now become a strong church of 160 members with a Sunday-school of 140 and last year gave $334.95 to the various missionary causes. Homer F. Cooke is the present pastor under whose leadership the work becomes self-sustaining.

The Bourbon County schools are delighted with their good work. J. C. Bryan, a young business man, member of the North Middletown church, is the county president and he with his associates is now choosing another field in the home land. It is probable that he will select W. H. Allen at New Orleans, La., as the missionary to whose support the money will go. This will take a little larger offering than has been raised hitherto, but Mr. Bryan is hopeful that he can raise it. W. H. Allen was formerly minister at Chestnut Street church in Lexington, of which church J. W. McGarvey was a member. He is doing a good work in this southern metropolis of nearly a half million people where we have but the one church.

There are a hundred counties in our strong states whose schools could band together and do as the Bourbon County, Kentucky, schools have done, and be all the richer in their spiritual life and none the poorer in this world's goods for having done so.

Offerings from Home Mission Territory.

Two communications accompanying offerings from Sunday-schools for home missions recently received indicate how schools in the midst of home mission territory appreciate the privilege of helping others in the home land.

Here is one from New Mexico:

"Our church and Sunday-school are less than a month old. This is the only church of our people between Albuquerque and El Paso, a distance of 200 miles. It is the only church of any kind in a county of seventy miles long and sixty miles wide. It is the only church of our people in the district to be irrigated by the Elephant Butte project which is costing Uncle Sam about eight million dollars. We are glad to send you our offering for home missions from the Sunday-school.

W. J. Burney, preacher in English and Spanish. Messilla Park, New Mex."

And here is another from Nevada:

"To my knowledge there is not a single congregation or Sunday-school in the state of Nevada that is Christian only. I have found only a few members of our church in this state. However, in our Union Sunday-school we voted to remember the cause of home missions and are glad to send you this offering. While it is not large, I trust it will be acceptable and will be the means of helping spread the Master's teaching in the home land.

"W. Clarence Leach, Blair, Nevada."

[This is the first Bible school offering ever received by the American Society from Nevada.]

The Bethany System of Sunday School Literature

Don't Cheat Your School

This is written only for pastors who feel some measure of responsibility for the quality of literature going into the hands of their Sunday School scholars.

And, no doubt, all pastors who read the Christian Century are of that sort. Their point of view is that of religious education. The Sunday School to them is more than an aggregation of units brought together each week to go through a certain formal program—calling the roll, "doing" the lesson, "taking up the pennies," asking for birthday money, and telling the children to be sure to "have a good lesson" next Sunday!

The Sunday School is to them rather The Church Studying the Word of Eternal Truth, and developing in minds and hearts the spirit of the Christian religion. It is, indeed, the Church's best chance to guarantee Christly men and women in the next generation, as well as in this.

To pastors who hold this high ideal of the work of the Sunday School, the matter of literature becomes a most vital one. Second only to the influence of the teacher in the life of the pupil is that of the literature upon which the scholars feed their minds and souls. And, in many cases, we are sure the influence of the literature comes first.

Roosevelt declares that one of the strongest influences that moulded his early life was a child's paper he subscribed for, and which he valued highly. Are not your children and youths just as likely to be so influenced?

ARE YOU ACQUAINTED WITH THE LITERATURE USED IN YOUR SCHOOL?

If you are alert to the responsibility upon you as the leader in religious education in your church, by all means secure samples of all systems published, and see to it that your school uses the literature that it finds to be the most up-to-date, most virile, and Best Adapted to Character Building. Do not neglect to ask for returnable samples of the Bethany System of Sunday School Literature. DISCIPLES PUBLICATION SOCIETY, PROPRIETORS, : 700 EAST 40th ST., CHICAGO

Disciples Publication Society

The Disciples Publication Society is an organization through which churches of the Disciples of Christ seek to promote undenominational and constructive Christianity.

The relationship it sustains to the Disciples is intimate and organic, though not official. The Society is not a private institution. It has no capital stock. No individuals profit by its earnings. The churches and Sunday-schools own and directly operate it. It is their contribution to the advocacy and practice of the ideals of Christian unity and religious education.

The charter under which the Society exists determines that whatever profits are earned shall be applied to agencies which foster the cause of religious education, although it is clearly conceived that its main task is not to make profits but to produce literature for building up character and for advancing the cause of religion.

* * *

The Disciples Publication Society regards itself as a thoroughly undenominational institution. It is organized and constituted by individuals and churches who interpret the Disciples' religious reformation as ideally an unsectarian and unecclesiastical fraternity, whose common tie and original impulse are fundamentally the desire to practice Christian unity with all Christians.

The Society therefore claims fellowship with all who belong to the living Church of Christ, and desires to co-operate with the Christian people of all communions as well as with the congregations of Disciples, and to serve all.

* * *

In publishing literature for religious education the Society believes a body of such literature prepared by the co-operative effort of many communions reaches a much higher level of catholicity and truth than can be attained by writers limited by the point of view of a single communion.

* * *

The Sunday-school literature (The Bethany System) published by this house, has been prepared through the Society's association with the writers, editors and official publishing houses of the Methodist, Presbyterian, Congregational and other communions. In its mechanical and artistic quality, its low selling-price, its pedagogical adequacy, and, still more, in its happy solution of doctrinal differences it is a striking illustration of the possibilities of the new day of unity into which the church is now being ushered.

* * *

The Christian Century, the chief publication of the Society, desires nothing so much as to be the worthy organ of the Disciples' movement. It has no ambition at all to be regarded as an organ of the Disciples' denomination. It is a free interpreter of the wider fellowship in religious faith and service which it believes every church of Disciples should embody. It strives to interpret all communions, as well as the Disciples, in such terms and with such sympathetic insight as may reveal to all their essential unity in spite of denominational isolation. Unlike the typical denominational paper, The Christian Century, though published by the Disciples, is not published for the Disciples alone. It is published for the Christian world. It desires definitely to occupy a catholic point of view and it seeks readers in all communions.

Our Success Depends Upon You!

The Christian Century and the Disciples Publication Society belong to the Disciples of Christ, not to private individuals. With the steady enlargement of the volume of its business the Society will ultimately be on a self-supporting basis and its earnings will go to the cause of Christian education and missions. At present it depends for its existence upon gifts offered by friends who believe in the work it is doing and wish to see its ideals prevail among the Disciples and the larger Christian world.

You are one of the friends of this great work.

Our success depends upon you!

The list of our supporters has been steadily growing. A few generous men and women have shown especial devotion by making large gifts. Every layman and minister who cherishes hopes for the success of such an enterprise will wish to make a gift to its support.

In addition to your own gift, you know of others in your congregation who, if the matter were brought forcefully to their attention, will find pleasure in making a gift. We depend upon you to secure their support.

The usefulness of the Christian Century and the Disciples Publication Society can be extended immeasurably by the prompt assistance of our generous friends.

We depend upon you to stand behind us! And we need your support now!

Do not let our call pass unheeded but fill out this blank and mail to us at once.

The Bethany System of Sunday School Literature

Don't Cheat Your School

This is written only for pastors who feel some measure of responsibility for the quality of literature going into the hands of their Sunday School scholars.

And, no doubt, all pastors who read the Christian Century are of that sort. Their point of view is that of religious education. The Sunday School to them is more than an aggregation of units brought together each week to go through a certain formal program—calling the roll, "doing" the lesson, "taking up the pennies," asking for birthday money, and telling the children to be sure to "have a good lesson" next Sunday!

The Sunday School is to them rather The Church Studying the Word of Eternal Truth, and developing in minds and hearts the spirit of the Christian religion. It is, indeed, the Church's best chance to guarantee Christly men and women in the next generation, as well as in this.

To pastors who hold this high ideal of the work of the Sunday School, the matter of literature becomes a most vital one. Second only to the influence of the teacher in the life of the pupil is that of the literature upon which the scholars feed their minds and souls. And, in many cases, we are sure the influence of the literature comes first.

Roosevelt declares that one of the strongest influences that moulded his early life was a child's paper he subscribed for, and which he valued highly. Are not your children and youths just as likely to be so influenced?

ARE YOU ACQUAINTED WITH THE LITERATURE USED IN YOUR SCHOOL?

If you are alert to the responsibility upon you as the leader in religious education in your church, by all means secure samples of all systems published, and see to it that your school uses the literature that it finds to be the most up-to-date, most virile, and Best Adapted to Character Building. Do not neglect to ask for returnable samples of the Bethany System of Sunday School Literature. THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY

Face to Face

IT HAS been suggested that the natural associations of men in immediate face to face circles are the ancient and persistent nurseries of the highest sentiments and ideals of the race. Such are the family, the play ground, the neighborhood and the public school.

Every one may verify this by reflecting on his own experience. All through life we greet the school friends of our childhood and youth by their first names. We welcome them into the secrets of our business successes or failures and into the inner shrines of our ambitions and of our faith. They are kin to us. The bonds which unite us are the bonds of common joys and trials. We were welded together in the melting moods of many tender, thrilling moments.

Schools preserve these binding, authoritative occasions by publishing "annuals," with pictures of classes and clubs, teams, fraternities and festal hours. When we freshen memory by poring over those scenes and faces the heart expands and swells with a sense of real kinship.

Here is the soil and atmosphere in which all that is best in life germinated and bloomed—love, sympathy, respect and emulation. Such associations are yet the fountains of life.

Social workers have found that these must be restored for the individual in order to enable him to live a normal, efficient life. Children orphaned are placed with foster parents.

Reformatories and "homes" of all kinds are adopting the cottage system where the units of comradeship and mutual interdependence may be as much like real families as possible.

Occasionally individuals succeed in carrying the family and neighborhood relation into wider areas and to multitudes of lives.

The apostle Paul did this. Probably it was his personal acquaintance with the churches of the Gentiles which made them realize their fellowship most keenly.

A similar result was accomplished among the Disciples of Christ in the last century. Nearly every congregation in the middle west, over sixty years of age, cherishes the fact that Alexander Campbell once made them a visit. Among the older members it is a mark of distinction to be of those who heard him preach or debate on some of his many tours of the churches. He increased the adherents of the faith wherever he went and his personal visits strengthened the hearts of the faithful.

This face to face acquaintance has contributed incalculably to the strength of certain men of our national life, particularly in the cases of Ex-president Roosevelt and Mr. Bryan.

A striking illustration of the power of this personal association is seen in the history of William Lorimer. He built up his political following by acquaintance and kindness and intense loyalty. As a consequence he has never been defeated in his own community. The newspapers could not alienate his constituency and it was only when his case was taken away from home, and then only after the most strenuous effort, that he could be defeated. His followers, however, are still wonderfully loyal and attribute his reversal of fortune to the malice of his enemies and to the caprice of politics.

The successful politician knows the power of the "glad hand" and its influence is not altogether bad.

It is a living agency for awakening the spirit of democracy.

Its effect upon the individual citizen is electric.

Election day gives many men their closest touch with the spirit of democratic institutions.

Even the corrupt and perverted institutions of the under world live by the borrowed strength derived from this ideal world of friendship and communion.

The saloon is now known to have its strength in being the poor man's club. It is the one place of warmth and light and easy human contact for multitudes of men. If this were taken from it, the dram shop would quickly die.

Much the same is true of dance halls and doubtful places of amusement. They contain laughter and song, comradeship and a sort of flattering equality.

Places they are where one may look into the eyes of a company of people and secure a sense of an environing humanity with its quick tang and touch of life.

But it is the church which is the ideal custodian of this fellowship.

It is a larger family, a vital brotherhood. It assembles men and women and little children within its genial companionship, lights their faces with gleams of heavenly love and tenderness, strengthens their better nature and affirms by speech and song and prayer their nobler life and destiny.

All persons who sense this deeper meaning of the church should labor to make it vital and compelling. Too often the fellowship of the church is merely sentimental and unrelated to the great concerns of daily toil and duty. For this reason the ancient greeting of "brother" and "sister" often seems hollow and vapid.

Why do these terms sometimes seem more real and vital in fraternal orders and in brotherhoods of laboring men? Men who do not wince at such appellations in their lodges may shrink from them in the church.

Perhaps the church has too much cant. Maybe it is not simple and immediate enough in bringing people to work together and to associate together freely and directly.

The surest cure for formalism and insincerity in religion is to build the activities of the church around actual needs and to enlist all members in the practical tasks thus encountered.

The movements which are afoot to set the church upon the relief and cure of poverty and the reduction of crime and social injustice are giving it new life.

When men and women meet in the name and spirit of Christ to carry out his will in their own neighborhood and in the world, then the fellowship of the church takes on new meaning and reality. It gains substance and power.

Local churches are centers in which individuals maintain the intimacy of soldiers on a campaign, of school-fellows in a quest for knowledge, of a family in mutual love and forbearance. Everything which challenges their powers and resources draws them together.

At times the church invites persecution by denunciation and opposition, for such persecution inevitably develops fellow feeling among all those subject to it. Never has the church been more alive or more conscious of its bonds of fellowship than in the days of its great adventures and its martyrdoms.

Gathered about its altars, celebrating its high days, singing its songs of deliverance and of defiance, there has been generated a solidarity and a community of interests which makes it a mighty power over the spirits of men.

There are those who wonder how the church maintains itself with so many outworn ideas and symbols. But they overlook its fellowship, its brotherhood, its deep intimacy and its patient affection.

These are the things which make it endure. By these it builds up love one to another and passionate devotion.

By these also it becomes a model of larger associations, full of personal, face-to-face loyalty and an ever-ascending idealism.

Why Abstain?

Address Delivered by Secretary Bryan at Philadelphia, March 15, 1915, Under the Auspices of the National Abstainers' Union. Reported by the General Secretary of that Organization.

BY WILLIAM JENNINGS BRYAN.

The object of The National Abstainers' Union is to promote a nation-wide campaign of pledge signing without respect to party, creed, race, nationality, age, sex, occupation, or other condition. There are no fees or dues or obligations, except the faithful observance of the following pledge: "The Undersigned Promises, God Helping, Never to Use Intoxicating Liquor as a Beverage." The meeting at which this address was delivered is believed to be one of the largest, if not the largest temperance meeting ever held in America. It was for men only, and the number of those who, by rising, indicated their willingness to sign the pledge, was estimated at twelve thousand.

I AM proud to participate in this great temperance meeting. I have no reason to doubt the statement that has been made in your presence tonight—namely, that this is the largest gathering of men ever assembled in the United States, at a temperance meeting. The National Abstainers' Union is built upon the broadest of foundations. It welcomes to its ranks those of every creed. The two letters read tonight show how comprehensive is the interest felt.

I need not emphasize the value of the support promised by Mr. Sunday. Dr. John R. Mott is one of the most eminent of the Christian laymen of America and I am glad that the movement has his endorsement. I am gratified too that Archbishop Pendergrast has given to this meeting the splendid support of his emphatic approval. Congressman Logue, a member of the reception committee tonight who has long been identified with the temperance movement in this city, informs me that the Catholic total abstinence societies of the city have an enrollment of more than seventeen thousand members. You may be interested to know that the two temperance speeches which I made in recent years to large audiences were made, the first one at Chicago under the auspices of the Catholic Total Abstinence Union of the United States, and the second at Atlantic City before the General Assembly of the Presbyterian church. I hope that this organization may be able to bring into effective co-operation all the believers in total abstinence, without regard to race, creed, or party.

MR. SUNDAY AND "BOOZE."

This meeting is held for a specific purpose and that purpose is to deal with one of the greatest evils which afflict society. It is not to be compared, in its breadth and depth of interest, with the series of meetings which have been held here by Mr. Sunday. He, with the support of the ministers of the city, has been appealing to the men and women of Philadelphia to consider the greatest subject with which man has to deal, namely, religion. Religion has been defined as the relation that man fixes between himself and his God, and nothing else is in the same class with it because nothing else affects, as religion does, the entire life and all its activities. When a man's heart has been brought into harmony with the will of the Heavenly Father, the whole life is regulated because the heart is the center and source of the influences that control life. Tonight we deal with but one of the outward manifestations of this inward relation—with one habit—namely the drink habit, and I cannot hope to present a stronger indictment of the habit of liquor drinking than Mr. Sunday has already presented to this audience. No one can surpass him in portraying the evils of intemperance or the value of total abstinence, but I venture to present the subject as it appears to me, in the hope that I may be able to reach and influence some who have not yet joined the total abstainers. Before taking up the arguments in favor of total abstinence, let me call your attention to the importance of the subject.

ANNUAL COST OF DRINK.

It is estimated that the people of the United States spend almost two billion and a half annually for intoxicating liquors. It is difficult for the mind to comprehend so large a sum unless we resort to comparisons. Let me suggest a few.

William Jennings Bryan

It has recently been stated on high authority that the cost of the war now raging in Europe reaches the enormous total of three hundred and seventy-five millions a week—or more than fifty millions a day. If this is true the drink bill of the United States would carry on the war for six weeks—and that means that the daily cost of liquor to the people of the United States is more than one-tenth of the toll that the belligerent nations pay because of the awful conflict now raging—the greatest that the world has ever known, whether measured by the number of men engaged, the destructiveness of the implements employed, or its expensiveness to the nations involved.

The cost of the Panama Canal, the most gigantic engineering feat in history, was about four hundred millions of dollars. Is it not appalling to think that we spend for drink every year something like six times the cost of the Panama Canal?

THREE TIMES THAT SPENT FOR EDUCATION.

I have endeavored to secure an accurate estimate of the amount of money spent on education in this country, and the figure given to me is seven hundred and fifty millions of dollars. This pays all the teachers who instruct the children, from the kindergarten to the university, in this land of more than ninety millions. It provides salaries for the great intellectual army whose inestimable service no figures can describe. If we were to cease these expenditures, this nation, so conspicuous in all that contributes to the civilization of the world, would lapse into barbarism. And yet we spend for drink more than three times as much as we spend for education.

COMPARED WITH GOVERNMENT EXPENSES.

The annual appropriations of the Federal Government are a little less than a billion and a quarter of dollars. This sum includes the salaries of all of the public officials from the president down. It includes the salaries and expenses of our ambassadors and ministers through whom we maintain diplomatic relations with the entire world; it covers the cost of our consular service which looks after our commerce in foreign lands. It includes the expenses of the treasury, which handles our money, collects our taxes and supervises the banking system of the nation. It covers the expenses of the army and the expenses of the navy. It provides means for enforcing the laws of the United States. It includes the operations of the postoffice department, which carries mail to every village, hamlet and city, with its fifty-six thousand postmasters, its nineteen thousand railway clerks and its seventy-five thousand mail carriers in the cities and in the country. It covers the expenses of the interior department, with its multiplied agencies for dealing with pensions, with public lands of the country, with irrigation and with Indian affairs. It covers the expenses of the agricultural department with its experimental work and its search throughout the world for that which can be profitably grown in this country. It supplies the needs of the rapidly increasing department of commerce and the vitally important work of the department of labor. It supplies the funds needed by the Interstate Commerce Commission for the regulation of railroads and by the new Federal Trade Commission for the prevention of monopoly.

All of these government agencies employed in administering the Federal government of this great nation are operated at an expense of less than a billion and a quarter of dollars. Think, if the mind can comprehend it, of this nation spending twice that amount for alcoholic liquor.

SOME MORE FIGURES.

Here are four comparisons. Do they help you to understand what a drain on this country the drink habit is? According to the estimate given, the average tax laid upon each citizen by the use of liquor is more than twenty-five dollars a year, or, counting five to the family, more than one hundred and twenty-five dollars to the family annually. If any political party attempted an annual increase in the taxes upon the people to the extent of one-fifth of that sum, it would be turned out of power by an indignant public. When it is remembered that this tax is not uniform but is, on the average, heaviest upon those least able to bear it, is it not our duty to consider how the nation can be relieved of this enormous burden?

The object of this meeting is not to discuss the governmental phases of the liquor traffic, but rather to deal with remedies that can be applied by the individual without the aid of statute law, and fortunately the plans which we present tonight involve no controverted questions. Whatever differences of opinion there may be as to legal remedies, no one doubts that total abstinence is, as far as it goes, a complete remedy for the drink habit. Everyone who, by his own resolve, separates himself from those who drink and allies himself with those who do not drink, to this extent lessens the amount of liquor consumed and lightens the task of those who are called upon to deal with the subject through legislation or through the enforcement of law.

WHY TOTAL ABSTINENCE?

Our appeal is to the individual and I ask your attention while I present a few of the reasons which, in my mind, justify total abstinence.

In the first place, let us consider the physical reasons against the use of alcohol. To begin with, drink brings no advantage whatever to the one who drinks and, since intelligence demands a reason for any course of action, the fact that no good reason can be given for drinking ought to be sufficient to prevent the use of liquor to any extent.

But the use of liquor is not only unnecessary and indefensible from the standpoint of advantage, but it is objectionable as a beverage even when taken in the smallest quantity. It has been scientifically demonstrated that the moderate use of alcohol decreases a man's efficiency.

An athlete cannot do his best if he drinks at all—this has been demonstrated by experience; a typesetter will make more mistakes when drinking than when sober—this has been established by experiment; alcohol makes a soldier less accurate of his aim, and let me add that the present war is giving conclusive proof that total abstinence has its value on the battlefield. Russia has gone to the extent of abolishing the sale of liquor even though in doing so she sacrifices an annual revenue of four hundred millions in the midst of a war. The German Emperor is an advocate of total abstinence. The British government is refusing liquor to its soldiers and in France the legislature is considering the liquor question. If "John Barleycorn" is a failure in a fight who can respect him in time of peace? The accidents in industry are increased in proportion as liquor is consumed—these are but a few illustrations of the effect of alcohol, even when but little is taken.

EMPLOYERS DEMAND ABSTINENCE.

But there is an argument still more easily understood, namely the increasing demand for total abstinence which is being made by employers. On boats, grog used to be furnished to sailors; it is becoming more and more the rule to deny it to them altogether. The owner of a ship cannot afford to trust passengers or cargo, or even the vessel, to a man who allows his brain to be befuddled by alcohol. Our railroad managers are applying more and more stringent rules against drink. They cannot afford to take the risk of either loss of life or damage to property involved in the employment of men who use liquor. And so on through other industries; the more important the employment the more rigidly the use of liquor is forbidden.

If a young man wants to know public opinion in regard to moderate drinking, let him present a recommendation saying that he is a moderate drinker. Why do recommendations, intending to help those to whom they are given, omit a reference to the fact that a man drinks, if he does drink at all?

I spoke a few nights ago to eight hundred and fifty midshipmen at the Annapolis Naval Academy, and a finer body of young men it would be impossible to find. Not one of them is permitted to use intoxicating liquor. Why is the use of liquor forbidden to these men except on the ground that it would be hurtful to them? They are being prepared, at governmental expense, for government service and the fact that they are not permitted to use alcohol should impress all young men who seek to fit themselves for important work.

ALCOHOL CURSES THE UNBORN.

The use of alcohol not only lowers a man's productive capacity but it imparts constitutional weakness to his offspring. Even if the pleasure derived from the use of alcohol were not followed by a pain that overcomes the pleasure—even if it did not manifest itself in the impairment of the individual who uses it—the fact that its effects are transmitted to the child and thus visit an undeserved punishment upon it, ought to weigh mightily with the man who has not decided the drink question for himself.

But there is another reason why one should not drink at all, namely the danger of drinking to excess. It cannot be truthfully said that every moderate drinker becomes a drunkard, but it is true that every drunkard comes from the number of those who drink moderately; none come from the ranks of the total abstainers. I remember to have heard a temperance lecturer use an illustration when I was a boy; I pass it on to those of this generation. He admitted that there is a difference between the moderate drinker and the drunkard; but he described it as the difference between the pig and the hog—the hog being a little older than the pig.

The drunkard has indulged the habit longer and to a greater extent than the moderate drinker—but the moderate drinker is on the road over which the drunkard must travel before he becomes a sot. And no moderate drinker can be absolutely sure that he will not be overcome by the appetite. There is no time in life from youth to old age when it is safe for a man to cultivate a taste for alcoholic drinks; and surely it is the part of wisdom not to drink at all when drinking brings no advantage; when drink, even in small quantities, impairs one's capacity; when the use of alcohol affects the child of the drinker, and when in addition to these a drinker runs the risk of being overcome by the appetite.

A WASTE OF MONEY.

But let me give you another reason for total abstinence. No one can afford to spend money for drink—not even a small amount of money. Money should not be wasted and it is worse than wasted when used for that which, instead of benefiting, does harm. There are so many good uses that can be made of money that it seems strange that anyone should be willing to spend money for intoxicating liquor. Go among those who drink and see to what actual needs the money could be applied. It would improve and make more sanitary the houses in which they live; it would clothe their children better; it would bring more comfort into the home, not to speak of the more substantial pleasure which the drinker would be able to enjoy.

If one does not spend all his money, either for immediate use or as a protection against the infirmities of age, the world around presents opportunities for use of his money in innumerable altruistic ways. There is no investment so profitable as investment in humanity. He who, out of brotherly love, aids his fellowmen in proportion as he is able to aid draws from such contributions a joy infinitely more satisfying than can be derived from the use of liquor.

I have spoken of the reason based upon physical welfare and also of the reason based upon the obligation that rests upon a man to make a wise use of his money, but there is a third reason which, to my mind, cannot fail to impress the man who is guided by his conscience, namely, the use which man should make of his example. Even if a man were sure that the moderate use of liquor would be of no physical injury to him and would involve no danger of excess; even if he felt that he had money to spare for drinking, still, in view of the awful consequences of indulgence in liquor, can he afford to gratify himself at the expense of those who, weaker in resisting power, may be led astray by his example!

ALCOHOL CAUSES POVERTY AND CRIME.

It is that we are so bound together that we cannot escape from the indirect effect of anything that is harmful to society. From the lowest standpoint upon which the subject can be discussed, namely, the ground of pecuniary interest, we are compelled to use our influence to lessen drinking. The use of liquor is the direct cause of crime, of poverty, of degradation and of despair, and we can never tell when we shall ourselves suffer at the hands of those who are victims of intemperance. Property is insecure and life is unsafe in proportion as the use of liquor contributes to the number of criminals, the number of paupers and the number of the desperate. We have, therefore, not only the individual reasons before given and the other reasons advanced, but we have a financial interest in supporting and spreading the cause of temperance. We have, as members of society, an interest in preventing the economic waste, tremendous in amount, due to the deteriorating influence of intoxicating liquor. We have also a moral interest in lifting society to the highest plane, a thing impossible so long as the ravages of drink are felt in so many homes.

If we are convinced that total abstinence is a desirable thing, let me add a word in support of the policy of signing the pledge on the ground that it suggests lack of strength of character; some say that, although never intending to drink, they would not wish to bind themselves by a pledge. There is nothing humiliating about a pledge. Those who are united in marriage take a pledge at the altar; why should it be less honorable to promise not to drink than to pledge fidelity to the marriage vows?

WHY SIGN THE PLEDGE?

The pledge marks the crossing of the line into the ranks of the total abstainers. The man who says, "I never expect to drink," but adds, "I will not sign a pledge," raises the same suspicion that is raised when a man says to you, "I admit that I owe you but I will not put it in writing." You cannot help feeling that his purpose would be more strongly stated if expressed in writing. So long as one refuses to sign the pledge he cannot urge others to sign, and he is in danger of having the sincerity of his reasons doubted.

I believe in the pledge; I began signing the pledge before I can remember; I have never failed to sign if, by signing, I could persuade anyone else to sign with me, and as long as I live I shall stand ready to sign with anyone and everyone.

THE LUSITANIA TRAGEDY.

IT IS difficult to think with calmness in the face of this latest desperate deed of barbarism committed in the war. The fact that an English ship has been sent to the bottom by a German submarine is not the chief matter of concern. If a German passenger steamer had been torpedoed by an English deep-water prowler, the ghastliness and barbarity of the deed would be the same.

It is the horror of the depths to which a people can sink in the desperation which a growing sense of ultimate defeat brings on.

For no event of the war has made clearer Germany's increasing realization of final failure. It is the act of a mad and conscienceless war-staff, determined at all hazards to inflict damage on its foes.

Men, crazed with drink, or unbalanced in mind, now and then run amuck, killing people and destroying property in a manner impossible to sane and sober individuals. Even so may nations do, it seems, or those who profess to represent nations.

If a German fleet had met the Lusitania on the high seas, had captured her as a prize of war, confiscating her cargo, and destroying her contraband of war, no doubt would have arisen as to the perfect justification for the deed. The people on board would have fared according to the rules of war. If there were combatants, they could have been imprisoned; and the neutrals would have been landed at the nearest port unharmed.

But this submarine attack opened a new chapter in the story of barbarism on the part of a so-called civilized people, and gives a new and sinister definition to "kultur."

There are many thousands of Germans and Germany-loving Americans in our land. Large numbers of our people are sincere admirers of the things for which Germany has stood. Many of them feel deep gratitude for the elements of education and efficiency which Germany has taught them. They are trying to hold the issues of the war in a balanced and neutral mind.

But these recent events put a very heavy strain on Germany's friends in America. The words of denial or apology for things that have happened in Belgium and along the coast grow fainter and less convincing.

The ultimate defeat of Germany will be less regretted than would have been the case if a fair and honorable history had not been stained by acts across whose record the red braud of "barbarism" will have to be written.

CHINA AND JAPAN.

RECENT news from the far East has been very disquieting. The strained relations between the two peoples across the Pacific have almost reached a breaking point. Just at present there seems to be a more hopeful tone in the news. It would add greatly to the seriousness of international troubles if these two great neighbors were to fall out with each other.

The sympathies of America are with both Japan and China. The former is the most progressive and enlightened people of the Orient. They have made tremendous progress within the past half century in the effort to reach the foremost rank of civilization. In politics, education, business efficiency, and industrial activity they have proved themselves in almost every sense a modern people, and they naturally ask for recognition by all other peoples in the family of nations.

America has intimate and friendly relations with Japan. Perhaps we have not always accorded her the generous and courteous recognition she deserves, but she is a friend and not an enemy, and we can justly sympathize with her wish in the matter of national growth and proper expansion of trade and population.

On the other hand, our relations with China are even more intimate and sympathetic. We have played the part of adviser and friend during the difficult period of China's emergence from medieval to at least partially modern conditions. The Chinese people are deeply grateful to the United States for the assistance thus afforded, and naturally look to us for help in the crisis which they have reached in their relations with Japan.

Upon the surface of Japanese statements there is no intention on the part of that country to appropriate Chinese territory or resources. Yet there is no question but that China regards these assurances with ill-concealed disbelief. The sincere friends of China consider the moment critical. The sympathies of Americans are with both these peoples, but our definite and persistent diplomatic efforts must be used to preserve China's integrity and to warn Japan away from any policy of selfish advantage, which would mean the dismemberment and weakening of her great but unprepared neighbor.

THE SOCIALIZED CHURCH.

THERE is less talk these days of the "institutional" church. Is the thing dead? Or has the idea developed beyond the original content of the words, making necessary new terminology?

An "institutional" church was a church that emphasized devices. It boasted of a gymnasium or a swimming pool, or a day nursery. It was often lacking in any vision of the real meaning of the chores which it accomplished from day to day.

The "socialized" church is the more modern terminology. It has many of the devices which were in favor in the past. But it knows why it uses them! The socialized church wishes to make the church the center of the good impulses of the community. It is an active agent to promote brotherhood and social solidarity in a given neighborhood.

This socialized church finds that people get better acquainted when they play together, study together, and eat together, than when they worship together without these other common experiences. Hence the socialized church is never regarded as "cold," or aristocratic, or exclusive.

Being a socialized church is not a matter of equipment, nor of paid leaders. Churches without either have taken its spirit and put into practice its ideals.

We know a business man in a small church who caught a good many boys pilfering from his store. Once he had them arrested, but the results secured did not satisfy him. He adopted the expedient of making them into a Sunday-school class! Everybody at the Sunday-school was surprised at that class. But he played ball with the boys, had them dine with him, taught them life duties, and kept them from the juvenile court.

He made Christians of some of them! With no gymnasium, and with only a few hours of spare time, he gave an entire congregation a vision of what it means to be a socialized church.

THE NEGLECT OF HOLY SCRIPTURE.

THE early Disciple knew how to handle the scriptures. He often carried a copy around with him, ready for the religious discussion in which he so delighted. If some of his expositions were different from those now in vogue, he knew at least what was in the Book. "To the law and to the testimony" was his continual challenge, and he loved to insist, "Where the scriptures speak, we speak; where the scriptures are silent, we are silent."

There is a new generation of Disciples, gathered in by the swifter processes of mass evangelism. They are no longer the hand-picked fruit of religious discussion, but are like apples shaken violently from the tree, with a consequent lack of soundness. They have no knowledge of the fundamental documents, as their fathers had. One of the Disciple leaders rightly says that the Bible is more threatened by the neglect of its friends, than by the attacks of its enemies.

One Disciple church is reading the Bible through this year, publishing daily assignments in its calendar. Another church read through the New Testament during Lent, with similar posting of daily readings.

But it is not enough merely to read the Bible, though this is a vast improvement on utter neglect, and abysmal ignorance.

One has not discharged his duty to his soul, nor has he realized his signal opportunity, until he has not only read the Bible, but also knows, as far as possible, what it means.

The impulse of modern life, its hunger for brotherhood, its sense of democracy, its protest against evil conditions, is but the voice of the prophets sounding forth again. One should know the meaning of these voices at the time of their origin, if he would understand modern life. The mothering of unfortunates, patience with defectives and evil-doers, is but the spirit of Jesus working in the hearts of modern men.

To be intelligently modern, the man of today must live with these documents, more than two thousand years old in many cases! If this be paradox, it finds its justification in the experience of the great leaders who bear the burden of the race on their hearts.

MAKING CITY MISSIONS EFFECTIVE.

MOST denominations have relatively smaller holdings in the city than in towns. Religion seems less imposing in the midst of the compelling interests of metropolitan life. The mission chapel makes but feeble showing over against the sky-scraper of commerce, and ministerial institutes seem but unimportant gatherings in comparison with the board meetings of corporation magnates.

In metropolitan environment, the task of presenting a religious program adequate for the city is one requiring statesmanlike grasp of city movements and deep insight into the nature of religion itself.

The first requisite of a city program is that it have centralized authority and a unified program of action. Sporadic efforts by non-co-operating societies or congregations mean waste, sometimes competition, and in every case inefficiency.

Congregational and Baptist bodies with their loose organizations have been compelled to centralize in the great cities. The Baptists in Chicago have their Baptist Executive Council, controlled entirely by Chicago men, which not only administers city missions but is the denominational clearing house for the city. This organization even aspires to secure title to the Baptist property of the city and has much of it already. Baptists have always been individualists as have the Disciples, but the losses which they suffered in Chicago drove them to the policy of centralization.

Disciples, also, have moved in the direction of centralization of city mission affairs.

In Kansas City, Los Angeles, and many other cities the official boards of the various congregations form a central board which is responsible for the city program. The progress of the cause in every city adhering to this policy for a number of years is an unanswerable argument for its success.

If there is a tendency in any quarter today to insist upon administering the details of a city mission policy from a distance, through a national board, such counsel should be regarded as a reversion to a form of activity now everywhere outgrown.

BACK TO THE SOIL.

THE season means spring-fever to many, but those who have come from the farm feel at this time of year the call of nature. The garden means more than a supply of fresh radishes. It serves to keep preachers, and other workers in abstractions, in close touch with the world that seems most real to the majority of humanity.

Tolstoi divided the task of the day into three parts, one-third to be given to the use of the large muscles, one-third to the small muscles, and one-third to the brain. Few of us would allow so large an obligation to share the muscular tasks of society, but the garden, with its hopes of the summer, its marvelous processes, its appeal to the best of our primitive instincts, is a good place to discharge this duty.

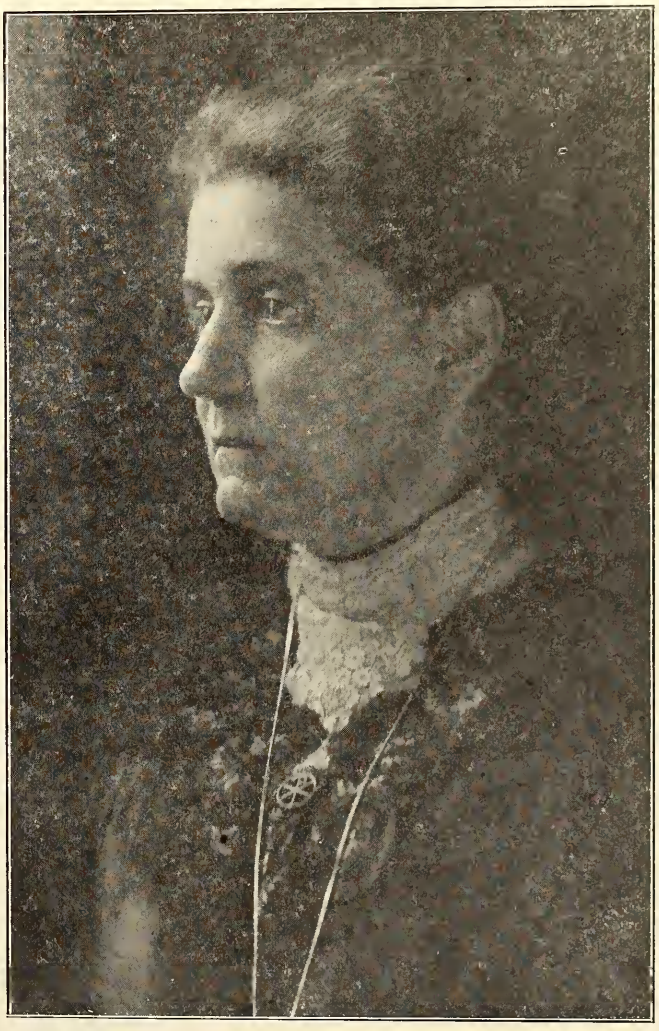
TACTLESS ADVERTISING.

THERE is great interest in church advertising, as is evident from the samples of it which can be gathered at a church convention, and which come into the newspaper offices in a ceaseless flood. Good advertising is a most effective way to extend the gospel. To the amateur advertiser a word of caution is offered, however. Not all publicity is desirable. Better obscurity in the community, than for a church to sacrifice its dignity, or for a preacher to barter away his professional modesty.

There is a little plant in the human heart called Reverence, which needs careful watering and pruning. We may secure attention to the church for a time by uprooting that delicate plant, but have we truly advanced the cause of religion?

* * *

THE MORE we think about it, the clearer and surer it becomes that, if we are ever to learn anything about the Supreme Spirit, we must come at it not alone by looking at the earth and sky, not alone by studies of matter and force, but by looking also and chiefly by inward nature at the finest spiritual products and principles as they are exhibited in the noblest lives.—Charles G. Ames.



TO JANE ADDAMS AT THE HAGUE.

LADY of Light, and our best woman, and Queen,
Speak now for Peace (though anger breaks your heart),
Though naught but smoke and fame and drowning is seen.

Lady of Light, speak, though you speak alone,
Though your voice may seem as a dove's in this howling flood,
It is heard tonight by every senate and throne.

Though the widening battle of millions and millions of men
Threatens tonight to sweep the whole of the earth,
Back of the smoke is the vision of Kindness Again.

Preachers and Students in Armies.

Fifty per cent of the pastors in France and Germany are in the armies and 60 per cent of the university students of Great Britain are among the British volunteers, says John R. Mott in speaking of the unselfishness displayed by the people of Europe in this time of distress.

Bishop McDowell Will Lecture in Yale.

The Yale lectures on preaching are an annual event of much significance to the preaching fraternity. It is now definitely announced that Bishop McDowell of the Bishop W. F. McDowell

Methodist Episcopal church will be the next Yale lecturer. He will deliver his lectures immediately following the Easter vacation in 1917.

Preachers at University of Chicago.

The University preachers for May at the University of Chicago have just been announced, and are as follows: President Albert Parker Fitch, of Andover Theological seminary, Cambridge, Massachusetts, spoke on May 2 and May 9. Rev. J. H. Randall, of Mount Morris Baptist church, New York, will be the speaker on May 16, and on May 23 Professor Edward Alfred Steiner, of Grinnell college. On the last Sunday in May the speaker will be Professor G. A. Johnston Ross, of Union Theological seminary, New York. On June 6 also Professor Ross will be the speaker, and June 13 will be Convocation Sunday.

New Unitarian Leader.

Charles W. Eliot, former president of Harvard university, has served the past year as president of the American Unitarian Association, and has been very active in his duties. He recently handed in his resignation and the Unitarians are now announcing that Former President William Howard Taft, of New Haven, has assumed the position. Mr. Taft is a loyal Unitarian and will probably take much interest in the propagation of the Unitarian viewpoint.

Rev. Charles Stelzle Out for Prohibition.

Rev. Charles Stelzle has opened an office in the Fifth Avenue building, New York. His object is to make ready for national prohibition. His platform reads as follows: To demonstrate that the abolition of the liquor traffic will not create a labor panic; to assist in establishing temporary labor exchanges to find work for those losing their jobs through prohibition legislation; to promote the organization of adequate social centers as substitutes for the saloon.

Unitarians Work in Japan.

Prof. Minami, one of the ministers of the Japanese Unitarian church in Tokio, has published a little book, "The True Man-Christ," in which the Unitarian view of Jesus is ably presented. His book on Prof. Eucken and his philosophy, dedicated to Rev. Clay MacCauley, has reached a sale of upward of two thousand copies. Prof. Uchigasaki, of the Tokio church, has translated Rev. C. W. Wendte's tract "What Do Unitarians Believe?" into Japanese for general circulation by the Mission.

Financier Remembers Alma Mater.

Charles M. Hall, an alumnus of Oberlin college, Oberlin, Ohio, has given three million dollars to Oberlin. Mr. Hall acquired his wealth, in part, by reason of his education, and he has been generously mindful of his Alma Mater.

Chicago Baptists Adopt English Practice.

The First Baptist church, of Oak Park, a suburb of Chicago, has decided to receive unimmersed Christians into full membership in the church, though continuing to practice the immersion of their own converts. English Baptists have for many years held to this practice, but only a few churches in America have adopted it. The act takes on additional significance from the fact that this church is the place where some missionary leaders of the denomination hold membership.

New U. B. Publishing House.

The United Brethren have recently built a new house for their printing plant, in which their church paper, "The Religious Telescope," and their young people's paper, "The Watchword," will be printed, together with all their Dayton publications and other printing. The new building is located on Fifth street, about two blocks west of The Christian Publishing Association building, of the "Christian denomination." It is a modern structure and well adapted to the work in hand. It is to be four stories and is said to contain 152,000 square feet of floor space. The new building was dedicated on Tuesday, April 20, in a service which lasted practically all day and into the evening of that day. "The Religious Telescope" began its career more than eighty years ago at Circleville, Ohio. It was the beginning of the present publishing establishment. Then it did its work with two or three workmen, now it requires 241 persons to attend to its business.

Southern Methodists Grow.

The General Minutes of the Methodist Episcopal church, South, which have just been issued for 1914, show that the denomination now has a membership of 2,045,047, which indicates a growth for the year of 38,838 members, or about two per cent. There are now 8,086 traveling and 5,319 local preachers.

Secession from Orthodox Church.

The Russian Orthodox church extends its control to its members in America and in New York a resident bishop keeps in contact with the situation here. Recently 350 Russians seceded from the parent Russian church of Chicago and formed an independent congregation. It is not to be understood that this congregation is Protestant but is a church with Orthodox forms and faith, which is in revolt against foreign control. This kind of thing has happened frequently with Polish congregations in the Roman Catholic fellowship in America but has not happened before among the Russians. The precedent set will furnish footing for similar movements of unrest in other sections of America. The Russian immigrant suspects that the priest of the foreign country is in the pay of the Russian government as a spy, and many Russian immigrants are political offenders. For this reason, the movement of revolt against the Russian ecclesiastical control may reach large proportions in a short time.

Japanese Buddhist Temple, Fresno, Calif. (See note on next page)

Heathenism in America.

Many of the heathen religions of the world have obtained footing in America through immigration. The Chinese joss house is to be found in nearly every American city of metropolitan proportions. The Japanese have settled in considerable numbers on the Pacific coast and have brought with them their religious ideas. In Fresno, Cal., the Buddhists have built a Buddhist temple which is mostly used by the Japanese. In this sanctuary "The Light of Asia" is kept shining brightly. Buddhism even ventures to entertain a missionary attitude toward America and there are a few Buddhist converts in this country who have turned aside the gospel for the Way of Self-abnegation. In the end an American will have to have some other reason for being a Christian than that he "was born that way."

A New Methodist Editor.

The Book Committee of the Methodist Episcopal Church elects its editors. Recently this committee met in San Francisco and considered the task of finding an editor for the Christian Advocate of New York, the parent paper of American Methodism. They selected Dr. James R. Joy, who has been for a number of years the assistant editor on the paper. Dr. Joy is a Yale man, and has written a number of volumes for the Chautauqua courses. He has been very active in the affairs of the denomination outside his duties in the office of the religious newspaper, and is well qualified to interpret the news of modern Methodism.

Is Dr. Abbott a Universalist?

The Universalist Leader is claiming Dr. Lyman Abbott, of the Outlook, as a "fellow Universalist." Some years ago Dr. Abbott gave his reasons for not being a Universalist, among them being his statement that he believed in the freedom of the will. In a recent issue of the Outlook, however, appeared a statement on the modern meaning of hell and the reformatory character of its punishment. This has been seized upon by both the ultra-liberal and the ultra-conservative as an evidence of "Universalism." To many, the statement will not carry the implication of universal salvation at all.

Passion Play "Christ" in the Trenches.

Anton Lang, who has twice played the part of the Christ in the Passion play at Oberammergau, has been called to the colors and is fighting in a Bavarian regiment in the Vosges mountains. But for the war an interim Passion play would have been represented at Oberammergau this summer. The picture of the "Christus" of the Passion play at work in the trenches killing men is not a pleasant one.

Pope Favors Circulation of Gospels.

The Pious Society of St. Jerome was an organization of Roman Catholics in Italy for the circulation of the Christian Scriptures in the vernacular. It was formed in 1902 but after it had gone on with its work for a time, the reactionary pope, Pius X, discouraged the society and finally suppressed it. It kept itself alive secretly and as soon as the present pope came into authority, he petitioned to favor the society. It develops that he was one of its founders, so the permission was graciously given. The pope said: "Experience teaches that all deviations of present society have their origin in the fact that the doctrine and works of Jesus Christ have been utterly forgotten and men no longer draw from them inspiration for daily life." A further statement looks more in the direction of the Protestant principle of private interpretation of the Scriptures than any word of a pope in centuries: "We ardently desire that, as a result of your zeal, you may obtain not only an ever larger spread of the gospels, but also that the holy books may find their way into the homes of all Christian families, and there may become the evangelical 'piece of silver' sought after and jealously kept, so that all the faithful may get accustomed to read the holy gospels and to comment on them daily and thus may learn to live in perfect harmony with God's will." Professor Giovanni Luzzi, a Waldensian leader of Florence, expresses the belief that spiritual modernism will yet reform the Roman Catholic church and bring it into harmony with both apostolic and modern ideals of religion.

Dr. Mathews on Japan-China Crisis.

That there may be misconception of Japan's attitude toward China in the present crisis is the belief of Dean Shailer Mathews of the University of Chicago, who recently made a comprehensive tour of the empire and came into intimate touch with its leading statesmen. "Just how far Japan is planning to build up a sort of Asiatic Monroe doctrine the future alone will enable us to see," said Dr. Mathews yesterday. "During the entire course of negotiations the foreign office at Tokio has not taken the world into its confidence and in consequence we have been led to form opinions from statements which representatives of Japan regard as unfair. Even if we knew the entire plan of Japan we should still need to form conclusions with great hesitancy. To be in any sense a duplication of our Monroe Doctrine Japan's policy for China should content itself with protecting China from being exploited and dismembered by European powers. That China is exposed to such danger is evident from her recent history. Further, in this danger to China, Japan undoubtedly sees danger for her own development just as the United States sees danger in further European colonization in political control of the American continents. Every broad-minded American wants to see China given a chance to develop in a manner similar to that which Japan has enjoyed."

THE SERVERS.

Rev. Frank Crane in The Cosmopolitan.

The cry of the Old Gospel was, "Save!" That of the New Gospel is, "Serve!"

Yet we have not changed, only grown. The new comes out of the old. We have learned that to serve is to save.

The moral force of yesterday sought to save men from a hell hereafter; the ethical enthusiasm of today is directed toward saving men from hellishness here.

Christendom is shaken with a new conscience as by an earthquake. We are in the midst of economic upheavals more radical than the French Revolution.

The Servers are striking more deeply than the Savers ever struck.

The Servers say labor shall no more be exploited, trodden, tortured for the benefit of the endowed.

They are carving the hereditary parks of private lords into gardens for the people.

They are taking the children out of mines and factories and putting them into schools.

They are wresting public utilities from the wealth-barons and giving them into the hands of the people.

They are making of every woman a citizen.

They are determined to give every baby a square deal.

They are bringing back beauty to money-mad cities.

They have sentenced to death the two chief enemies of the race, War and Alcohol.

We are more profoundly religious now than were the men of any previous era. But we are not saving brands from the burning; we are putting out the fire.

The Savers gave us the world as lost, and attempted to rescue a few. The Servers have the bold purpose of transforming the world.

The call of the Savers was for missionaries. The call of the Servers is for citizens.

Episcopalian Missionary on a Hand-car.

A home missionary of the Protestant Episcopalian fellowship in Texas had a hard problem to reach all of his assignments on Easter Sunday. For Episcopalians not to have religious service on Easter is a great privation, so he was driven to extremities to devise a way to carry the holy sacrament to the scattered congregations that he ministers to.. An appeal for a hand-car was passed upon at last by the president of a railroad and the tireless rector set out with an assistant on this rude conveyance, and during the day traveled over sixty miles by rail with hand power. The name of this enthusiastic missionary is Rev. W. B. Roberts, and he makes his home in Dallas, Tex.

Son of Church Historian Visits England.

D'Aubigne wrote a history of the Reformation known to all the scholars, and his son, Pasteur Henri Merle d'-Aubigne is a well-known Protestant figure in Paris. He is pastor of the McCall mission church in the southeast of Paris. Recently he made a visit to England and delivered speeches before a number of London Brotherhoods. He speaks excellent English and was heard with great pleasure.

Federating the Theologians.

The odium theologicum, about which so much has been written, is not sufficient to separate theologians any more. In a number of cities the theological seminaries of the various denominations are federating, or are even practicing corporate union. At Harvard, a divinity school that is nominally Unitarian, has on its teaching staff three Congregationalists, three Unitarians, two Episcopalians and a Baptist. With this has been federated Andover Seminary, a Congregational institution. More recently the Episcopal Divinity school and Boston University School of Theology (Methodist) have federated with the Harvard school and exchange credits for courses. In Chicago, Baptists, Congregationalists, Universalists, Unitarians, Disciples and others have federated institutions operating in connection with the University of Chicago. In San Francisco and environs the same process is at work. Union Theological seminary, as its name implies, is an institution in which various denominations are represented. When a new generation of preachers comes out of these schools, will sectarian spirit be as ardent as formerly?

Here and There

What Shall the Preacher Study?

OF COURSE the center of all the preacher's studies is the Bible, and next to it in value is any book that helps him to understand that, any book that will make the One Book luminous. And the multitudes of such books embarrass us when we attempt to mention even a few of special helpfulness. But in obedience to some kind of mental law, books thrust themselves upon us with their kindly offices as soon as we begin to grow interested in any subject. Announce to yourself a subject of study, and see how many books are within your reach on that subject. Of their presence you had not before dreamed. As soon as the preacher begins to live up to Bengel's great motto, "Apply thyself to the text; apply the text to thyself," the desired volumes surround us as chariots and horsemen on the mountain top were revealed to the prophet's eyes in the hour of his need.

I can speak only of two classes of literature which are as close to the ministry of the preacher as any other. First, there is that vast array of devotional literature, which, according to Dr. W. Robertson Nicoll, should include Spurgeon's sermons. To the sermons we add by necessity the prayers of Spurgeon, of Beecher, of McLaren, of Martineau, and the greatest of them all, of Joseph Parker. It is significant that the prayers of the greatest preachers are among the classics of devotional literature. Great sermons are not the result of Shakespeare, Tennyson, Browning, or of accident; they are the fruits of devotion to a great cause and of the consecration of rare powers. Men who preach well must know how to pray. And let us not forget the Hymnal. If the preacher knows that well, he can afford to dispense with almost every other devotional volume. The preacher who does not know that volume has excluded himself from a devotional treasury surpassed only by the sacred volume alone. Our lamented President Graham urged upon every student in his classes the necessity of becoming as familiar with his hymnbook as with his Bible. This is the source from which many of the gems of devotional literature have been borrowed. It must have been a misfortune in the life of Henry Ward Beecher that his verbal memory was so defective that he could never trust himself to quote a hymn.

* * *

Among the classics of devotional literature must be included the volumes of F. B. Meyer, Andrew Murray and S. D. Gordon. Then we must read Augustine's "Confessions," "Pilgrim's Progress," "Grace Abounding," the Lives of St. Francis of Assisi and of Bernard of Clairvaux; "The Saint's Everlasting Rest," "Holy Living and Holy Dying," by Jeremy Taylor; Law's "Serious Call," Scougal's "The Life of God in the Soul of Man," Garrison's "Alone With God," Richardson's "Communing in the Sanctuary," Ainslie's "God and Me," Isaac Errett's "Letters to a Young Christian," Ainsworth's "Moral and Spiritual Aspects of Baptism," St. Bernard on "The Love of God," A. J. Gordon's "The Twofold Life" and "How Christ Came to Church." I will also include his little volume on "The Ministry of the Holy Spirit." Of course, all such lists can be indefinitely extended. The great missionary lives are really treatises not only on devotional thought, but they are the consecrated and devoted life in action. If one's heart is not warmed by the reading of missionary literature there is something radically wrong with the man.

* * *

I can speak only of another class of literature with which the preacher should be familiar, viz.: the sermonic. In reply to some questions I sent out as to the preacher's indebtedness to volumes of sermons, a number of persons replied that they recognized no such debt. Unfortunately, not many of the preachers get the help from sermons which we expect, and, on the whole, the volumes are disappointing because no sermon can ever be printed. After hearing a great sermon delivered one feels that the same sermon in print is a transformation from life to marble. It may have polish, correct structure, unimpeachable logic and every quality of a sermon, but the man is missing, and the sermon in print bears the same relation to the man as gloves do to the hand. I can account for our disappointment in the reading of sermons in no other way. We enjoy poetry, essays, history, every form of literature which is crowned by genius, except the sermon, and while these different forms represent men, the sermon, let us repeat, is the man. It is a variety of literature which must stand apart from every other. And yet viewed as literature it is of the highest order; it represents the greatest triumphs of pulpit effectiveness, and we cannot afford to ignore Chalmers any more than we can ignore Cicero. I feel like saying the homiletical literature might be called the literature of disappointment. But when all allowances are made, sermons of the masters should be read and studied for professional reasons, if for no other. We cannot hear many of the great preachers in their pulpits, we must hear them speak to us from the page. These volumes contain the soul of Christendom as no other literature does. As the musician studies the masters, as the aspirant to literary distinction sits at the feet of the masters of his craft, so the preacher must learn from the great preachers, from Augustine to our own time. He must know what a sermon is in the hands of men who know how to use it.

* * *

By general consent Frederick W. Robertson is the master of the English pulpit, and Henry Ward Beecher, the king of American preachers. Satisfying analysis of both and of their sermons may be found in Professor William Cleaver Wilkinson's "'Modern Masters of Pulpit Discourse," and in "Representative Preachers," by Professor Brastow, of Yale University. Their sermons are read wherever the English language is spoken. The wealth of sermonic literature is to be found in the English church because of its age, among other reasons, though, of course, a church with an elaborate liturgical service can not be expected to produce famous preachers with unfailing regularity. It is in the non-conformist pulpits in England and in the evangelical bodies in our own country that we find the sermon constantly perfected to an instrument of power. The names of South, Barrow, Taylor, Tillotson, yet possess a charm for many of the present generation, while among the more recent preachers in England and America we have Canon Liddon and Canon Farrar and many others of almost equal genius. The Scotch pulpit reminds us of its power through McCheyne, Chalmers, Bonar and Guthrie. Among the most modern of the preachers in England and America we have Spurgeon, Parker, McLaren, Selby, Martineau, Phillips Brooks, Dr. Storrs, Dr. C. H. Parkhurst, Dr. Charles E. Jefferson, Dr. Aked, Dr. S. Parks Cadman and Dr. Jowett. An acquaintance with something of the sermons of these mighty men of the pulpit, if not essential to the highest success in the ministry, will do much for any who aspire to a large measure of effectiveness.

As for the study of books, nothing but the barest suggestions can be offered. It is interesting to know the titles, if nothing more, of the books which the wise say should be read. Lists of books found in the supplements of some of the encyclopaedias are worthy of consideration. "Books and Reading," by President Noah Porter, and "Books and Men," by Austin Phelps, are of great value to the preacher for suggestions on studies and books. Sir John Lubbock's list of the one hundred best books is well known, and those who desire such a list for reference can find it and many other excellent lists in a volume entitled "Reading and Home Study," edited by Hamilton W. Mabie. "Great Books," by Canon Farrar, is an excellent volume in small compass. "The Choice of Books," by Frederick Harrison, remains among the standard works which treat of such matters, while Emerson's "Essay on Books" is well known to the preacher. If the preacher will wade into the catalogues and the book reviews which will review in the interest of the reader and not merely of the publisher, he will find abundant satisfaction; and if he ever gets beyond his depth a raft made of a thousand or two volumes of the latest fiction can be swung within his reach to bring him safely to terra firma.

Some advise the preacher to spend a winter with Wesley, with Maurice or Kingsley, with Jonathan Edwards, with Wordsworth or Longfellow, or any of the masters of poetry or fiction. It would be a work of grace for some of our preachers to spend a winter with Alexander Campbell to find out what he taught. A winter spent with Gibbon or Macaulay or Froude would bring rich returns. And every preacher who cares to can arrange a reading course for himself, allowing his bent to direct him, and, if it be faulty, the effort to do something in the way of systematic reading can be trusted to correct his natural vagrancy.

For a Faithful Heart.

I, and the bird,
And the wind together,
Sang a supplication
In the winter weather.

The bird sang for sunshine,
And the trees for winter fruit.
And for love in the spring time
When the thickets shoot.

And I sang for patience
When the teardrops start:
Clean hands and clear eyes,
And a faithful heart.

DAVID BRINGS THE ARK TO JERUSALEM.

INTERNATIONAL UNIFORM LESSON FOR MAY 30.

2 S. 6. (12) And it was told king David, saying, Jehovah hath blessed the house of Obed-edom, and all that pertaineth unto him, because of the ark of God. And David went and brought up the ark of God from the house of Obed-edom into the city of David with joy. (13) And it was so, that, when they that bare the ark of Jehovah had gone six paces, he sacrificed an ox and a fatling. (14) And David danced before Jehovah with all his might; and David was girded with a linen ephod. (15) So David and all the house of Israel brought up the ark of Jehovah with shouting, and with the sound of the trumpet.

Ps. 24. 1 The earth is Jehovah's, and the fulness thereof;
The world, and they that dwell therein.
2 For he hath founded it upon the seas,
And established it upon the floods.
3 Who shall ascend into the hill of Jehovah?
And who shall stand in his holy place?
4 He that hath clean hands and a pure heart;
Who hath not lifted up his soul unto falsehood,
And hath not sworn deceitfully.
5 He shall receive a blessing from Jehovah,
And righteousness from the God of his salvation.
6 This is the generation of them that seek after him,
That seek thy face, even Jacob. [Selah.
7 Lift up your heads, O ye gates;
And be ye lifted up, ye everlasting doors:
And the King of glory will come in.
8 Who is the King of glory?
Jehovah, strong and mighty,
Jehovah mighty in battle.
9 Lift up your heads, O ye gates;
Yea, lift them up, ye everlasting doors:
And the King of glory will come in.
10. Who is this King of glory?
Jehovah of hosts,
He is the king of glory.

Verse by Verse.

BY ASA MCDANIEL.

2 Sam. 6:12. Jehovah hath blessed the house of Obed-edom, because of the ark of God. We are not told what the blessing was, but it has been suggested that the blessing may have consisted in both riches and children. The ark symbolized the divine presence. The blessing, which followed the ark, was the reason why David wanted the ark in his own house. Parker suggests that the Bible represents the ark today.—David went and brought up the ark of God. Read in this connection 1 Ch. 15 and 16.—With joy. With music and song, and great shouting.

15. With shouting and with the sound of the trumpet. This was an occasion of unusual interest. Making a loud noise was an act of worship as late as the time of the Psalmist. We see traces of it today.

Ps. 24:1. The earth is Jehovah's. The natural order of the Hebrew fixes the reader's attention upon Jehovah, hence a better reading would be, "Unto Jehovah belongeth the earth." Albert the Good caused these words to be placed as a motto over the Royal Exchange.—The fulness thereof. All that fills it, its contents, its creatures.

2. For he. The emphasis is on "he." Jehovah and no other.—Founded it. The land rising out of the water is supposed to rest upon it. Established it. "The single act of creation passes over, as usual in the Old Testament, into the habitual act of God's sustaining providence." Briggs.

3. Who shall ascend? What sort of person is worthy to approach the Creator and Lord of all the earth?—Hill of Jehovah. The hill of Jehovah is here the temple hill.—Who shall stand? Not only to appear, but to remain.—Holy place. Synonymous with the hill of Jehovah in the preceding line.

4. Clean hands and a pure heart. He who is innocent of wrong doing, and violence.—Not lifted up his soul unto falsehood. To direct the mind to false and unreal things.—Sworn deceitfully. One who hath not sworn to deceive his neighbor.

6. This is the generation of them that seek after him. These are the men who desire to know God. The true Israelite, the ideal, the true people of God.—Selah. The word is of uncertain meaning, but the most natural one is that it is an interlude, or the place where the Psalm might be concluded for the service.

8. Who is the King of glory? The demand sung by the choir from within.—Jehovah strong and mighty * * * mighty in battle. The answer by the choir without setting forth the qualities of the king in war-like terms.

9. The choir of the army renewing the demand for admittance in almost identical terms.

10. The sentinels make another identical challenge, see v. 8.—He. The pronoun is emphatic. Jehovah and no other is the king of glory. The God of the universe. The eternal one.

Worship

The Lesson in Today's Life.

BY JOHN R. EWERS.

The ark was the symbol of worship among those ancient Israelites. In reality it was only a beautiful wooden box with some interesting objects inside. But it stood for God's leadership and particular care. It had a memorial value like our communion table. It was entirely right that this box should be sacredly guarded and that it should have a place, not in any private house, but in some central place of worship.

DAVID'S JOY.

The heart of the new king was in the right place. He made the return of the ark a great occasion. Thousands of people came to witness the bringing of this sacred emblem into Jerusalem. Soldiers, farmers, shepherds, vine-dressers, merchants, women and children came in crowds to see the ark brought into the capital. And now the procession approaches the gates. Dressed in white robes the elders come. The ark is surrounded by priests and Levites in brilliant oriental garments. Cymbals clash and trumpets blare. Beautiful women sweep forth from the city gates, to meet the priestly procession, with sweet voices. The air is filled with the scent of burning sacrifices. The crowds cannot be restrained and break forth into loud cheers as the gates are entered. Now the ark is placed in its tent. David reads a religious poem that he has written for the occasion. The people respond with feeling "Amens." David makes a prayer and the people end the day in feasting and great rejoicing. The religious significance cannot be overestimated. The king had led the procession and so happy had he been that no conventionality could hold him back. Dancing "with all his might" came David at the head of the group. David was no iceberg.

MODERN WORSHIP.

Today in our worship we are torn between two conflicting ideals. On the one side are those who care much for beautiful forms and ceremonies. With them architecture counts for much. The arches, the stained-glass, the organ, the choir, the oratory, the rhetoric, the ritual, the pious behavior, the deep reverence in the house of God—all of these elements are greatly esteemed. On the other hand are those who want spontaneity in the service. Emotion counts for much. Results are sought immediately. Friendliness before, during and after the service is supreme. Too much order is tiresome to such. A certain free and easy manner must be maintained. Architecture is secondary, music must only be enthusiastic, the sermon must be the feature and it must be vigorous and interesting. People fall naturally into one or the other of these two schools. Every church has both. Now, how shall we worship?

DIFFERENT CHURCHES.

Even when Christian union organically arrives differences in people will not be done away. Birds of a feather will still flock together. Each congregation will represent a different curve. One will be decidedly intellectual, another strongly evangelistic, another supremely interested in social service and missions, another aesthetic, another a social club, another a society group. This always has and always will be true. Churches of the same denomination in any given city have such marks. One will have to take his choice and the fact that many people elect to travel across an entire city in order to worship in a certain church indicates the strength of this assertion. But are there some fundamental ideals?

SINCERE WORSHIP.

All acceptable public worship is grounded in private worship. One must meet God in the silence of one's own home and in the great out-of-doors, as well as in the various experiences of daily life, if public worship is to be of much value. This is the first element—reality. There must be a hunger and thirst for the living God. There must be a realization that we are in God's presence confessing our sins, asking for what we need and thanking Him for his goodness. There should be beauty in worship. One would even choose a beautiful place out of doors in which to worship God. The church should be the most beautiful place, according to the best taste, in the community. The worship should be natural, with that quiet dignity that greatness inspires. Even the most humble men will, if given a fair chance, approach God with a fine dignity and reverence. This should never be abandoned. But the worship should never become so exalted and unreal as to make the return to everyday reality seem undesirable. I remember worshiping in one beautiful church where the effect of the aesthetic service was to make me hate the world outside the church. Such worship was harmful. Public worship should be charged with the feeling of friendliness. The sense of fellowship should be strong and uplifting. And from our lesson we may learn that worship should be enthusiastic, full of gladness, full of good cheer and good will. Scripture, hymn, prayer, ordinances, sermon and response should all be hearty, free from dullness. I owe much to a certain English preacher who tried to teach me the value of beauty, dignity and reality in public worship. Think on these things.

Disciples Table Talk

W. S. Lockhart Leads New Church.

W. S. Lockhart discontinued his services as pastor of Central church, Houston, Tex., May 1, and on the same day became pastor of a new congregation in the city called New South End church. A frame building has been erected and dedicated free from encumbrance. The new congregation starts out its career under very favorable auspices.

College President Preaches.

E. M. Todd, president of Christian university of Canton, Mo., is a frequent visitor in Missouri churches. He recently occupied the pulpit of First church, Hannibal, Mo., where Geo. A. Campbell is pastor.

Kansas Churches Help Belgium.

The governor of Kansas requested the churches of his state to take up collections the first Sunday in May for the benefit of the Belgium sufferers. First church, Wellington, Kans., responded to this call with a liberal offering.

An Aid Society that Aids.

The Ladies' Aid society of First church, Long Beach, Cal., is one that regards itself as more than a money raiser. It has a program of service for the local field. The name "Aid Society" hardly expresses the splendid work these women aim to do. They engage in every phase of district Christian service; visiting the sick, relieving the distressed, reclaiming those who have lost heart and interest, saving the lost, canvassing the city by blocks, securing new pupils for the Sunday-school and visiting absentees, building up the mid-week meeting, conducting neighborhood prayer meetings.

Looking Forward to Big Day.

On May 23 the Dowagiac, Mich., church will celebrate the fortieth birthday of the church organization. Besides a great home-coming service in the morning, they hope in the afternoon to be able to report the successful raising of $1,000 to be used in repairing the church building.

Form a Eureka Club at Bloomington.

Some of the Eureka alumni living in Bloomington, Ill., decided recently to hold a reunion of all former students of Eureka college living in their community. They invited President Pritchard to the dinner resulting from this purpose and about seventy people sat down together. A Eureka Club has been formed which will hold regular meetings hereafter.

New Pastorate Prosperous.

Seven more additions are reported at the Oakland, Cal., church under the leadership of Vaughan Dabney. Mr. Dabney had a part on the commencement program of the Divinity school at Berkeley, and on May 4 gave the evening address for the C. W. B. M. session at the district convention held in Sacramento.

Church Attempts Community Service.

The congregation at Moulton, Iowa, has decided to provide the community with a playground. The rear of the church lawn has been turned into a recreation center for the members and friends of the church. This is a long step in the right direction.

Every-Member Canvass at Warren, O.

First church, Warren, Ohio, reports that it has increased its current expense pledge from $2,890.68 to $5,324.76 by the every member canvass.

Editor of State Paper Gets Compliments.

The Christian Banner is the state paper in Michigan. Some subscribers have been writing complimentary words about this newsy sheet, which gracious appreciations are acknowledged in the following terms: "One wrote that he had rather read it than the Standard. Another wrote, 'It's a Craeker Jack.' Now, we believe these were all meant as compliments and we accept them in the same spirit that Sam Jones did the colored woman's compliment. He was preaching to a southern audience and at the close of his discourse a motherly colored woman grasped his hand and said, 'Praise de Lawd, Brodder Jones, yo preach mo like a nigger than any white man I ebber saw. I tell ye, Brodder Jones, yo got a white skin but thank de Lawd yo got a black heart.'"

Yearly Meeting at Eaton, O.

The church at North Eaton, O., held its yearly meeting May 2. I. J. Cahill of Cleveland and E. B. Buffington of Elyria were the speakers. W. A. McCalla, who is leaving for his new work at Rushsylvania has done a good work in this field.

Around the World of Foreign Missions

The Men's Bible class of the Glendale (California) church has decided to support Teranishi, the pastor of the Hongo church, Tokyo. This church is under the supervision of Fred E. Hagin.

Clarence H. Hamilton writes from Nanking as follows: "It is not the least of the wonderful privileges of service here to be in the midst of fine missionary personalities. These rare lives are an endless suggestion to one's own."

Rev. J. Boyd Jones, who will come to Central Church, Terre Haute

There is increased interest in the taking up of Living Link support on the foreign field. Within the last few weeks four churches have made this advance step. They are West Liberty, Iowa, where C. V. Allison ministers; Chillicothe, Missouri, where E. S. Priest is pastor; McKinney, Texas, to which church W. P. Jennings has recently been called, and Sherman, Texas, of which the pastor is G. F Cuthrell.

A fine group of missionaries will sail for Africa in the early summer. W. R. Holder, of Alabama, who is at home on furlough, will take as his wife a splendidly equipped, cultured young Southern woman. W. H. Edwards, who has been taking a two years' course in the College of Missions, will go to the Congo to be one of our steamer men in charge of the "Oregon." He served three years in the Congo Boloso mission before coming to the Foreign Society and is a strong, experienced man. Dr. and Mrs. G. J. P. Barger of Lincoln, Nebraska, who have just finished their course in tropical medicine in Harvard medical school, will sail with the same group. These fine workers will greatly encourage the African missionaries.

A. F. Hensey and wife have just returned home on furlough after more than four years of service at Bolenge, Africa. They are both well and in the best of spirits. They report that our Congo churches have now a combined membership of almost 5,000.

The graduating exercises in the Christian institute in the Philippine Islands were held March 28-29. Four were graduated from the Evangelists' Training School, one from the Training School for Nurses, and one from the Bible College.

The annual India convention was held this year in Jubbulpore. The presence of eight new and returned missionaries was a great joy to those on the field. Five Australian missionaries from the Poona district were present.

In India there have not been as many baptisms this year as last. Nevertheless the year has been a good one. The missionaries are working hard and are in good spirits. The war has disturbed the work somewhat.

Transylvania and College of the Bible Commencement

The one hundred and seventeenth annual commencement of Transylvania university and the forty-ninth annual commencement of the College of the Bible at Lexington, Ky., will be held in Morrison Chapel June 10. The annual commencement of Hamilton college, the Junior College for Women, will be held in the Ben Ali theater on the evening of June 9.

On account of the "home coming" in connection with commencement week and the formal opening of Ewing Hall, more than usual interest is being manifested in the commencement season, and the attendance of alumni and friends will be greatly above normal. Extensive preparations are being made for the reunion, and a large number of alumni and old students are expected. One section of Ewing Hall will be turned over to the visitors.

The commencement sermon will be delivered on Sunday evening, June 6, at the auditorium, J. N. Jessup of Hopkinsville giving the address. Mr. Jessup for a number of years was one of the leading ministers of Little Rock, Ark., where he erected a handsome church building and developed a large and influential congregation. When H. D. Smith was called to a Dallas pulpit last fall, Mr. Jessup was elected to the Hopkinsville pulpit.

The commencement addresses of Transylvania and the College of the Bible and Hamilton college will be given by F. Waller Allen, the minister of the First Christian church, Springfield, Ill. Mr. Allen is a graduate of Transylvania, and he has achieved a wide reputation as an author, lecturer and preacher. He filled fourteen chautauqua engagements in Kentucky last summer and has been invited for return engagements in practically all of these towns and cities.

The program for the week is as follows:

June 6—Sunday, 8 p. m.: Commencement sermon.

Lost Disciples in Chicago.

There is a movement on foot in Chicago which should commend itself to every loyal Disciple throughout the brotherhood. An effort is being made by the aggressive Sunday-school forces of Chicago to find the Disciples who have come to the city and have not identified themselves with the churches here. Hundreds of men and women are lost to the churches of Chicago because the Disciples have not yet learned the art of transferring members from one church to another. Ministers, superintendents, and teachers are requested to fill out the blank printed herewith that the "lost Disciples" may be looked up at once. This is a work of great importance and The Christian Century solicits the earnest co-operation of its readers in behalf of the movement.

Preaches Against Poverty.

Sermons against the saloon are common enough, but Frank Waller Allen believes in assailing poverty as one of the great root evils of life. In his sermon on a recent Sunday evening in First church, Springfield, Ill., he discussed this in no uncertain tone. Mr. Allen said in part: "Will the poor be with us always? An ancient common fallacy is the belief in the necessity and permanency of poverty. Ninety-nine of the unthinking out of a hundred will tell you that 'it is the making of a man': that 'ye have the poor always with you.' They believe poverty to be a virtue. In their philosophy of life poverty plays the role of the maker of strength. They say it makes men reliant, efficient, sweet, sympathetic. Such teaching is the mere sentimentalism of the stupid. In its last analysis, such a belief is atheistic and unhuman. Of this the thoughtless may not be conscious, but it is always pernicious and never remotely makes for good. The curse of the land is poverty. Poverty, genuine, grinding, soul-depraving can produce nothing but viciousness, heartlessness, misery, hell itself. A hell far more terrible than Dante ever dreamed of in his greatest imaginings. Poverty is the most self-enervating sin of society. It is the shame of a so-called Christian era. The ideal of Jesus the Carpenter was not poverty but service. 'Whosoever would become first among you shall be your servant.' The man who preached 'Blessed are the poor,' could not have meant that penury was good fortune when his wondrous fingers were so given to feeding the hungry, and whose advice to the rich young man was so aptly spoken. No, poverty is incompatible with the ideals of the kingdom, and its amelioration and, eventually, its eradication is a part of our task."

FOREIGN MISSION NOTES.

The churches in Victoria, Australia, raised $6,795 for foreign missions, a record amount. The Swanston Street church of Melbourne has raised $600, thus entering the Living Link column. The churches in Australia support P. A. Davey in Japan, Miss Mary Thompson in Harda, India, and Miss Rosa L. Tonkin in Shanghai, China.

Miss Mary Thompson is now visiting the churches in Australia. She has been in India for twenty-four years. Most of her time has been given to work in the zenanas.

The athletic field of the Bible college in Jubbulpore, India, is being leveled off. A good field can be provided on the Silver Oaks compound.

The work of leveling the new playground for the Harda High School is well under way. It will be some little time before the foundations for the new school building can be laid.

The Los Angeles Convention begins on July 18 and closes on the 25th. The Foreign Society occupies Tuesday the 20th.

EASTER OFFERING REACHES $16,000.

The Easter offering of The National Benevolent Association to the end of the 25th day after Easter is $16,067.08. This is $101.65 less than the amount received during the same number of days last year. The needs of the Association are greater than last year since its work is greater and since last year's offerings were not quite equal to the great task performed. The Association needs an Easter offering of at least $40,000 to adequately care for its truly great and growing work. The total Easter offering last year was less than $26,000.

If your school did not take the Easter offering plan now to send a generous offering soon. Send all offerings to

DISCIPLES PUBLICATION SOCIETY, PROPRIETORS, : 700 EAST 40th ST., CHICAGO

Disciples Publication Society

The Disciples Publication Society is an organization through which churches of the Disciples of Christ seek to promote undenominational and constructive Christianity.

The relationship it sustains to the Disciples is intimate and organic, though not official. The Society is not a private institution. It has no capital stock. No individuals profit by its earnings. The churches and Sunday-schools own and directly operate it. It is their contribution to the advocacy and practice of the ideals of Christian unity and religious education.

The charter under which the Society exists determines that whatever profits are earned shall be applied to agencies which foster the cause of religious education, although it is clearly conceived that its main task is not to make profits but to produce literature for building up character and for advancing the cause of religion.

* * *

The Disciples Publication Society regards itself as a thoroughly undenominational institution. It is organized and constituted by individuals and churches who interpret the Disciples' religious reformation as ideally an unsectarian and unecclesiastical fraternity, whose common tie and original impuse are fundamentally the desire to practice Christian unity with all Christians.

The Society therefore claims fellowship with all who belong to the living Church of Christ, and desires to co-operate with the Christian people of all communions as well as with the congregations of Disciples, and to serve all.

* * *

In publishing literature for religious education the Society believes a body of such literature prepared by the co-operative effort of many communions reaches a much higher level of catholicity and truth than can be attained by writers limited by the point of view of a single communion.

* * *

The Sunday-school literature (The Bethany System) published by this house, has been prepared through the Society's association with the writers, editors and official publishing houses of the Methodist, Presbyterian, Congregational and other communions. In its mechanical and artistic quality, its low selling-price, its pedagogical adequacy, and, still more, in its happy solution of doctrinal differences it is a striking illustration of the possibilities of the new day of unity into which the church is now being ushered.

* * *

The Christian Century, the chief publication of the Society, desires nothing so much as to be the worthy organ of the Disciples' movement. It has no ambition at all to be regarded as an organ of the Disciples' denomination. It is a free interpreter of the wider fellowship in religious faith and service which it believes every church of Disciples should embody. It strives to interpret all communions, as well as the Disciples, in such terms and with such sympathetic insight as may reveal to all their essential unity in spite of denominational isolation. Unlike the typical denominational paper, The Christian Century, though published by the Disciples, is not published for the Disciples alone. It is published for the Christian world. It desires definitely to occupy a catholic point of view and it seeks readers in all communions.

Our Success Depends Upon You!

The Christian Century and the Disciples Publication Society belong to the Disciples of Christ, not to private individuals. With the steady enlargement of the volume of its business the Society will ultimately be on a self-supporting basis and its earnings will go to the cause of Christian education and missions. At present it depends for its existence upon gifts offered by friends who believe in the work it is doing and wish to see its ideals prevail among the Disciples and the larger Christian world.

You are one of the friends of this great work.

Our success depends upon you!

The list of our supporters has been steadily growing. A few generous men and women have shown especial devotion by making large gifts. Every layman and minister who cherishes hopes for the success of such an enterprise will wish to make a gift to its support.

In addition to your own gift, you know of others in your congregation who, if the matter were brought forcefully to their attention, will find pleasure in making a gift. We depend upon you to secure their support.

The usefulness of the Christian Century and the Disciples Publication Society can be extended immeasurably by the prompt assistance of our generous friends.

The Disciples and Union Churches

THAT there is an evident movement in the direction of the combination of individual churches, in communities where such unity promotes economy and efficiency, is not to be doubted.

It is not confined to any locality, nor to any particular denomination. It has not grown into being as the result of any special propaganda, but in answer to the needs of various towns and cities.

Naturally it has drawn together churches of like faith and order, for in their case no denominational interests were sacrificed. There are many instances of late of two Presbyterian churches uniting, or two Methodist congregations, or two of some other body.

But more notable have been those unions of churches of different denominational standing, which have marked the growing disregard of church divisions, and emphasized the desire to promote efficiency and stop waste.

In these cases there has been an entire overlooking of boundaries. The churches that have entered into those unions have represented in turn most of the more prominent bodies. Unions of Congregational and Baptist churches or of Presbyterian and Methodist churches have proved that in many instances at least the item of denominational loyalty was deemed of less importance than ability to serve the community as a congregation of Christian people without regard to name or affiliation.

In many cases local congregations of Disciples have united with similar groups of Baptists or Congregationalists to form a new and more useful church. Perhaps the records of these union churches will show a larger constituency of Disciples than of any other body. Our people have from the first been familiar with at least the idea of union, and when brotherhood and local efficiency can be secured in this manner, there seems to be the best of reasons for the experiment.

But these union churches ought not to remain without the advantage and stimulus which is afforded by connection with a strong central organization. It has been thus far the weakness of union churches that they have been separated from the fellowship of a body of churches with which they were previously associated. Some of them relate themselves to one or the other of the denominational groups for the sake of moral support and co-operation. In some instances connection is maintained with both of the bodies from which they have come. But in too many examples that larger connection is lost, and the church loses the sense of momentum which comes of such relations.

The question here raised is this: Have the Disciples reached that stage of awareness and insight at which they are willing to accept and invite the fellowship of such churches as are seeking to work out the program of Christian unity in the local field? Would they allow such churches to find congenial and fruitful service in connection with their co-operative work?

In the case of union churches composed of Disciples and Baptists there would be no difficulty. It is probable that such churches would feel more at home in the atmosphere of the Disciples than of the Baptists, though there is no essential reason for such a condition.

But what is the situation as relates to a union church made up of Disciples and Congregationalists, or Disciples and Methodists? Would such a church be made to feel at home in the broader fellowship of the Disciples? If not, then is there not something lacking in our plan for the promotion of unity? Where ought such churches to go, in their search for a communional home?

Is it reasonable to suppose that the denominationas which have no professed interest in the union of the people of God will offer their hospitality to congregations which have been led by hard experience to try the adventure? On the other hand, ought it not to be the first desire of the Disciples to recognize and welcome the spirit of unity, wherever manifested?

It is not for the purpose of swelling our list of churches that we urge this question upon our readers, but in the interest of that historic task left by the fathers of this movement to be completed in this generation.

As a matter of fact, up to date the Disciples have done little to give hospitality to such isolated bodies of Christians, even when one of the constituent groups was made up of Disciples. The Congregationalists have been far more sensitive to the needs of such churches than have we, and in several instances have gladly enrolled union churches in their fellowship. Perhaps those churches were actually more at home with the Congregationalists than with us. But we believe it ought not so to be.

There is still another situation which confronts us at the present time, particularly in the great cities. There are many of the most promising sections of such places where community churches are desired, and are being organized. The people of admirable residence parts of many of the larger cities have had enough and quite enough of denominational Christianity, with all that it implies of sectarian differences and misunderstanding.

They do not want half a dozen churches competing for the support of a community capable of living happily and efficiently with one. They want a church that shall be open to all the Christians of the neighborhood, and they turn from the invitation of denominational promoters to the idea of a union church. Such is the situation in many localities that we know.

Could the Disciples go into such a community upon the terms of such a union church, and offer their support and co-operation in such an organization? If they cannot, then are they quite right in their plan of unity?

Let it be understood that we are not here discussing the program of the ordinary church. We are facing the problem presented by the union church in its need of affiliation with a Christian body that can supply it with the moral support and the co-operative opportunity it needs.

We believe these are questions which all Disciples sensitive to the ideals and possibilities of Christian unity are compelled to face and answer in some effective manner. H. L. W.

Religion and Daily Life

BY WILFRED T. GRENFELL.

From "The Congregationalist."

THE FEAR that Christ's way of life involves communism and socialism on the absolutely equal division of property basis led largely to the boxing off of religion from every-day life, and a sort of tacit acknowledgement has arisen that it is too radical a thing to mix with ordinary business. The process has made it such an enfeebled and unattractive plant that many persons now think it an exotic which needs a glass cover and a cubby-hole all to itself, otherwise it would perish. The Oriental hyperbole was perfectly understood in Christ's day. To believe that he insisted on men hating their parents and their own lives is a direct contradiction of his own statements that he came not to abolish but to fulfill that law; which includes only one with a special promise attached to it; viz., that we must honor our parents.

It would be positively suicidal for a physician in the Arctic not to have two coats, even though I have seen children and even adults without what one could properly call one. Christ obviously leaves us freedom to use common sense, natural sense, sense the direct gift of the Creator of the brain, in dealing with property and business. We know of only one rich man whom he told to give away what was ruining his character.

RAISING THE MORAL LEVEL.

The wisest teachers of this age are one with the Master in agreeing that no way is too expensive to attain that supreme prize of life, character. Thus some consider that the man who corners foodstuff, cuts down his workmen to the last penny, squeezes the fisherman to the lowest price, obtains special protection for his wares at the consumer's expense, can yet be a Christian if he believes in the miraculous birth of Christ, his resurrection, etc., and sings hymns and prays prayers. We simply cannot conceive God as valuing clothes and attitudes and ceremonies as he does life. We must remember that unless our following of "the way" leads us to raise our entire standing of business morality, to a common-sense Judge we are not so good as other heathen who more nearly live up to their high moral code. We expect to answer before a tribunal characterized by sanity and righteousness, before a Judge whom Scripture suggests is also gifted with a sense of humor.

Why should not every judge, as one has shown us a judge can do, make it the aim and object of his professional work to cure the criminal? Why should it not be the absorbing interest of every medical man to eliminate himself by adding to his labors "social work" which should tend more and more to eradicate disease? Why should not manufacturers, as some do, make it their chief aim to dignify and reward their labors; why should not retailers seek to do for their customers as they would be done by? Why should not the clergy seek only for the advance of God's kingdom, and not for that of the little church which they call theirs? Judge Lindsey, Parson Worcester, Dr. Cabot, the National Cash Register Co., Lever Brothers are notable examples of what such a spirit can do to help on righteousness, joy and peace.

Educators are certainly trying more today to teach their pupils to select and prepare for lives where they can contribute most to the common good. Property owners today see that it pays, even in a mundane sense, to study their tenants' interests. Statesmen are more and more exhibiting the same spirit, and the voters are ever increasingly demanding it. Christ would have a far better chance of occupying the White House today than ever he had for Herod's throne. The fact is, we know that Christ's way is the way for business, for we have learned that lasting joy and worth-while success are only to be measured by what we give, and not what we get. Only the shallow can afford to laugh at Christ's teaching that it is more blessed to give than to receive. Only those who for some reason are behind the times in knowledge can afford to laugh at the old alchemist who said that precious stones can be made out of dirt and gold out of apparently ignoble elements.

AN AVOIDED SUBJECT.

To many, much modern business does seem inconsistent with Christ's way of life; one could not fancy him gambling in stocks and squeezing unearned increment out of land grabbing. I remarked to one friend last year who was pointing out to me a section of land out of which he had just made a big "scoop," "It seems hard on the newcomers." He looked puzzled, and then said: "That's business. You can't expect to mix religion and business"—as if they were oil and water.

The divorce of our religion from our life has become so accepted that we hardly notice it. For the ordinary business man or college student to talk about his relation to things eternal under every-day circumstances is entirely abnormal, however convinced we may be that we are Christians. It has almost become immoral. We speak of it with bated breaths as of something outside our lives, instead of it being the very breath of our life. Others again consider it so intimate to their personality that they do not wish to have to defend it, thinking partly that it must be intuitive and carries no credentials to convince the ordinary mind, and partly deterred by the exhibitions of that cheap emotionalism which so readily lends itself to parody; and anyway they do not wish to talk about it as being too sacred for every-day life.

RELIGION DIVORCED FROM LIFE.

This divorce is not recent; it dates back to childhood and training. Thus it is probably right to say grace before meals, but people would look askance if you began to speak naturally about Jesus Christ as if he were sitting at the table. Dinner, of course, is a vital part of your daily life. Yet the fact that the religion of the churches seems to be divorced from every-day life is certainly due to the fact that there is any diminution of interest in or reverence for the person of Christ.

The best revival we ever saw here was when the tail end of a cyclone actually took a building, which the folk had mistaken for God's church, and whisked it, seats, floor and all, right into the middle of the harbor. All hands found refreshing supplies of God's grace in the free labor cheerfully given and laboriously served for no cash return, and in the new house of their public worship, because of the personal labor every board and timber represented to them. Poor people who build their own little homes love them out of all proportion to the occupiers of even model tenements or modern palaces. Enduring love is the true test of real value. Even medicine and cold still find love and gratitude when they are understood.

THE CURE FOR LUKEWARMNESS.

If you want to save a man from temptation, self and despair, find him some work to do. To show the world that Christ needs a "Labor Party," and then to show the members how to work, and act as whip for the party, is the role which the church must play if it is not to atrophy out of existence. Lukewarmness is becoming more and more incompatible with manhood's digestion, and the church which does not lay supreme emphasis on work must inevitably, in the expressive language of Scripture, be "vomited out of the mouth."

Two years ago I was discussing with a young university graduate of considerable wealth and no ties this very question—where he could best put in his life. His gifts were great, but especially strong along a certain line. We longed for his help here, but we decided that he had a larger field for his talents in big cities.

SUPPLY AND DEMAND.

That there is need for all any man has to give is a corollary also of the axiom that life is given us for a purpose, and this surely is high enough to appeal to anyone. Still in the world there is merciless competition. Still men, anxious to work, starve for the need of it, while endless work goes undone. God knows there exists a need for really up-to-date doctors and lawyers with Christ's spirit, to heal and advise and save, if they will only go where there is need and not necessarily a cash return. The giving and not the getting decides the location; though I do not mean that any place where a man's lot is thrown is not needy enough, if he will only find out that need and try to meet it. There are festering, overcrowded slums, and lands are lying idle while the world is in need of their possible products. The fear of the wolf of hunger still overshadows the old age of countless of our fellowmen and eventually drags them down to a miserable death. Vampires living on vice and frauds living on ignorance still find plentiful victims who might be saved.

DECISION TO BE A WORKER.

A man need not recognize a label, but that he should recognize and avow his own definite decision to be a worker is essential for his development and for his full usefulness to others who are following the same "way." Among the many university students who each year come to help out here I have never yet found one whom the whole lot will characterize as worth while who has not been not only willing literally to go into the drain to dig, but spoiling for it or any useful work. No man who appeals to manhood has false shame about avowing such a purpose. The term "Christian" was never intended to be a final judgment on a closed career—only to characterize the follower of the way of life of the Nazarene carpenter. It has only again to become synonymous with unselfish aims and solid work, and no longer be a term for intellectual orthodoxy, and it will attract a hundred where it now attracts one.

What Will Happen to China?

Present Relations and Probable Future Complications of Militant Japan and the Peace-Loving Land of Confucius.

BY WILLIAM J. CALHOUN.

THE COMPLICATIONS between Japan and China have two phases; one relates to Manchuria and the other to China proper.

Manchuria may be said to be a dependency of China; at least, historically, it is not a constituent part of China proper. It was the home of the Manchus. It lies north of the great wall. When the Manchus conquered China and established the Manchu dynasty they brought Manchuria with them to China.

Years ago the Russians obtained a cession from the Chinese for the extension of their Siberian railway through Manchuria to Vladivostok, with a branch running south from Harbin to Port Arthur, on the China Sea. This lease ran for some years. The Russians also acquired certain terminal and territorial rights at Port Arthur.

As the result of the Russia-Japanese war, the Russians ceded to the Japanese all rights at Port Arthur and that part of the branch railway extending from Port Arthur to a point a few miles south of Harbin. With the railway goes a wide range of territory on each side of the line, over which the railway has administrative jurisdiction.

As I remember the lease, its term expires in some twelve years from this time, when the Chinese will have the right to take over the railway and terminal rights upon the payment of a certain measure of compensation, etc.

MANCHURIA LOST TO CHINA.

The present negotiations between the Chinese and the Japanese involve a renewal or extension of these leases.

I do not regard this phase of the situation as the most serious. For a long time foreigners who are at all informed as to conditions in Manchuria have regarded that vast territory as practically lost to the Chinese. The Russians will in all probability take the north half and the Japanese the south half.

The other phase to the situation is represented by the demands made by Japan upon the Chinese in reference to China proper, and this is the serious phase. There is some uncertainty as to what the demands of Japan really are. Certain schedules have been published, but the statement also is made that there are some demands which have not been given to the public.

From what little I know about these demands—and I do not assume to be well informed in reference thereto—Japan is insisting upon certain administrative and commercial preferences which amount to an intrusion upon Chinese sovereignty; such as a preferential right to name advisers in different department of the government, furnish drill masters for the army and to have leadership in the construction of railways, etc.

The effect of which will be to give the Japanese a predominating influence in the internal affairs of China to the subordination of the Chinese in the affairs of their own government and to the exclusion of other foreigners.

WHAT IS JAPAN'S PURPOSE?

We can only conjecture as to the ultimate purpose of Japan. Several primary facts should be taken into consideration. Japan is only a comparatively small group of islands lying off the Chinese coast. The Japanese are a very active and aggressive people; they have shown themselves to be warlike and ambitious for "a place in the sun," and they have shown wonderful adaptation to foreign ideas and methods.

The European war was for a time wiped off the front page of the newspapers by recent entanglements in the Orient. The following statement of the situation, written for the Chicago Herald by Mr. Calhoun, who was formerly United States minister to China, will be of interest to Christian Century readers.

The Chinese, in many respects, are the reverse of the Japanese. The former are slow, conservative and peaceable; they have been trained through the centuries of the past to prefer peace to war; they are not aggressive or warlike. I do not mean that they will not fight. On the contrary, if they are properly organized, disciplined, equipped and led they will fight as well as any people.

Japan, however, is confronted with a very serious internal problem. Like some other nations, she has a surplus of population for which she has to provide.

JAPAN HEAVILY IN DEBT.

In addition, in the development of her industrial, commercial and political life along modern lines she has incurred a great national debt, which bears heavily upon her people. Her only hope for the payment of this debt is by the development of her manufactures, the expansion of her commerce and the extension of her political influence.

She undoubtedly aspires to emulate England, her ally; to be the mistress of the Pacific and the great political and commercial power in the far East.

China is a great country close at hand. Although one of the oldest of nations, hers is comparatively a new country. She is supposed to have almost boundless undeveloped natural resources.

Japan aspires to be a producer of iron and machinery; to produce cotton goods on a large scale; in fact, she is reaching out for all lines of industrial production. But she is short of raw material; she has no iron ore; no coking coal; no raw cotton, and has to import all or the greater part of these essentials. China has all of them in great abundance. In addition, the development of China along modern lines offers possibilities for a great market for almost unmeasured power of consumption.

The European powers have recognized and appreciated these possibilities. They have been actively intrenching their trade interests in China by loaning money, building railroads, securing advisers in different departments of the government, etc.

"SPHERES OF INFLUENCE."

These activities have excited international jealousies and conflicts; the country has been divided into "spheres of influence," in which respective nationalities claim preferential rights.

Now Japan has watched all this with a suspicious and jealous eye. This virgin market is close to her; she has a racial, religious and historical affinity with the Chinese people. Both belong to the great "yellow race," which the white race looks down upon and discriminates against. Why should the yellow race not discriminate against the white race?

Furthermore, the question of "advisers" has great political significance. Japan doubtless knows that many, perhaps most of the foreign representations in China, have little faith in the ability of the Chinese to establish and maintain an effective republic.

China is borrowing, and will borrow, vast sums of money. The story of Egypt and Persia may be repeated. Foreign intervention to collect debts is more than a possibility. The foreign advisers placed here and there throughout the country will form a skeleton foreign organization, ready and at hand to take over control of the country. It may be that Japan wants to forestall that possibility.

THE PRESENT IS JAPAN'S CHANCE.

The great powers of Europe are now busy elsewhere. This is the opportunity for Japan to intrench herself in China, to control her destiny, to obtain for Japan the elements of national and industrial strength, to be to China what England is, and has been, to India and Egypt, and to establish an Asiatic Monroe doctrine.

And poor China is helpless and almost defenceless. She has no friends to whom she can appeal for help. She has no armies, no navies, no munitions of war, no military leadership.

She may resist, she may fight, but it will be a fight of despair.

WHY GO TO CHURCH?

By J. H. Yates.

It is a sure sign of the loss of religious vitality when people ask the question, "Why go to church?" To the early Christians such a question as this would have been incomprehensible. The first Christians were drawn to church by a common love and a common purpose. They all loved the one Christ. They had a brotherly and sisterly interest in one another, which made it a pleasure to come together in the "breaking of bread," and the singing of hymns. And they had one common subject: the spread of the kingdom. When all these things are lacking—when there is no real love for the Master, when pride, or snobbishness or selfishness make brotherly love impossible, and when there is no interest in the spread of the kingdom, either at home or abroad—then it may well be asked: "Why go to church?"

There is many a half-formed man who has no fixed habits of life, and in whom sometimes one part of his nature gets momentum and comes into the ascendency, and sometimes the other part. Sometimes those faculties which are seeking to do good govern, and sometimes those that are seeking to do evil govern. And to a greater or less extent there is a state of conflict between the upper and the lower nature, between the manhood and the animal, in every one of us. Then comes that state in which, by the power of God's Spirit, and by the discipline of life, complete ascendency is gained by our supersensuous nature. And all the other parts of our being are brought into obedience, as it is said, to the Lord Jesus Christ. Or, if you choose to follow out the psychological figure, the superior faculties in our souls assume control. And then there is peace. Then there is rest. —Henry Ward Beecher.

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY

EDITORIAL

CONSIDERING THE SOURCE.

THE average mind attempting to grapple with such a problem as that raised by the sinking of the Lusitania, speedily founders in the tossing sea of contradiction.

One must go back to the proximate origins of this present war, and must consider the political philosophies held by the parties to it. Otherwise it is impossible to fix the responsibility for the awful excesses which have been committed. To the proximate origins, I say, because no man is able to weigh the more remote factors which run far back into history, with sufficient precision to make a moral judgment based thereon of much value.

It is a fact that in Germany there has grown up a theory that the state is bound by the ethical principles that apply to individuals in their relations with each other. A state ought to do whatever it can for its own power and glory without regard for the accepted rules of morality. Human life possesses no sacredness provided its use, or even its sacrifice, is needed for the interests of the state. The growth of a state is limited only by its power to subordinate and dominate everything in its own interest. Hence the best state is simply the mightiest state.

The violation of a treaty is fully justified by "military necessity." War is desirable as a means of realizing national aspirations. Nay, it is right.

In the present instance it was Germany that chose war when she could have averted it. Had she not believed in war she would not have so thoroughly prepared for it. Had she not desired war now she would not have chosen it. It was in her power to restrain Austria from invading Servia.

Having chosen war Germany has gone forward in the systematic application of her political philosophy.

English political philosophy has not gone mad as has that of Germany. She has a philosophy substantially different. England represents essential democracy. Germany is essential autocracy, for the state which she makes everything is always concentrated in the ruler, or the ruling caste.

Germany is to be held primarily accountable for sinking the Lusitania because it is a part of her whole principle and program. Any blame which may attach to England and to the United States is secondary, and their sin is venial. That of Germany is mortal.

A STIMULATING COMPARISON.

SOME account was given two weeks ago of the convention that was held in this city by the leaders of the Methodist Episcopal Church in the interest of their Conference Claimants. The chance which is offered in this issue for immediate response to an emergency call in the same behalf by our Board of Ministerial Relief moves us to make some comparisons that ought to prove stimulating.

Within the last two or three years we have more than doubled our payments on the debt of honor and gratitude which we owe our aged and disabled ministers and missionaries and the widows and orphans of those deceased, but even so, we gave only $40,000 last year, including bequests and annuities and the $6,000 annual check of one man.

In actual pensions we paid $20,000.

The Methodists paid their heroes of the retired list $1,100,000, and are so ashamed of its meagreness that they are bending every energy in a great campaign to bring it up to $1,600,000 per year! In addition to large and small personal gifts they have made this a part of the Current Expense Budget of every congregation.

With less than three times as many members as we, they are doing fifty-five times as much in this vital work!

The Presbyterians are most nearly our equal in membership. They gave their veterans over a third of a million dollars last year, have three and a third millions in their Permanent Fund, two-thirds of a million pledged to it, and are pressing steadily onward to make it ten millions.

They are not satisfied with doing sixteen times as well as we!

Of course our duty is not determined by our neighbors' example, but their unanimity and energy in such manifestly universal duty as this ought to move us to at least a thorough self-examination. And this we believe will lead to filling out and mailing the "Ballot" which we print elsewhere.

STEALING JOHN HUSS.

PROTESTANTS the world over on July 6 of this year will celebrate the five-hundredth anniversary of the burning of John Huss at Constance. This mighty man of God was one of the pioneers and forerunners in the great movement which reached its consummation in the Reformation.

Huss fought his battle against ecclesiastical corruption and tyranny. He believed that the Bible and conscience are higher authority than the findings of any Council or the deliverance of any Pope. He fought for Christianity in its elemental purity, and against the superstitions and corruptions which had grown up around the historic Church.

For this reason he is honored by the Protestant world, and is regarded along with Wyclif as another morning star of the Reformation.

With astounding audacity the Bohemian Free Thinking Societies have rented the great Auditorium Theatre in Chicago with the intention of holding a John Huss Semi-millennial Anniversary of their own. Because he was brave enough to defy the Pope and suffer martyrdom for his conscientious convictions they propose to class him with those religious anarchists who repudiate Christianity entirely.

They propose to make capital out of his heroic Protestantism in the interest of Free Thinking infidelity.

The Protestant churches of the entire world should seize upon this semi-millennial anniversary to honor the man who gave his life for his belief in God and Christ and the Bible, going to the stake with a song upon his lips, glad to have his ashes thrown into the Rhine, if, like them, the truth for which he stood might flow down the river of life to the ocean of time there to spread to every land and nation.

LEARNING BY EXPERIENCE.

WE MUST make the experience of yesterday grind the grist of today. The poet was mistaken who said "the mill will never grind with the water that is past."

The man who by experience learns how not to do it, has learned also, in part at least, how to do it. The man who does not make the same mistake twice is not likely to belong to the class of those who will "try anything ONCE." He has gained by experience a caution, an insight, an ability not to be a fool, which are the positive precipitates of failure.

The world is full of men who would never have succeeded so gloriously had they not failed so horribly. Some men who have success in them will never get it out, because they have not the gift of failing, and knowing what and why their failure is.

Be not thou of their company!

One does not transform a failure into a success by proceeding further therein, but by the reaction therefrom, bringing wisdom and resolve for new effort in a direction at a different angle.

TEMPTATION.

LEAD US not into temptation." Yea, Lord, but if temptation seek us out? Shall we flee it, or shall we conquer it?

"Deliver us from the evil one." But how, Lord, shall we be delivered? Wilt Thou snatch us away from the battle and ensphere us in some realm of peace far from the "tumult and shouting?"

Nay, my disciple, I do not sound a retreat for my soldiery; the bugles of the spirit host are ever blowing a charge. Resist the devil and he will flee from you. Flee from him, and he will pursue you. In the world ye shall have tribulation; in me ye shall have peace. The law of the spirit of life has made you superior to the law of sin and death. I deliver you from temptation by reinforcing your inner life. I vitalize you for spiritual conquest. I free you within, and expect you to conquer all that is without. Stand fast in the liberty wherewith I make you free, and none can bring you into bondage.

SAMPLES AND EXAMPLES.

WE HAVE heard people say, "My minister," as if they owned him. They often use this expression when they are objecting to something their minister has done or said. Generally the assumption is that what is being objected to is something they would blame no one else for doing or saying. The minister is held to a standard which is sometimes, ridiculous artificial and insincere. It implies that he not only is supposed to do their thinking and praying for them, but also their living. He is not so much an example as a sample; and unlike the samples which we are told are given salesmen in better quality than the manufacturer has any intention of delivering, the sample the minister is expected to be is of a kind no one either expects or wants. Ministers who turn out such products are avoided by their fellow-men, and their teaching is as little valued in the community as the paper of a man with no credit. It it true, like men in any important position, the minister must pay heed to the proprieties of his position, but to get petrified with such proprieties is a sad fate. Vitality is the best propriety. The ministry needs manliness a good deal more than it needs ministerialness.—THE CHRISTIAN REGISTER.

THE RULES OF WAR.

THERE was a time in the history of humanity when certain tribes indulged in war practices which have since been discarded as unworthy of human nature. Cannibalism is confined to remote tribes of the less advanced islands and continents. The spreading of disease as a means of destroying enemies has long been considered unworthy by all civilized nations. Outside of certain Pacific islands, only in Armenia do war-loving tribes deliberately attempt the total extermination of their more peaceable neighbors. The civilized nations in times of peace have reached certain understandings of what is befitting in the waging of war.

These are facts which must be admitted by any student of human affairs. Yet the South African leaders who are fighting in the German province of Southwest Africa, assert, over their own names, that the Germans in that remote and nearly rainless colony have entered upon a deliberate policy of poisoning the wells and infecting certain mines with germs of malignant disease. We can only hope that they are mistaken. But they present documentary evidence in captured orders to German officers which seem to vouch for the truth of this policy by their enemies.

There is a dispute as to the first use of asphyxiating gases in an attack upon an enemy's trenches. There is, however, no doubt that the Germans in Flanders are counting upon such a use of gases that are deadly as their main hope of advance against the enemy's positions. There may be no logical difference between tearing a man's body to pieces with the fragments of a flying shell and choking him to death with deadly gas. There is, however, an essential difference in the relation of the two processes of assassination to the generally understood and adopted usages of the civilized tribes of men. The poisoning of wells and the use of choking gases are reversals to the savage period of mankind. They can be justified only on the ground that the cause in which they are used is so unmistakably that of justice and of the future of humanity that it is admissible to adopt any means which will help.

That argument, however, proves too much. It would also justify the deliberate sowing of yellow fever or bubonic plague in the towns of the enemy, or the deliberate killing, by means of hired assassins, of the leaders of the other side. That was King Philip's way with William the Silent, but for the civilized world it is a way outgrown.—THE CONGREGATIONALIST.

BRYAN DOES UP TWO BLUFFERS.

SECRETARY of State Bryan did two things in one day just a little while ago. The first was his merciless "shooting up" of Admiral Peary, who publicly predicted that in a hundred years the United States must either occupy the whole of North America or else "be obliterated as a nation." This is nothing but an American version of that "world power or downfall" insanity which has dragged Germany to the brink of ruin, and Mr. Bryan used the tongue of stern common sense when he bitingly observed that such talk from a man of Admiral Peary's standing was "little less than a crime." It is evident that neither wisdom, discretion nor generosity are indispensable qualities for the feat of discovering the north pole.

The other good use which Secretary Bryan made of his pungent gifts of language on that same day was a letter addressed to Father Kelley of Chicago, president of the Catholic Church Extension Society, who has been leader of the Catholic demand for "religious toleration" in Mexico. Mr. Bryan very properly assured Father Kelley that the administration at Washington was doing and would do all possible to induce the Mexican revolutionists to treat humanely Catholic priests and nuns. Then he went on to say (hewing to the line and letting the chips fall where they might) that Mexico in order to achieve a proper stability of civilization, must be given "just land tenure, free schools and true freedom of conscience and worship."

That was more than the "reverend father" bargained for. He had not emphasized his idea of religious toleration with any such adjective as "true." And free schools he hadn't mentioned at all. He cannot have failed to catch the accent Mr. Bryan intended by introducing these allusions—the pungent reminder, in the first place that Catholics never bothered their heads about Mexico, until they got to the short end of the rope, where it was they who needed the privilege and not Protestants. And the priest must realize, too, that Mr. Bryan, delicately but with sufficient point, has recalled to him that Mexico's disastrous lack of schools up to this time is Catholicism's fault and failure.

The secretary is to be congratulated on the good nerve to put all this up to his priestly correspondent so unmistakably, and also on the polished adroitness which enabled him to express it all in a fashion to which the priest cannot take exception without exposing himself to public ridicule.—THE CONTINENT.

The Light Lies on the Farther Hills.

THE clouds upon the mountains rest;
A gloom is on the autumn day;
But down the valley, in the west,
The hidden sunlight breaks its way—
A light lies on the farther hills.

Forget thy sorrow, heart of mine;
Though shadows fall and fades the leaf,
Somewhere is joy, though 'tis not thine;
The power that sent can heal thy grief;
And light lies one the farther hills.

Thou wouldst not with the world be one
If ne'er thou knowest hurt and wrong;
Take comfort, though the darkened sun
Never again bring gleam or song—
The light lies on the farther hills.

Congregational National Body.

The National Council of the Congregationalist churches meets this autumn at New Haven, Conn. Among the questions that seem likely to come before the body are a proposition to create a board of religious education to in some way direct the work of day school religious education that has been left out of the scheme of public school instruction, and the question of the future status of the "Pilgrim Press." Some are urging that this publishing house of the denomination be reorganized on some such lines as those of the Methodist Book Concern.

Fear Revival of Old-time Religion.

A writer in a recent issue of the Congregationalist expresses the fear that the revival of religion following the great war will be a revival of old and discarded forms of religion, "a revival of the Old Testament religion, instead of the religion of the New Testament." He expresses the fear of a revival of obscurantism, which will undertake to ignore the well-established results of modern study of religion, such as the higher criticism and the application of the evolutionary hypothesis to religion.

Presbyterians Grow in New York.

Dr. Forbes, stated clerk of New York Presbytery, has announced that during the last year 2,176 members were received on profession of faith in the sixty-one churches of the presbytery, and 1,402 by letter. This is a gain of 1,441 over last year, and marks the largest membership ever reported. The total net membership is 34,895. The churches showing the largest gains are the American International, French Evangelical, Madison Avenue, East Harlem, West End, Fort Washington, Christ and Fifth Avenue. Congregational expenses were $648,414, which, together with $926,389 for benevelent purposes, makes a total of $1,574,802 for the year. This sum does not include $248,339 spent by the church erection committee of presbytery, nor does it include $25,000 contributed specially for Labor Temple. In congregational expenses Fifth Avenue church takes the lead, spending nearly $60,000. For benevolences the same church gave $417,211. Sunday school enrollment has increased, there now being 24,044 on the roll, as against 21,965 last year.

New York Prepares for Revival.

Since "Billy" Sunday has refused to go to New York, the ministers of that city have been meeting to prepare for a revival without reference to whether the well-known evangelist ever visits them or not. About seventy were present at the first meeting, and the number attending and the spirit manifested have steadily increased with each successive meeting until at the meeting on April 12 in the Madison Avenue Baptist church, where the meetings are now being held, 250 were present. A rising spirit of enthusiasm has been shown. The committee in charge consists of Dr. Welch, Dr. Henry A. Stimson of the Manhattan Congregational church, Dr. W. H. Morgan of Calvary Methodist Episcopal, Rev. James M. Philputt, Central Church of the Disciples, Dr. Charles A. Eaton, Madison Avenue Baptist, and Dr. David J. Burrell of the Marble Collegiate Reformed church. They have not thought it wise to launch out upon any great spectacular campaign until they can get practically all of the ministers interested; so the meetings have thus far been chiefly for meditation and prayer, with a few short inspirational addresses. It is hoped that out of these meetings a plan will evolve which will demonstrate the way that ought to be taken to evangelize the city.

Dr. Conwell Gives "Acres of Diamonds."

Dr. Conwell recently gave his celebrated lecture, "Acres of Diamonds," in Toledo. It was announced that this was the 5,117th delivery of this famous lecture. It continues to be in demand though it has been printed and circulated widely. When the lecture was delivered the five thousandth time, Philadelphia celebrated the event by giving Dr. Conwell a solid gold key to the city worth six hundred dollars. He used it for a paper weight awhile until he learned its true value.

The Churches Working for Peace.

Dr. David Starr Jordan, the prophet of the peace movement in America, has issued a statement showing how the churches can work efficiently for peace in America. "This the church can do," Dr. Jordan says, "it can educate, it can elevate; it can lend its organization, its prestige, its influence to every movement that promises to give the people of Europe better control over their own affairs, that tends to reduce international jealousy and hate, that makes war-making a more difficult task, that looks forward to lasting peace."

Catholics and Protestants Invited to Confer.

Rev. F. L. Lynch, known for his connection with the peace movement in America, has recently proposed in the "Christian Work," of which he is the editor, that there be a conference between twenty Protestant leaders and twenty Catholic leaders, both ministers and laymen, to discuss the differences between these two bodies. An anti-Catholic movement of considerable proportions is extending through the country, and the Knights of Columbus have raised a large "defence fund" to be used in meeting this movement. Mr. Lynch feels that much might be gained from such a conference. The proposal has been met with criticism from a considerable part of the Protestant press and has been ignored by the Catholics. It has been regarded as strange by many that any Protestant with his views of religion would refuse to meet any one for conference.

Birthday of the Epworth League.

The Epworth League movement is twenty-six years old. The birthday was celebrated in Methodist circles early in May. There are now 800,000 members of the Epworth League and the official paper, the Epworth Herald, has a circulation of 100,000. The Christian Endeavor Society has four million members. Many Methodists still belong to this older movement for young people.

Religious Journalism is Discussed.

A number of preachers and laymen in New York met recently to discuss religious journalism. One of the criticisms was that the religious journals "lacked teeth," that they do not have a well-defined policy and show courage in the defence of this policy. The leaders in this conference agreed that the religious journal of the future would have to emphasize the relation between the church and the growing life of the nation. The criticism was also passed that the religious journal in many cases is losing its religious quality. One of the men present said: "It would be impossible to realize in the slightest degree the momentousness of certain great movements and tendencies in American Christianity if one had to depend on certain of the religious journals."

Dr. Sheldon Called Back to Topeka.

Dr. Charles M. Sheldon has been traveling over the country with the Flying Squadron, a temperance organization, since his resignation from Central Congregational church of Topeka, Kans. Dr. Roy Guild was called as pastor of that church, but has resigned; the church has now issued a call to Dr. Sheldon to return. Dr. Sheldon is accepting the work only on the condition that he shall have an abundance of time for his larger ministry to the nation. He will preach eight months each year at the morning services, his assistant taking charge on Sunday evenings, leading also in the services of the summer, as well as taking care of the pastoral work. The new arrangement will begin next fall.

United Brethren are Prospering.

It is a matter of congratulation that the United Brethren church is growing in a commendable way. The number of accessions promises to be greater than in any previous year. Improved methods of conservation will look well on the records at the conferences next fall. From every quarter have come reports of great revivals and great ingatherings. The financial year has been good. This does not mean that all the money has been received which was needed. Treasurer L. O. Miller handled over a half million dollars from April 1, 1914, to April 1, 1915. The home mission debt is being reduced, the foreign mission debt is lower than last year, the Church Erection Society is seeing brighter days. Seminary prospects appear better, and the benevolent homes have just reason for gratitude.

"King's Pledge Sunday."

April 18 was observed throughout England as "King's Pledge Sunday." The King had announced some time ago that he would be a total abstainer until the close of the war, since the great Chancellor of the Exchequer, Lloyd George, had announced that liquor was decreasing the output of the workmen in the factories making war goods and delaying the progress of the war. Ten thousand churches in England called on their members to take the pledge the King had taken. At a large meeting in central London two thousand people responded favorably to the appeal. The example of the King and of Lord Kitchener has been having its effect upon many others in the realm. It is said that in a recent two-day period the sales of liquor to members of the House of Commons amounted to less than one dollar.

Church Union Probable.

The project of uniting the Methodist Protestant and United Brethren denominations has been revived and there seems much probability that the union will be consummated within the next year. At a recent conference of the two denominations at Indianapolis, it was recognized that the Methodist Protestants had completed every formal step toward union and now the matter is before the United Brethren. The leaders of both denominations will conduct a publicity campaign to prepare the way for union, not by advocating union formally and arguing for it, but by showing the ideals and character of the sister body.

Home Missions Agitate Presbyterians.

The Board of Home Missions of the northern Presbyterians has dismissed Rev. J. Ernest McAfee, who was secretary. The issue was concerning the policy of the board as regards social service and the planting of Presbyterian churches in over-churched communities. The critics of Mr. McAfee believed that every community should have a Presbyterian church. He believed that some communities had too many churches already and that the kingdom would be served best by the elimination of some of these churches. The Continent, the leading Presbyterian weekly, has taken up the cudgel in behalf of the ousted secretary and speaks thus with regard to the situation: "There, then, is the question: Shall or shall not the Board of Home Missions ever inquire if there are better ways to help on Christianity than extending the Presbyterian denominational name? Which road does the church wish to travel from these forks? Let it not be understood, however, that the Home Board itself approves the policy of a narrow denominationalism. The board itself approves no policy whatever except the policy of quieting all complaints by doing what every complainer demands. A few people were shouting that McAfee must go, and so the board turned him out in order to stop the noise. Because the noise was big, the board imagined that shouters were many. That anybody would make new trouble because he was turned out, never occurred to the board's honorable and sapient members. They have gone on the principle that only reactionaries are kickers; that Presbyterians of a liberal and progressive disposition will stand for anything. An interesting side-phase of the question is whether they are right about that."

Presbyterians Will Have Deaconesses.

An overture to provide the Presbyterian churches with deaconesses has been passed by an overwhelming majority of the presbyteries voting. The new law will not only provide that women sit in church sessions of congregations, but will also care for the appointment of women, wearing "distinctive garb," to serve as pastoral helpers in the work of the congregations much in the same way as do the Methodist deaconesses. Twenty years ago a similar proposal was put before the church and was defeated by a very large majority. It is well remarked that the status of woman in the churches of America has changed greatly in this period.

Methodists Succeed in Bulgaria.

Bishop J. L. Nuelsen, of the Methodist Episcopal church, writing to the Board of Foreign Missions under date of April 15, gives this extract from a letter of Rev. Paul L. Mishkoff, Methodist pastor at Varna, Bulgaria: "A most gratifying revival is in progress here. Many have been converted and seventy-four have already been received into our church. The whole city is greatly stirred. Priests publicly denounce me in their churches and join with the saloon keepers in open persecution. All this, however, only increases the interest shown in our revival meetings. The building is not large enough to accommodate the crowds that want to come."

United Presbyterians Vote on Union.

An overture for union with the regular Presbyterians has been voted on by sessions and presbyteries of the United Presbyterian church this spring. The returns show the vote pretty evenly divided, but with a majority against such union. This would indicate that the sentiment for union is strong but not strong enough to result in action in the immediate future.

Colleges Fight Militarism.

The Collegiate Anti-Militarism League, which was formed recently among the students at Columbia, Harvard, Yale and Princeton and other colleges to combat the activities of such organizations as the American Legion and the National Security League, is undertaking an investigation to discover the exact strength of the militaristic spirit among college men.

Two hundred letters are being sent to the editors of college dailies, to find their attitude towards summer training camps, military drills and lectures on military tactics. The letters say in part: "An agitation for military service has been started by the National Security League. It is our belief that such a movement is unnecessary and to the highest degree vicious. Its advocates may declare they are opposed to militarism yet they are really fostering its spread. The proposal strikes all college men very close to home. We desire to get your opinion on this subject as we wish to publish a symposium of student opinion on military camps, drills and lectures."

Eight hundred letters are being sent to instructors and professors in colleges and universities to gauge their personal inclinations as to increased armaments and a larger army, recruited among college students. Blanks are also being sent to four hundred colleges, including every state in the Union, for the purpose of obtaining an actual poll of the students themselves. Each institution is provided with a list of questions to be submitted to individuals.

The Collegiate Anti-Militarism League professes a belief that the trend of undergraduate thought is against the growth of militarism, and will publish the returns as an answer to the arguments of the American Legion and the National Security League. The officers of the league are Karl G. Karsten, president, Columbia; Arthur Fisher, vice-president, Harvard; John Temple Graves, Jr., secretary, Princeton; A. L. Trachtenberg, treasurer, Yale.

Legislators Go to Sunday-school.

A Bible class has been organized among the legislators at Harrisburg, Pa. The solons meet for study once a week. It is said that this is one of the by-products of the Sunday meetings at Philadelphia.

English Clergy Oppose Prohibition.

In the archdiocese of York, the matter of national prohibition for England during the war was discussed and it was decided that such a course would be unwise. The clergy of England have been invited by Sir Edward Clarke to become total abstainers, but his suggestion has been rather indignantly repelled, although the Archbishop of Canterbury has made a quiet announcement that he was following the example of the King and of Lord Kitchener. The non-comformist churches very commonly follow the total abstainers' policy whether during the war time or time of peace.

Manuscript of Famous Song.

Replying to a criticism that the "Christian Denomination" has had no famous men, the Herald of Gospel Liberty has reproduced a facsimile of the original copy of the song, "God Be With You Till We Meet Again," showing that it was written by Prof. W. G. Tomer, who was, at the time of the composition of the song, leader of the choir in a "Christian" church in Finesville, N. J., where Dr. J. J. Summerbell was pastor, and probably a member of that church.

Congregationalists and Episcopalians Confer.

Perhaps the most outstanding "high church" diocese of the Protestant Episcopal denomination in the United States is that of Fond du Lac, Wisconsin. Recently Bishop Weller, of that diocese, invited Dr. Newman Smyth of New Haven, Ct., to visit Oshkosh to hold a conference on church union. Fifteen ministers of various churches were present and very frank discussions followed on the religious situation. The ministers unanimously requested that another such conference be held, to which all ministers of the Fox River valley should be invited; that its purpose should not be any move toward organic union, but simply free, frank discussion on the subject. One of the leading promoters of the conferences has been Rev. Harry F. Burns, pastor of First Congregational church, Oshkosh.

Celebrate Return of Peace Leaders.

A dinner was recently held at the Hotel Astor, New York, by the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ of America, and the New York Peace Society, to welcome home Dr. Shailer Mathews and Rev. Sidney L. Gulick, just back from a most interesting experience as peace envoys to Japan from the churches of America. Dr. T. Iyenaga, who now lives in New York, spoke at the meeting and insisted that the temperamental differences between Americans and Japanese must be taken into account in any estimate of the two nations. His fellow countrymen, he said, are not like the average American, communicative and outspoken, but reserved, unexpressive, apparently unemotional, but with all that, as sincere lovers of peace as any people in the world.

Methodists Will Build Publishing Building.

At the meeting of the Book Committee of the Methodist Episcopal church recently, action was taken with regard to the erection of a building in the middle west to house the publishing interests of the denomination for that section. The Cincinnati committee was authorized to purchase a lot at the corner of Rush and Superior streets in Chicago and to erect a building on the new location within a year, at a cost not to exceed $275,000. There was some opposition to this project as some were in favor of waiting on the plans of the First Methodist church which owns a business corner in the "loop" district and contemplates building a skyscraper thereon. The location of the publishing house will be north of the "loop."

Here and There

THE USE OF THE TITLE "REVEREND."

A body of ministerial students in one of our Bible colleges recently published a resolution disapproving the use of the title "Reverend." Evidently the season of graduating addresses draweth nigh, and this may account for the disposition to settle a few of the vexing problems of the brotherhood for all time. They gave the menace of "ecclesiasticism" a side swipe, and probably space forbade their paying particular attention to that other menace which we look upon with grave concern, viz.: the true distinction between tweedledum and tweedledee. It is very essential to the life of any people that such a distinction be made and maintained. However, the use of the title "Reverend" once so alarmingly prevalent, will be discontinued, now that the sons of the prophets have spoken.

The only item of interest to us is the revival of the memory of an old controversy of which most of the present generation have never heard, and many of the older generation have forgotten. Time was when a man who suffered a title to be attached to his name was under serious suspicion. He was looked upon as a compromiser, as a truckler to the sects. The custom savored of popery. Imagine, said the fathers, Paul addressing a letter to the Right Reverend Simon Peter! The laugh that resounded throughout the brotherhood has not wholly died away. But in spite of the jest the title survived, and men began to see that the use of "Reverend" was not an indication of a corrupt heart. If incongruous to address Simon Peter as "Reverend," it is equally so to speak of him as "Mr.," or "Esquire," titles to which there are no objections. We might make an argument for a sack coat by saying, "Imagine Simon Peter with a Prince Albert coat, a silk hat, patent leather shoes, a linen collar and a four in hand tie!" He, He, Ha, Ha, Funny, isn't it? A good argument for walking from one appointment to another would be, "Imagine Simon Peter riding in a railway train, or in an automobile!" Time to laugh again.

As a matter of fact, our ministers don't care the snap of their finger about titles. They use them in addressing each other as they use the terms "Dr.," Prof.," or any other title. To say that the practice savors of ecclesiasticism is as near the truth as to say it savors of apples and oranges. But the early prejudice has kept our missionary and benevolent secretaries undecided as to whether to address the ministers as "Reverend" or "Mr."

If any man feels himself exalted above measure because he receives a letter with "Rev." attached to his name, he should remonstrate with those who thus put his soul in deadly peril. If they persist he should hale them before the judgment seat. Nothing is so perilous for the minister as to pitch his tent in the direction of a title. Brethren, let us forswear the use of "Rev." lest we be the innocent cause of cherishing within the heart of some aspiring youth the ambitions which a long time ago resulted in the papacy!

It strikes us as a little strange that a body of students should be passing resolutions on such matters, when a ferocious war is raging in Europe. What are the boys thinking about, anyhow? Is this the time for reviving old issues and starting anew worn-out and threadbare discussions? How much more timely a resolution to do everything in their power in behalf of international peace?

But, of course, youth is ambitious and magnificently fearless, and our words are only half meant for them. They are wholly meant for those who can see no issues in the world save those which minister to their sectarianism or to their vanity, and which when advertised, may help forward the sale of mint, anise, and cummin grown on the ancient soil, while all else offered by competitors was grown in the land of Philistia!

IT SOUNDS ENGLISH.

Rev. Sylvester Horne once heard a Tory member of Parliament say in praise of bishops: "Bishops are not really stiff and starchy. There's a good heart beating below their gaiters."

THE POOR "AVERAGE PREACHER!"

We are wondering what the world will do when Billy Sunday dies. One of his eulogists has this to say: "Credible report says that he ('Billy'), once was as tedious and tiresome as the average preacher." Poor average preacher! He's an intolerable bore, an effeminate pink-tea individual who combs his hair in the middle, regulates the proprieties of a few women and children, baptizes the babies, marries the marriageable, and buries the dead. He is invisible through the week and incomprehensible on Sundays. Yet we venture to assert that he has done a great deal of good in the world, is doing a great deal today, was here before "Billy" came, and will be here after "Billy" leaves. All of which leads us to remark that if "Billy's" eulogists continue to disparage the average minister and the average church for the sake of setting their idol upon the ruins of both, there will be no preachers left to extend a call to Brother "Billy" on a silver slab, and no churches left to pay the freight. There is an appreciation which carried beyond a certain point is the highest form of detraction. It has come to pass that "Billy's" admirers cannot write about him without first throwing the forces which made his success possible on to the ash heap. If the process continues we may soon expect the eulogists to claim that their idol sneezed, and the San Francisco earthquake was the result.

Will the gentlemen who write please use lead pencil instead of red ink?

WHERE DIFFERENCES DISAPPEAR.

Not long since we stood by the grave of a man who living was a reformer, and visited with the hatred common to all such. He was not particularly a religious man, though he stood for right things, but without that fine sense of right which comes only with years of religious association. Death has leveled all opinions into one—that he was a good and a great man, much abused because misunderstood. This is the usual funeral wreath which mankind weaves for the victims of their age whom death transforms into victors. Why humanity should persist in building the tombs of the prophets is difficult to say, but the tombs are assured when the first brick is thrown.

The paths of contumely lead to immortality when often the paths of glory lead but to the grave.

WHAT WILL THE FATHERS SAY?

Occasionally, we read of some church having a surpliced choir. We tremble as we consider what the end might be. This entering wedge may prepare the way for beads, confessionals, mitres, and all the trumpery of popery. The Old Ship is in perilous waters these days, and traitors are in the hold. Time to line up!

* * *

WE ALL PLEAD GUILTY.

"Brethren," said the esteemed pastor when visiting the scene of his former labors, "I'm sorry to see so many faces absent that I used to shake hands with."

WE'VE HEARD SOMETHING LIKE THIS:

The English professor, traveling through our Carolina hills, according to the Boston Herald, noted various quaint expressions. For instance, after a long ride the professor sought provisions at a mountain hut. "What d' yo' all want?" called out a woman. "Madam," said the professor, "can we get corn bread here? We'd like to buy some of you." "Corn bread? Corn bread did yo' say?" Then she chuckled to herself, and her manner grew amiable. "Why, if corn bread's all yo' want, come right in, for that's just what I hain't got nuthin' else on hand but."

NATHAN REBUKES DAVID.

INTERNATIONAL UNIFORM LESSON FOR JUNE 6.

Golden Text: Create in me a clean heart, O God. Psalm 51:10.

American Standard Bible.
Copyright, 1901, by Thomas Nelson & Sons.
(Used by permission.)

II Sam. 11:1-12. 7a (compare Psalm 51) II Sam. 11:22-12.7a printed. Memory Verse II Sam. 12:5, 6,7a.

11 (22) So the messenger went, and came and showed David all that Joab had sent him for. (23) And the messenger said unto David, The men prevailed against us, and came out unto us into the field, and we were even unto the entrance of the gate. (24) And the shooters shot at thy servants from off the wall; and some of the king's servants are dead, and thy servant Uriah the Hittite is dead also. (25) Then David said unto the messenger, Thus shalt thou say unto Joab, Let not this thing displease thee, for the sword devoureth one as well as another; make thy battle more strong against the city, and overthrow it: and encourage thou him.

(26) And when the wife of Uriah heard that Uriah her husband was dead, she made lamentation for her husband. (27) And when the mourning was past, David sent and took her home to his house, and she became his wife, and bare him a son. But the thing that David had done displeased Jehovah.

12 (1) And Jehovah sent Nathan unto David. And he came unto him, and said unto him, There were two men in one city; the one rich, and the other poor. (2) The rich man had exceeding many flocks and herds; (3) but the poor man had nothing, save one little ewe lamb, which he had bought and nourished up: and it grew up together with him, and with his children; it did eat of his own morsel, and drank of his own cup, and lay in his bosom, and was unto him as a daughter. (4) And there came a traveller unto the rich man, and spared to take of his own flock and of his own herd, to dress for the wayfaring man that was come unto him, but took the poor man's lamb, and dressed it for the man that was come to him. (5) And David's anger was greatly kindled against the man; and he said to Nathan, As Jehovah liveth, the man that hath done this is worthy to die: (6) and he shall restore the lamb fourfold, because he did this thing, and because he had no pity.

(7) And Nathan said to David, Thou art the man.

Verse by Verse.

BY ASA MCDANIEL.

II Sam. 11:22. The messenger went. Read the entire chapter, and especially verses 14-21.—And showed David all Joab had sent him for. He reported the results of the conflict with the men of Rabbah to David. The main purpose, however, was to inform David of Uriah's death.

23. The men prevailed. The men of Rabbah, see verse 1. The word prevailed is a little strong; the men made a sally would be better according to the context. Came out. The besieged came out against Israel, but were driven back in the city.—We were upon them even unto the entrance gate. The men of Israel drove them back into the city, but in their enthusiasm they came too close to the walls.

24. The shooters. The archers.—Off the wall. It was a walled city and the guards were stationed upon the walls to protect the people from attack.—Uriah the Hittite is dead also. The evil purpose of David to get Uriah out of the way has been accomplished and the messenger made special mention of it, see verse 15. It is difficult to see how one so good could commit murder. This crime mars the life that up to this time seemed so full of beauty.

25. Thus shalt thou say unto Joab. The message was dictated by a sanctimonious hypocrisy. Uriah's death pleased David and because of it he overlooked the recklessness of Joab, see verses 20 and 21.—The sword devoureth one as well as another. David is relieved by this statement and he commands the messenger to encourage Joab, by saying that it is the way of war. It is the uncertainty of war. One who goes to war takes his life in his hands.

26. She made lamentation for her husband. Bathsheba formally observed the seven days of mourning according to the custom, see Gen. 50:10; I Sam. 31:13.

27. She became his wife. In the East widows often marry very soon after the death of their first husband. It is not as uncommon as it should be in our day.—Displeased Jehovah. The day of reckoning always comes to the offender. This part of the verse belongs more properly with the next chapter.

II Sam. 12:1. Jehovah sent Nathan unto David. Nathan is to be regarded as the next successor of Samuel in the line of prophet-statesmen. David esteemed him as his own superior and made him his chief adviser.—And said unto him. Nathan brings home to David the meanness of his sin by means of a parable.—Two men in one city. In the parable the two men represent David and Uriah.

2. Many flocks and herds. A statement in the Old Testament indicating great wealth. It is a very natural statement among a pastoral people. This refers to David.

3. One little ewe lamb. This is a striking contrast to the rich man's wealth. The poor man represents Uriah, and the ewe lamb represents Bathsheba, the wife of Uriah. The lamb was highly esteemed by the family. It was a pet. The poor man had a wealth of affection for his small possession.

4. There came a traveler. The desire of David is spoken of as a traveler. The obligation to be hospitable to him was imperative.—The poor man's lamb. These cases were doubtless common enough in that country and time. The parable fits our day only too well.

5. David's anger was greatly kindled against the man. He could readily see the wickedness of the rich man and was justly incensed at the greedy man.—As Jehovah liveth. The usual form of a solemn oath.—Worthy to die. Hebrew, a son of death, RVm.

6. He shall restore the lamb fourfold. The Jewish law required a fourfold restoration for a sheep that had been taken wrongfully, see Ex. 22:1. No pity. This is the very essence of David's sin.

7. Thou art the man. All the guilt that David had attached to the rich man in the story, rested upon himself. If the man who has taken his neighbor's lamb deserves to die, what does he deserve who has taken his neighbor's wife and his neighbor's life? The prophet was fearless in his application of the truth, even if it involved the great king of Israel.

"Thou Art the Man!"

The Lesson in Today's Life.

BY JOHN R. EWERS.

NATHAN REBUKES DAVID.

The pictures in the Bible are not of ideal men and women. No idle dreamer, no impractical religious fanatic painted these subjects. The pictures are photographic. Cromwell is reported to have said, "Paint me wart and all." The hideous blemishes appear as well as the handsome features in these biblical scenes.

IDLE HANDS.

Not in the days when he was hunted from forest to cave, not in the strenuous days when he was battling like a hero for power and place, not in the days of obscurity, before his praises were chanted by maidens, did Divid sin. But in easy middle life, when power seemed secure, when praise was on every lip, when continued success had made him proud and confident, when others, under his authority, were at the front fighting his battles—it was in such an hour that David fell. "The devil finds work for idle hands to do"—and he found that idle, self-satisfied, complacement, soft-raiment king in that older day.

ONLY ONE DEED.

It only took one torpedo to blow up the Lusitania! One charge of dynamite would demolish a cathedral. One foolish hour can wreck a life. All the ruddy beauty of boyhood, all the fine devotion of the young shepherd, all the bravery of the giant-killer, all the magnanimity of the outlaw, all the glory of the organizer of a kingdom, all the splendor of the powerful monarch pale, sicken and fade into dust and ashes before this one beastly sin.

THE ALLIES.

All sins are bound together in a desperate alliance. Where one gains entrance he seeks to lead all the rest. They never break their treaties. They stick together to the end! Vile imagination, soft-indulgence, theft, lying, adultery, murder—there they are—the allies of sin. Woe unto him who lets any one of them enter his castle. Some dark night when the sky is ink and the thunders roll the whole miserable pack will come in over the draw bridge let down by some traitor from within. The evil thought, the evil plan, the evil deed, the damning sin, the scorpion sting of outraged conscience, a dead soul—that is the path to hell.

THE OLD STORY.

An apple, unpossessed, hanging over a sunny wall, how tempting! The apple stolen and tasted has turned to ashes in the mouth. "There are moments," says one of our brilliant writers, "when the conscience, like John the Baptist, lies chained in his dungeon and the Salome of Passion dances madly before our bloodshot and intoxicted eyes." Such a moment was that when David walked upon his housetop while his brave soldiers were far away. But that sad story in Second Samuel twelve is the story of the ashes, the disappointment. After a long while there may be burned out craters filled with snow—but the ragged scars remain. David may be a man after God's own heart; he was, poor son of earth, but the scars remained.

BROKEN PINIONS.

Is it true that birds with broken pinions never soar as high again? Remember that Peter after his base denial preached the masterly sermon of Pentecost. Call to mind the red-hot evangelists, temperance orators, and regenerate men who have "COME BACK." No, the music of repentance has not died out of the world. Thank God for that. The way to heaven is the path of repentance. We all have sinned and come short, but repenting, we have turned our stained faces heavenward again. It is better to always be good. Samuel, the unstained, became God's prophet. But let us throw out no discouraging word to the millions who have sinned. Repent and be saved. To be saved—that is a great fact.

Love, live for, work for, the undying truth and good—that is the way to nourish an undying vigor of the heart. These are the waters of the Fountain of Eternal Youth.—John W. Chadwick.

Disciples Table Talk

Monroe City, Mo., Church Missionary.
The church and Sunday-school at Monroe City, Mo., raised $600 on May 10 for all missionary and benevolent interests. W. Garnett Alcorn reports that this is the biggest offering in the church's history. The total for the year from all sources has reached $800.

Tokens of Esteem for Pastor.
The Bible school at Camp Point, Ill., is growing and the Men's class taught by the pastor, Geo. W. Wise, recently presented the teacher with a fine gold watch. The ladies of the church thought the pastor's wife should come in for some of the good things so they visited the parsonage with a set of Haviland china.

A School of Religious Training.
The church at Norfolk, Va., has been holding a school for religious training during the past seventeen weeks. The class reported seventy-eight out of an enrollment of 204. There were thirty-four from the Disciples congregation, the others coming from other communions. A constitution was adopted looking towards making the school a permanent institution.

New Church Dedicated at El Reno, Okla.
The congregation at El Reno, Okla., was organized twenty-five years ago and has grown steadily under efficient leadership until this year it was necessary to erect a new building at an expense of thirty thousand dollars. The present pastor is Frank H. Lash. The dedicator was Geo. L. Snively. To pay all debts, $12,500 was needed. There was received a total of $15,850. Thirty-one additions also are reported.

Missionary Returns for an Operation.
Frances Irene Banta grew up in Eureka, where her father is a well-known physician. After graduating from Eureka college, and carrying on advanced studies in Columbia university, she gave her life to the mission field. Being thrown from a horse the past year in China, she suffered a fractured skull, and has been compelled to return to America for more skilled surgical aid. She is well enough to deliver an occasional address and she recently visited her Living Link church in Plattsburg, Mo.

P. C. Macfarlane Writes New Novel.
Peter Clark Macfarlane, who issued a volume of human interest stories last winter, is writing a novel which will be called "Held to Answer." It will be published serially in Collier's Weekly next fall and later as a book by Little, Brown and Co. It is said to be a story of the conflict between ambition, love and duty. The hero ultimately becomes a minister and treads the "Via Dolorosa" to reach his triumph.

Dedication at Gill, Col.
On May 9, First church, Gill, Colo., was dedicated. Gill is simply a country trading point and the Gill church is a rural church. The building is a frame structure, with auditorium and side room and basement. The main auditorium is seated with oak pews. The property is valued at $3,000. Most of the money needed was provided before dedication day and only $550 was needed to cover all indebtedness. Claude J. Miller, pastor of First church, Greeley, was master of ceremonies and in a very skillful manner easily raised $750 at the morning service. More was given in the afternoon. The pledges were nearly all cash pledges. The surplus will be used in further equipping and beautifying the property. This rural parish, which includes the Gill church and the S. L. W. Ranch church, is now provided with two splendid buildings, and the work is prospering in every way. The S. L. W. church kept up its morning services after J. E. Lynn left and had nine ready for baptism when the new pastor, Oren Orahood, arrived. Two more have been added also during the month.

Big Banquet at State Convention.
The Texas state convention was very largely attended and at a banquet held one evening, 800 people sat down together. The addresses were by W. R. Warren, A. C. Smither, F. M. Rains and Grant K. Lewis.

Sunday-school Leaders on the Job.
Central church, Youngstown, O., has a live superintendent, as well as orchestra leader. These two men spend Saturday afternoon in preparation of the next day's work.

Geo. A. Campbell Becomes Dedicator.
Geo. A. Campbell, Hannibal, Mo., has added to his other accomplishments the gifts of a church dedicator. He recently visited Houston, Tex., at the invitation of W. S. Lockhart and his congregation, and assisted in the dedication of a new church there.

Around the World of Foreign Missions

Some Big Offerings.
We are cheered at the office by some excellent remittances for foreign missions these days. The First church, Akron, Ohio, sends in a partial payment of $782 from that church. This church gives more than double this each year and other payments will come later. Hyde Park church, Chicago, sends in $1,000 as the offering for the year.

The Greatest Children's Day.
The indications are that June 6 will record the greatest Children's day celebration in the history of our people. It is doubtful if anything has done more for the education of our churches in the missionary spirit than this annual festival. More than a million people gather each year to listen to the songs and exercises and participate in the offering.

Newspapers Print Mission Article.
Many of the leading newspapers of the country have published in full a missionary article on "Electricity and Fox Worship," by Mrs. M. B. Madden, of Japan. This article was copied from the May issue of "The Intelligencer."

Congo Chief Converted.
Herbert Smith, of the Congo, writes that the chief of the distant village where Ray Eldred was buried, had recently been converted to Christianity. When Mr. Smith first saw him in 1912 he was a raw, filthy, heathen man. At Christmas time he came to Lotumbe station, clean and dressed and a Christian. The influence of Ray Eldred's sacrificial death has been very marked on that whole section of the country. Recently there were 300 baptisms at that point. Brother Smith reports that about the only heathen people left in the town are some of the very old people and the children.

R. A. Doan Coming Home.
R. A. Doan and family sailed from Yokohama for home on May 15. Brother Doan has been holding meetings in our Japan stations to the great encouragement of the missionaries.

Sunday-school Becomes Living Link.
C. R. Oakley of Mansfield, Ohio, has recently taken the pastorate at Portsmouth. He reports that the great Sunday-school there voted last Sunday unanimously to become a Living Link in the Foreign Society. He anticipates no difficulty in raising the money. This is a fine step forward for this great school. Mr. Oakley writes that the people are very happy in this resolve and outlook.

County's Sunday-schools Support Missionary.
The Sunday-schools of Bourbon county, Ky., outside of Paris, are planning to become a Living Link in the Foreign Society and support their own missionary on the foreign field.

Strong, Fruitful Meeting at Springfield, Mo.

South Street church, Springfield, Mo., on May 3 closed one of the most satisfactory meetings ever held in the twenty-eight years of its history. This meeting lasted just nineteen days and was held by Dr. Breeden, pastor of First church, Fresno, Calif. South Street church has never depended upon revivals for its growth, though a meeting of some days is conducted nearly every year. Being thoroughly organized it has looked to the regular agencies of the church for its increase in numbers. A church of this type is not very susceptible to sensational, high pressure evangelism. In looking for the man who would fit the situation, the official board was unanimous in the decision that Dr. Breeden was the man. He had dedicated the new church building nearly five years ago and they felt that he was safe and sane and that his work would be lasting. Group meetings were held all over the city, the week preceding the coming of Dr. Breeden. Personal work committees were formed. The gospel was preached from night to night without any attempt to astonish the people with gymnastic exercises or expressions after which the most spiritual and cultured would place interrogation points. Dr. Breeden's type of evangelism is the highest and the beauty of it is that it is the natural outgrowth of his life. Literature of both ancient and modern days was made to contribute to soul awakening and character building. He showed himself a tireless personal worker, every afternoon being devoted to this. While in the city he appeared before the students of Drury college, the state normal, the high school, and the Springfield Business College in readings from James Whitcomb Riley, Eugene Field, and Paul Lawrence Dunbar, to the great delight of all. The last Saturday evening of the meeting he gave his "Evening with the Dialect Poets" for the benefit of the church. His lecture on Browning before the leading Woman's Literary Club was a very fine piece of literary work. To me the meeting was a delight and a pleasure. It was a joy to have such fellowship for even a short time. It was especially pleasing to me as pastor to have no outgrown theology palmed off on the people in the name of evangelism, no coarse expressions in the name of effectiveness and no harsh, cutting things said in the name of loyalty. Love was the dominant note throughout. Possibly the most satisfactory thing to me as pastor is the fact that when I took my pulpit the Sunday following the close of the meeting, I did not need to create a normal atmosphere again; it had been normal all through the campaign. There were one hundred and fifty-eight added to the church during the meetings. Clifford H. Newham, pastor of the Villa Heights church, Joplin, very effectively led the music during the campaign.

F. L. Moffet, pastor.

CUT ON DOTTED LINE

Poet Lindsay is Commended.

There is a two-page write-up in the Epworth Herald of Vachel Lindsay, the poet of Springfield, by J. Hastie Odgers. He is pronounced to be the most promising poet in America. The reference to the religious heritage of Mr. Lindsay will be interesting to Disciples: "The family of Mr. Lindsay is one of the most respected in Springfield. His church training has been among the Disciples, where the family are honored members. The truly Christian atmosphere of the home may be felt from the fact that a sister is now in the mission field in China; and the brother's appreciation of her and her work is seen in the dedication of the first volume to 'Dr. Paul Wakefield and Olive Lindsay Wakefield.' Curious as it may seem, in view of the mistrust with which the Disciples have been regarded by the most orthodox, as not according to Christ his full deity, is the habit which Mr. Lindsay has of referring to Christ quite interchangeably with God the father. At any rate, it is quite evident that with Mr. Lindsay, not only the vocabulary, but the ideals and the passion of the Christian are in his blood."

Efficiency Campaign at Warrensburg, Mo.

On May 7, G. L. Snively closed a ten days' efficiency campaign for Sherman B. Moore, at Warrensburg, Mo. There were 41 additions to the church membership, and $13,500 in cash and notes were received to care for a long standing debt of $11,000. Mr. Snively will assist Claude L. Jones, of Shreveport, La., in a meeting soon to begin.

Wellington, Kan., in Fruitful Work.

H. W. Hunter, pastor at Wellington, Kan., is preaching a series of sermons on the Twenty-third Psalm. His sermon for May 16 was "Delightful Surroundings Insured." The text was: "He maketh me lie down in green pastures." Mr. Hunter celebrated Mothers' Day with a sermon on "A Tribute to Your Mother and Mine." This congregation recently sent an offering of $15 for the Belgian sufferers.

Vote Today!

Above will be found a blank which ought to be filled out and mailed at once by every reader who has not given an expression on this vital matter since October 1.

This vote is to enable the Board of Ministerial Relief to keep up its regular pension payments to the 122 aged and disabled ministers and missionaries, and widows and orphans of those deceased, who have been found in actual need of their brethren's fellowship.

The necessary growth of the roll has outstripped the increase in receipts and this extraordinary rally of all God's people is needed right now, as there is no money in the treasury to make the next payment.

This is the last testimony of love and loyalty we can give some of these saints, for many of them will have completed the "One Hour Watch" before we shall see another summer.

In and Around Chicago

William Campbell, of Evanston, the only living son of Alexander Campbell, has returned to Wellsburg, W. Va., to finish up certain business negotiations which will make it possible for him to regard Evanston as his permanent home. His wife, two daughters and a son, Argyle Campbell, a dealer in railway supplies, are in the home with him.

The boys of Douglas Park Sunday-school are out after a prize of a thousand dollars. They have entered what is called the Merchants' and Manufacturers' contest in which the prize will be given for labels on certain kinds of canned goods. The boys are getting friends in other churches to help them and they are carrying on a very active work to secure the coveted award.

Clifford G. Roe is the author of a new book, the third he has written, on the "White Slave Traffic." The new one is entitled, "The Girl Who Disappeared." Mr. Roe is president of the American Bureau of Moral Education, and is a member of Hyde Park church.

Dr. Herbert L. Willett is booked for a large number of commencement addresses this spring. He will speak for high schools at Columbia, Mo., Newton, Kans., Hiawatha, Kans., and elsewhere. He will also fill the place of William Howard Taft at the Knife and Fork Club of Kansas City soon, the latter speaker being unable to fill his appointment.

O. F. Jordan and W. G. Winn exchanged pulpits on May 16, Mr. Winn addressing the Evanston Disciples on the subject of city missions.

The Sunday-school superintendents met in the loop on May 10 and discussed the plans for the observance of Children's Day. They also discussed the relation of athletic sports to the work of the Sunday-school.

The Chicago Christian Missionary Society met in the Ohio building on May 3 and discussed the contract relations with the American Christian Missionary Society. Heretofore for many years all mission work done in Chicago has been done through the local missionary organization. This year, F. W. Burnham, the new secretary, has recommended another policy, which means direct appropriations from Cincinnati to Chicago mission points. The local mission organization has opposed this plan as breaking up any unity of operation in a metropolitan city. Mr. Burnham was present on the evening of May 3 for part of the evening, and defended his point of view. A large majority of the Chicago delegates opposed his policy, and directed that a committee of laymen should be sent to Cincinnati to lay the matter before the Cincinnati board. This committee, as appointed, includes the following members: E. M. Bowman, Dr. P. L. Prentis and John Bain, all of whom oppose the proposed innovation.

O. F. Jordan has written a teachers' and a pupils' quarterly in the Bethany lesson series, the booklets dealing with the church, its doctrines, practices and life. These are now in use in the schools using this series of lessons. Dr. Errett Gates is also writing some new lessons in this series that will be printed soon.

The Ladies' Aid Society of Evanston church gives a monthly luncheon at a nominal price to the school teachers, clerks and others who are in the immediate vicinity. Many people have been led to know the church through this device.

Burglars entered Chicago Heights church recently and vandalized the pastor's study. Some small change was taken and a Yale lock on the door was destroyed. The loss was not great.

Asa McDaniel preached for Edgewater church on May 16. This young congregation has made much progress since it was founded.

The next quarterly meeting of the Chicago Union of the C. W. B. M. will be held the first Thursday in June in Memorial church. At this meeting the annual election of officers will be held.

EUREKA MAY FESTIVAL.

Eureka is a city of 1,600 people, the seat of Eureka college. The festival was held on the afternoon and evening of May 6. In the afternoon a children's chorus of 150 voices sang patriotic songs, and in the evening a chorus of 125 adult voices sang "The Rose Maiden." Soloists for the occasion were Miss Hilda B. Phelps, soprano, Eureka; Miss Clare Livingston, contralto, Chicago: Mr. Frank Barnard, tenor, Chicago: Mr. Ernest Higdon, baritone, Eureka: and Master Burtin Hurd, boy soprano, El Paso. The choruses were directed by Prof. Elias A. Bredin, Director of Department of Music in the college. Prof. Clarence Eidam, teacher of piano, added to the program by several selections on the piano. The festival was a great success in every way and will become an annual feature in the community. Eureka is especially favored in having the students and faculty of the College Conservatory, but the effort is one that might be attempted with good results by many similar communities. Much of the success of this first program is due to Prof. Bredin, who is making a great success of the Voice Department in the college.

THE BLESSEDNESS OF FORGIVENESS.

INTERNATIONAL UNIFORM LESSON FOR JUNE 13.

Psalm 32 Memory Verse, 5.

Golden Text: Blessed is he whose transgression is forgiven, Whose sin is covered. Psalm 32:1.

American Standard Bible.
Copyright, 1901, by Thomas Nelson & Sons.
(Used by permission.)

1 Blessed is he whose transgression is forgiven,
Whose sin is covered.
2 Blessed is the man unto whom Jehovah imputeth not iniquity,
And in whose spirit there is no guile.
3 When I kept silence, my bones wasted away
Through my groaning all the day long.
4 For day and night thy hand was heavy upon me:
My moisture was changed as with the drought of summer. [Selah
5 I acknowledged my sin unto thee,
And mine iniquity did I not hide:
I said, I will confess my transgressions unto Jehovah:
And thou forgavest the iniquity of my sin.
6 For this let every one that is godly pray unto thee in a time when thou mayest be found:
Surely when the great waters overflow they shall not reach unto him.
7 Thou art my hiding-place; thou wilt preserve me from trouble:
Thou wilt compass me about with songs of deliverance. [Selah
8 I will instruct thee and teach thee in the way which thou shalt go:
I will counsel thee with mine eye upon thee.
9 Be ye not as the horse, or as the mule, which have no understanding:
Whose trappings must be bit and bridle to hold them in,
Else they will not come near unto thee.
10 Many sorrows shall be to the wicked;
But he that trusteth in Jehovah, lovingkindness shall compass him about.
11 Be glad in Jehovah, and rejoice, ye righteous;
And shout for joy, all ye that are upright in heart.

Verse by Verse.

BY ASA MCDANIEL.

1. Blessed. Or "Happy." The plural is used to indicate the highest degree of happiness. Blessed is the man who has obtained forgiveness, and who lives in this state of mind.—Transgression. Is the going beyond bounds. It is a departure from God, the failure to follow our highest and best ideals.—Forgiven. The burden of guilt lifted, taken away. Sin thought of as a load, a burden.—Sin. Wandering from the way, or missing the mark.

2. Covered. Hidden from sight. Not noticed.—Imputed. That is, not estimated or thought of in connection with the sinner.—Iniquity. Depravity or moral distortion.—In whose spirit there is no guile. There must not be any deceitfulness in the heart. One condition of forgiveness is absolute sincerity.

3. When I kept silence. When I refused to confess my sin. Refrained from confession.—My bones wasted away. The bones are considered the fundamental part of the living man, by the Hebrew poets; hence, they are the seat of pain. The torments of conscience are thus vividly expressed.—Groaning. Hebrew, "roaring," RVm.

4. Day and night. Continuously, all day and all night without interruption.—Thy hand was heavy upon me. God's hand. The sensitiveness of his soul caused him great discomfort, because of his guilt. My moisture is turned into the drought of summer. By his unwillingness to confess, the real values ("juices") of life were like the droughts of a Palestinian summer.

5. I acknowledged my sin unto thee. Literally, "I began to make known."—My iniquity did I not hide. His confession is made clear. In the felt presence of Jehovah he bows humbly, and seeks forgiveness for his sin.—And thou forgavest. The word "thou" is emphatic, and the form of the expression indicates an immediateness of pardon.

6. For this. Therefore, or because thou art a forgiving God, let every one, etc.—Every one. Let others follow my example.—In a time when thou mayest be found. Or—in the time of finding out sin, RVm. When we are conscious of sin and trouble, that is the time to pray.—When the great waters overflow. The distress is compared to a sudden flood.—Shall not reach unto him. Jehovah in answer to his prayer has placed him in safe refuge. David for a time was hiding from God; now he makes God his hiding place.

7. Preserve. Trouble shall not hurt him.—Songs of deliverance. His own inward joy and the shouts of the godly rejoicing at his deliverance. It is thought by the best scholars that at this point the original psalm closed.

8. I will instruct thee. The question here is, who is the speaker? Most modern commentators suppose it is the psalmist. It is a later addition to the psalm, and of different construction.—I will counsel thee. A statement intended to intensify the previous verbs.—Mine eye upon thee. The eye of the teacher being fixed upon the pupil, he notes every movement with intimate anxiety.

9. Be not as a horse. Lacking the capacity of receiving instruction, and hence must be guided by external forces.—The mule. Added to intensify the former statement.—They will not come near unto thee. The Hebrew is obscure and possibly corrupt in some points; but the general sense is clear. Animals must be compelled by physical force to submit to man's will.

10. Many sorrows. Most scholars take the last two verses of the psalm as a still later addition to the psalm. The sorrows are the sorrows of punishment, and are in contrast to the fortune of the lovers of Jehovah.—Loving kindness. This is in contrast to the sorrows of the wicked. We may well speak of forgiveness in these terms, for he is free from alarms at night, and filled with joyous song during the day who is thus in harmony with Jehovah.

11. Be glad * * and rejoice. These are liturgical terms which indicate worship in the temple.—Ye righteous. Right minded. The class of people in Israel living in conformity to the law.—Shout for joy. Religion makes one happy, not sad.—Upright in heart. Happiness that is worth while is always founded on this quality of heart and life.

A King Repentant

The Lesson in Today's Life.

BY JOHN R. EWERS.

In our last lesson we saw a king convicted of a black sin. He was in outer darkness. David moved in a very dungeon of despair. It was night. "Thou art the man" rang in his ears. "Thou art the man," roared in his conscience. Day and night he lived with this accusing voice. In the silent watches of the night the voice was loudest. He was shocked wide awake by the sudden clamor of that accusation. It was like the fire-bell—full of sudden terror. "Thou art the man"—and he could not help but feel that he should not have been that man; he was too brave, too chivalrous, too noble to have done a thing, which any common, ordinary man might have done! What degradation! A cathedral turned into a stable. A knight with violated vow. A hero turned coward. A saint fallen from the battlements of heaven. O, what a fall was there. One sudden gust of passion; one pitiably weak moment; one mad, unreasonable indulgence—a brave soldier murdered, that soldier's wife stolen—the foulest sins in the catalog committed by himself the king and protector—how vile, low, contemptible, loathsome he seemed. How God must despise him!

REPENTANCE.

If ever in the history of our race there was one earnest penitent it was the poet-king. In tears he washed out his stains. But hold—did ever a man do that? Can human sorrow ever atone for sin? No, never. There is a lesson which every man does well to learn. Tears could not bring back Uriah. Tears could not blot out the black stains of his sin. Tears could not even erase the memory of his base unworthiness. David knew that. He knew that he had sinned against God. He knew that a holy commandment had been broken. "Thou shalt not commit adultery" is a law written not only in an old Jewish code, but established in the school of human experience. The experience of the race teaches us that the highest human happiness results when one man lives in true relations with one wife. Many schemes have been evolved to evade this law, but always the infraction has meant sorrow and suffering. Disease, broken homes, erring children, loneliness and suicide have come in to deter men from breaking this fundamental law, which never needed to be insisted upon more than in this present hour. David pleaded with God for forgiveness. He could not endure the spiritual drought. Like a parched desert his heart blistered under the merciless sun of guilty knowledge. Like a dried and thirsty meadow his soul longed for the showers of forgiveness. Like a pond, from which the water has evaporated, leaving only putrifying fish and stinking slime, so his wretched and guilty self lay under the hot light of accusing conscience. It could not be endured. His bones were dying and drying. His eyes ached with the weeping. Life was unendurable. With him it was forgiveness or suicide. "God be merciful to me, a sinner."

FORGIVENESS.

God heard. "Like as a father pitieth his children, so the Lord pitieth them that fear him." God pardons his offences though they are great. Like the gentle rain upon the pasture land, like the morning sun after the dark night, thus comes God's sweet forgiveness. I remember a hot, threatening afternoon in July when the whole air was filled with fury. About five o'clock the terrible storm swept in dust clouds upon us. Darkness followed. Pelting rain, crashing thunders, angry flashes of lightning, creaking, breaking limbs of trees, the musketry of the hailstones, the fires of burning barns. And then—the distant roaring of the retreating thunder, the gentle patter of the healing rain, the perfume of refreshed gardens, the children wading barefoot in the puddles, the sweet coolness of the evening and the final glory of the golden sunset. This is the story of sin and its forgiveness. "Blessed is he whose transgression is forgiven." And yet, yes, and yet we may not forget the years of scars, the family quarrels, the children's sins. The consequences must come and inevitably as law. David, forgiven, must still know the frightful effects of that hour of mad indulgence.

"Trying It Out"

PLACE the emphasis on the last word of the phrase; that is where it belongs. Most people place it on the first, and that is why the percentage of failure is so large.

The world does not need initiative so much as it needs continuative. It is easier to start something than it is to keep it going, and lead or guide it to its proper finish.

The world has honored quite disproportionately those who discover principles, and those who make them work. In numberless instances those who see things first see them not clearly and not in relation to the larger whole.

The action which these seers begin waits for completion upon the second and larger vision of those who are to "try it OUT."

It is quite historical to say that the greatest men have been those most fortunate in their successors. It requires almost as high order of genius to understand and interpret a master as that which he himself possesses. Which was the greater genius, Turner or Ruskin?

Sometimes it happens that a great innovator is overwhelmed and swamped as to his vital ideals and purposes by the tide of contemporary opinion. His vision would perish were it not that some real continuator rescues him from his ostensible successors.

It is not without reason that Paul has been called the second founder of Christianity.

Christianity still needs to be tried OUT.

"The question is not, are we still Christians, but are we Christians YET."

This way of conceiving the matter at once exposes the fallacy and reveals the truth of that other aphorism: "Has Christianity failed? No, it has never been tried." It HAS been tried and is being tried. It will be tried OUT.

Its value in the small will not be fully apparent till it is applied in the large. The measure of its actual success lies in the extent to which it has really been tried; the appearance of failure is due to its not having yet been tried OUT.

One of the most optimistic utterances in all the scriptures is that word of Paul the great continuator. "Weary not in well-doing for in due season ye shall reap if ye faint not."

The doing of good is the sowing of seed, and seed may be depended upon to germinate and grow.

> "A wonderful thing is a seed
> The one thing deathless forever,
> Forever old and forever new,
> Fickle and faithless never."

The harvest season will duly come. Natural law will not fail in the spiritual world. There is a sure-working reciprocity and adaptation between living seed and the living universe. There is a conspiracy of productivity well-nigh impossible to defeat.

The world-music is scored in the major key of creative life.

> "Is this vile world a friend to grace,
> To help us on toward God?"

Modern faith replies, "God's world is not vile, and it is friendly to good. Good is more contagious than evil, as it is hardier and more permanent.

The teaching of the psalmist is corroborated by the spiritual history of the race.

The righteous is "like a tree planted by the streams of water that bringeth forth its fruit in its season."

The wicked are as "chaff which the wind driveth away."

The universe and right-doing are in pre-established harmony—the world is the heritage of men of good will.

Gerald Stanley Lee puts the matter in striking phrase thus: "Success is the science of being believed in. All business in the last resort turns on brains for being human and understanding people."

All this lies behind and supports Paul's optimism. "In due season ye shall reap if ye faint not."

Try goodness OUT! Weary not! "Most men who gave up would have won out if they had kept up." They did not await the "due season."

Why do men weary and faint in the good endeavors of life?

Some do not observe an adequate spiritual regimen. They do not wait upon the Lord, and the wings of their spirit droop.

Others do not keep themselves physically fit. It is hard for anaemic, dyspeptic, neurotic folk to "keep at it." They need to receive the spirit of God in a carrying medium of milk, raw eggs and vegetables.

Some grow weary because they have not had the necessary discipline of difficulty. They have not borne the yoke in their youth, and so are "softies" in their age.

They do not know how to "labor and to wait" for the "due season" of harvest. Like children they plant some seeds, and next day dig them up to see whether they are growing.

The world is full of raw and brash experimentalists who are always for trying out something else, just for the joy of novelty, just for the exhilaration of dancing around.

They do not really try out anything, because they are not deeply interested in securing a result. "The play's the thing." With them life is a game more than a mission and a task.

They do not try out anything because usually they take no sufficient account of the time factor involved in all great experiments with human life and growth. Nothing comes of this childish, flighty sort of attempt at well-doing, except disappointment and discouragement.

Jesus tried it OUT.

"Having loved his own he loved them unto the end." "I if be lifted up will draw all men unto me." He has been drawing them ever since. The experiment is working out, because he tried it out.

Paul's superb optimism affirms that at the end of the great experiment, however remote the due season may be, their lies inconceivable and glorious recompense.

The Disciples of Christ need to try OUT their principle of unity. If it will not work by the theological method of restoring primitive Christianity, doubtless it will succeed by the ethical method of realizing essential Christianity.

If it will not work by the scholastic method of "thinking out a way to right living," surely it will win through by the method of "living out a way to right thinking." If the people of God cannot unite upon a creed, they can unite upon deed.

All of which means that the Disciples are called today to try OUT as never before by practical experiment their principle of unity. We need no longer argue; we must practice. Any scepticism or discouragement with reference to our principle is due to our not having gone far enough with it.

"It is well to believe that there needs but a little more thought, a little more courage, more love, more devotion to life, a little more eagerness, one day to fling open wide the portals of joy and truth."

Try it OUT!

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY

The editor of The Christian Century has returned to the office and to a portion of his work again. By next week it is his hope to be in the harness as usual. He gladly takes occasion just now to express his appreciation of the able writers who have prepared the editorials and other portions of the paper during his absence. The effectiveness of their productions is indicated by the words of appreciation that are coming to us in each day's mail. Through the summer we are planning to enrich the pages of the paper and to make it, if possible, more vital and interesting than ever before.

AN UNFORTUNATE BEGINNING.

PROBLEMS connected with the work of the American Christian Missionary Society are many and difficult. Some are inherited from the unwisdom of past administrations and others are inherent in the very nature of the task the society sets itself to work at.

It has been generally hoped that the new administration of which President F. W. Burnham is the head would be able to meet the problems by which the society is confronted with a new vision and a statesmanship which would carry conviction and establish confidence throughout the brotherhood.

One of the first important steps proposed by the new leadership, however, tends seriously to weaken this hope.

In dealing with mission work in Chicago the board of the American Society, it seems, has been induced to abandon its long-established co-operation with the Chicago Missionary Society and has given out that it will hereafter conduct mission work in this city directly from Cincinnati without any authoritative local control of the mission funds, policies or workers.

The fact that the Society's action is taken under pressure of unusual circumstances in Chicago, involving a sinister and stubborn disaffection on the part of two or three men, is not to the point of our present contention, though it will be difficult to suppress these circumstances from the ultimate discussion.

We are now simply challenging the merit of the innovation the society is proposing to introduce.

This innovation is about as radical a departure from established precedent as any course the American Society could have adopted.

But it is not only a radical departure from precedent: it is also—and that is the main point of the criticism—a radical departure from the best standards of missionary administration.

It is coming more and more clearly to be discerned by mission boards, both home and foreign, that missionary funds can best be administered by a local organization composed of representatives of the churches of a particular city, or in the case of foreign missions by a body representative of the "station."

The abandonment of this policy by the American Society, in its work in Chicago—and we presume all other large cities where mission work is carried on—is therefore felt to be a decidedly reactionary step.

Its effect will be to bring confusion and waste into city missionary work and actual disorganization into the co-operative life of the churches of the city.

It is of great importance to the character of the Disciples' future work in the great cities of the land that the proposed step be duly considered before it is actually taken.

METROPOLITAN DAILY RIDICULES BAPTISM.

REPORTERS on a metropolitan daily are usually gentlement of refinement, but occasionally some rude fellow of the baser sort shocks the sensibilities of religious readers. Singularly out of taste was an article in the Chicago Tribune recently, with accompanying illustrations, which ridiculed a Baptist baptismal scene at Kankakee, Ill.

Along with the write-up were three pictures showing a minister immersing a young lady with the words underneath, "Going, Going, Gone." It is certain that this article and make-up were never shown to Dr. W. B. Norton, the cultured Methodist minister, who writes most of the religious news in this great daily.

PRESBYTERIANS RESTORE SECRETARY McAFEE.

PROMPT repeal of its action by the Presbyterian Board of Home Missions saved that denomination from a serious agitation over the dismissal of Joseph E. McAfee from its secretarial staff.

As reported in last week's Christian Century Mr. McAfee was removed from office after he had refused to resign. The action taken was in response to a certain reactionary protest in the denomination on account of Mr. McAfee's policy of co-operation with other Christian denominations in Home Mission work and because of his pronounced social service activities which it was alleged were not projected along socalled "evangelistic" lines.

Mr. McAfee will be remembered as one of the commission of Home Mission Secretaries which some two years ago made a survey of the whole northwestern frontier with the purpose of gathering data and outlining a policy of mission work in which all Christian bodies might share. Dr. I. N. McCash, represented the Disciples' home mission society on this commission.

Its report included among other things a description of much waste through overlapping conditions and advised that the various bodies should co-operate in a division of the field even if it required the abandonment of a superfluous church here and there in the interest of efficiency and unity.

Mr. McAfee holds that the Presbyterian church is engaged in higher business than merely the making of Presbyterians. The Kingdom of God he does not identify with his denomination, but regards his denomination and others as instruments of the Kingdom.

He concedes frankly that there may be places and situations where it is better for the Kingdom that a Presbyterian church be not established, and that there are places and situations where it would advance Christ's work for an already existent Presbyterian church to withdraw.

This kind of doctrine and the policy based thereupon drew a loud-voiced opposition to the front seat and the board thought the noise it heard was the voice of the whole Presbyterian church. So it dismissed Mr. McAfee.

But it soon discovered its delusion. We can best tell the rest of the story, however, and the interpretation thereof, in the words of the Continent, the leading Presbyterian newspaper:

> "An absolute storm of letters of protest rained down on its president from every quarter of the country, and those who supposed Mr. McAfee unpopular had early cause to change their opinion—after which with excellent wisdom they also changed their votes. The whole incident, though painful in many particulars, has been so instructive that no one could wish it had not happened. Neither in General Assembly nor anywhere else will the notion reappear—this year at least—that the church is controlled by a reactionary spirit. Like every other live American institution in this epoch, Presbyterianism is progressive and wants leadership only from 'forward looking men,' as President Wilson would say. With that fact established by such a noteworthy demonstration, many other problems besides the home mission problem become easier of solution than they have hitherto seemed."

This action of the Presbyterian Board will strengthen the hand of progressive forces in every Christian body.

"When a child cries over its broken toy, the true mother does not laugh at it. Rather she comforts it tenderly, while knowing the real slightness of the loss. So God, the true Father of all spirits, does not turn from any sorrow His children suffer, but comforts them even in the smallest troubles and mistakes."

IT IS NOT written, Blessed is he that feedeth the poor, but he that considereth the poor. A little thought and a little kindness are often worth more than a great deal of money.—Ruskin.

* * *

We shall profit by all that befalls us. If it is good and necessary for us to be humbled—if we cannot do anything right till we are humbled—then be sure God means all that he sends us for this purpose. Sometimes it may be a great trouble, sometimes a little vexing trouble; one may do the work as well as the other.—F. D. Maurice.

The Larger Christian World

A Department of Interdenominational Acquaintance.

Chief's Daughter Becomes Missionary.

One of the most remarkable missionaries of the Home Board of the Presbyterian church, is Mrs. Suzanne La Flesche Picotte, M. D., of the Omaha tribe of Indians. She was a daughter of the old chief Joseph La Flesche, received her medical education in Philadelphia, and is now in charge of the Presybterian hospital at Walthill, Neb.

Back From South American Tour.

Bishop Stuntz, of the Methodist Episcopal church, is back for a time from his great continental field of South America. He reports the stopping of much business by the war, with resulting distress and difficulty, both in secular and religious work. Nevertheless, there is a great advance in spiritual things; the membership increase for the whole Methodist work being eighteen per cent during the year. The bishop will tell his story of South America in a hundred places before he goes back next fall, and it will help to make the two Americas understand each other better, and love each other more.

Prayer for War-horses.

The religious feeling of the Russians is always one of their prominent characteristics, but John R. Mott has reported a very interesting addition to the litany of the national church which provides a prayer for the horses that draw the implements and supplies of war. It reads: "And for those also, O Lord, the humble beasts who with us bear the burden and heat of the day, and offer their guiltless lives for the well-being of their country, we supplicate thy great tenderness of heart, for thou hast promised to save both man and beast, and great is thy loving-kindness, O Master, Saviour of the world."

Catholics and Jews Give Methodists Books.

A beautifully bound set of the Catholic Encylopedia was recently given to the Iliff School of Theology, Denver, Colo., by Mr. J. K. Mullen, a Roman Catholic layman and a prominent business man of Denver, who is held by all in high esteem. It is interesting to note that the school possesses a set of the Jewish Cyclopedia, which was the gift of a Jew, former Senator Guggenheim. Both gifts were made as a mark of the high personal esteem in which their donors held Bishop Warren, and the Catholic Encyclopedia is inscribed by Mr. Mullen to Bishop Warren's memory.

Illinois Has Sunday-school Convention.

The fifty-seventh annual convention of the Illinois State Sunday-school Association will be held at Danville, June 15-17. The convention theme is "The Whole Bible for the Whole Community" and the convention aims are: "Christ effectively obeyed; children intelligently taught; communities efficiently served."

Episcopalians Will Promote Evangelism.

Though the word "evangelism" is not often found in Episcopalian vocabulary, something very like an evangelistic movement will be found in this communion next winter. They have a Commission on a Nation-wide Preaching Mission, and this commission is arranging for special services in the churches all over the country, to be held during Advent. At the last general convention the following resolution was adopted: "Whereas, our age calls in no uncertain way for a revival of the prophetic ministry, and a re-emphasis upon the certain and unchanging words of eternal truth that pertain to salvation; and, Whereas, a new accent needs to be placed upon the essential solidarity, as well as the broad catholicity of a church that witnesses to and seeks to promote faith and order; therefore be it resolved, the House of Bishops concurring, That this church in general convention assembled registers its desire and will to undertake a preaching mission of nation-wide proportions, that in its scope shall be inclusive of the church at large, and whose sole purpose and aim shall be the salvation of men through Him whose Name is above every name."

Chicago Teachers Will Avoid Religion.

The religious question in Chicago is an urgent one, determining the issue in municipal elections, and producing embarrassments in the administration of the public schools. A former rule of the school board is amplified at a recent meeting so that every teacher or other employee of the board is prohibited from asking pupils of the religion of their parents, and is also prevented from inviting pupils to attend any religious service. The passage of this rule was opposed by the Catholic members of the board.

Boys Will Walk to C. E. Convention.

Two boys have started to walk from Waxahachie, Tex., to the World's Christian Endeavor convention in Chicago which will be held July 7-14. They will carry a message from Governor Ferguson of their native state to President Wilson, who is expected to be in Chicago, provided affairs of state permit. A series of Christian Endeavor rallies is planned in each town which the boys will visit while they are en route. The plans for a great convention are meeting with encouragement and it is confidently predicted that twenty thousand people will be in attendance.

Hugh Black to Assist R. J. Campbell.

Prof. Hugh Black left New York City recently, sailing for London, where he will spend the summer. He will assist Rev. R. J. Campbell in the City Temple, the leading Congregational church of England.

Russian Baptist Leader in America.

Rev. Wm. Fetler, head of the Baptist movement in Russia, was recently exiled from that country because his German name aroused the suspicion of the government. He is a Lett, and his large church in Petrograd is largely Lettish. On being exiled he visited Lapland for a time but has since come to America. Here he will speak at conventions under the auspices of the Baptist Home Mission Society on the Russian Baptist work. In America, the Russian immigrant is being reached by a Methodist mission in New York, two Disciple missions in New York and Chicago and several Baptist missions. The Presbyterians have done something with the Russian Molokanee in San Francisco, a Quaker-like sect. The visit of Rev. Mr. Fetler to America will doubtless result in stirring up interest in the Russian immigrant and develop means to help him.

Anglicans and Nonconformists Co-operate.

The Anglicans and Free churches are co-operating in certain parts of England to reach the non-church-goers with the religious message. This is especially true at Todmorden, Lancashire, where a co-operative house-to-house canvass has been made. The clergy of the Anglican church and the Free church ministers joined in prayer-meetings.

One Pastorate in a Lifetime.

Dr. John F. Cowan, D. D., who died April 5 at Fulton, Mo., was for fifty-four years pastor of the Presbyterian church at Auxvasse, Mo., and this was his only pastorate. He began his ministerial career in 1861, and died in his 79th year.

Congregationalists Gain Members.

The Congregational denomination consolidated a number of churches last year so they show a loss of three churches. They gained 12,989 members. The gain in Sunday-school pupils was most noteworthy, being 56,413.

Peace Lessons for the Sunday-school.

Peace lessons for the graded series of International Sunday-school lessons have been prepared under the direction of the Commission on Christian Education of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America, by Prof. Norman E. Richardson, of Boston.

Protestantism in Spain.

The Presbyterians have dedicated a church edifice in the center of Madrid, Spain, said to be "as fine as any in Scotland." The venerable Senor Tornos, at one time court preacher to Queen Isabella, assisted at the dedication. Rev. Franklin Smith, a devoted English Wesleyan missionary at Barcelona, reports a very favorable change of public opinion about his work.

New Methodist Pastor for New York.

The Rev. Worth M. Tippy, D. D., pastor of Epworth Memorial M. E. church, Cleveland, has been transferred to Madison Avenue M. E. church of New York. He has been in Cleveland nine years and leaves a church of 1,650 members who are well organized for all forms of religious work.

Many New Members in New York Church.

Dr. Chas. F. Reisner, a Methodist pastor of New York, is widely known interdenominationally on account of a number of books on church methods. That his plans will work is shown by the fact that he has received 440 new members the past conference year in a city where religious work is notoriously difficult.

New President of Sunday-school Forces.

The death of Dr. H. M. Hamill, president of the International Sunday-school Association, has been noted. E. K. Warren of Three Oaks, Mich., has been elected to succeed him.

Mr. Hearst and Billy Sunday.

A committee of twenty Chicago pastors selected by the Chicago American, Mr. Hearst's paper, went to Paterson, N. J., last week on a special train chartered at Mr. Hearst's expense, to present a petition to "Billy" Sunday asking him to hold an evangelistic meeting in Chicago next winter or spring. Mr. Sunday had already given assurance that he would come to Chicago within two years, but it is believed that his presence next spring would be a great factor in the anti-saloon campaign that will come to an issue at the polls in April, 1916. Fifty thousand names had been gathered in a petition by a systematic canvass conducted by the "American." This petition was unrolled in Mr. Sunday's room at Paterson where he received the ministers dressed in his bath-robe "immediately following the missage and rub-down which his physical trainer regularly gives him after every service."

Bishop Samuel Fallows, in presenting the petition, said: "When you come to Chicago you will find there the greatest opportunity in your career. Chicago is waiting, expecting, pleading, praying that you will come next January. This petition, made possible by the generous cooperation of the Chicago American, should convince you beyond the shadow of a doubt of the widespread demand that exists in our city that you should conduct a real revival there. William Randolph Hearst, through his great newspapers, has contributed $1,000 to the campaign fund and has expended money and effort without stint to forward the movement. He has declared that his great newspapers will help in every possible way to forward the success of this campaign."

Mr. Sunday encouraged the committee to believe that he desired to come to Chicago next January, but he was already engaged at Trenton, N. J., and at Baltimore for the late winter and spring season. He advised the committee to visit Trenton and request the committee there to exchange dates with Chicago. This the committee did. A final answer from both Trenton and Baltimore is expected this week.

Mr. Sunday closed his revival in Paterson last Sunday night reporting 15,000 "converts" and a public offering of $25,000 for himself in addition to many uncounted private gifts made to Mr. and Mrs. Sunday personally. It is said their private gifts amount to as much or more than the public free-will offering.

Episcopalian Rector Practices Immersion.

The Living Church, an Episcopalian weekly of the "High Church" persuasion, startles its readers with a two column halftone showing a rector immersing a candidate in the presence of a great throng of people. The administrator is the Rev. John H. Griffith, rector of St. Mary's church, Kinston, N. C. The occasion was most impressive, and probably everybody felt the solemnity of the service, for upon the Rev. Mr. Griffith's leaving the water a young man, who is a mute, went up to him and asked to be baptized. The following Wednesday evening he was baptized, and immediately confirmed by Bishop Darst. Bishop Darst was in Kinston at the time of the baptismal service, and confirmed twenty-one candidates for the local parish, ten of whom were men of ages up to 65 years and heads of families. The Rev. John H. Griffith has been rector of St. Mary's parish since his ordination to the priesthood in 1898. During the past conciliar year, which ended April 30th, this missionary has presented fifty-six for confirmation, baptized thirty-two of whom fifteen were immersed.

Richest Church in America Has Deficit.

Some churches have looked longingly for the time when they might operate a budget without a deficit. It will doubtless discourage them to learn that the richest church in America had a large deficit last year. From the Year Book of Trinity Parish, of New York (Episcopal), just issued, consisting of 500 pages, it is learned that while the total assets are $16,096,251.99, there is a large deficit, caused by the fact that, "although the income is large, the work is still larger." Free-will offerings amounted to $109,827. The parish spent $305,486.96 for maintenance, and $26,466.66 for gifts outside the parish. It paid taxes on $15,403,700, and its notes payable amount to $4,000,000. The number of communicants is 8,944; the baptisms were 399; the confirmations, 408; the marriages, 301. The Sunday-school enrollment is 3,182, with 345 officers and teachers. In regard to its untaxed property, Dr. Manning says that Trinity "is in the position of a benefactor to the community, not of a beneficiary."

Is Pope Incarnation of the Christ?

While the Modernist movement in the Roman Catholic church, under great difficulty undertakes to lead the great communion toward the light of the new day in religion, certain obscurantist forces are leading quite in the opposite direction. Certain Jesuits are spreading a conception of the Pope which is not unlike the emperor worship of ancient Rome. Dean Inge, writing in the British Guardian, gives a number of examples of this. One of the more striking is the following: "Two or three years ago a Jesuit, preaching in Notre Dame (Pere Coube, if my memory is correct), cried, 'Our Father which art at the Vatican, hallowed be thy name, thy kingdom come,' etc. He was quite sincere, and did not understand that he was making an idolatrous parody of the sublime prayer of the gospel." A translation of a sermon by a French priest named Milet, Cure-Doyen de la Roe, which is rendered freely is as follows: "When we prostrate ourselves before the Holy Sacrament, we adore our Savior, Jesus Christ, in his eucharistic presence, which is a substantial and personal presence. When we fall at the feet of the Pope to pay him the homage of our souls, promising him to keep his commandments, it is in a certain way our Savior Jesus Christ that we adore in his doctrinal presence. In either case, we adore, we confess, the same Jesus Christ. Whence it results by a necessary consequence, that it is quite as impossible to be a good Christian without devotion to the Pope, as without devotion to the Eucharist."

The Church of the Social Revolution.

There is a tendency for the Christian Socialists of America to withdraw from the organized churches and form independent congregations. This tendency does not receive the approval of the Christian Socialist movement of the country nor of its journal. Rev. Bouck White of New York has achieved fame through writing a very startling biography of Jesus called "The Call of the Carpenter." He has organized in New York the Church of the Social Revolution and has been its pastor for two or three years. He presided recently in Boston at the founding in Berkeley Hall of the Boston Church of the Social Revolution. Rev. Harry Phillips was ordained its minister, several hundred signed the covenant, and a red flag with white letters was adopted as its insignia. The hall was crowded. After several preliminary addresses, Mr. White explained the purpose of the church as follows:

"It shall be our aim to bring together economics and religion, to strip religion of its aristocratic frippery, and to reveal it as the true aid to the economic independence of all."

Rev. Harry Phillips then stepped forward while Mr. White said: "I hereby ordain you a minister of God in Boston of the Church of the Social Revolution." Mr. White then, after a further exposition of the church's principles, requested all who wished to come forward and sign the covenant, which read: "I enlist under the lord of the blood-red banner, to bring to an end a scheme of things that has enthroned leisure on the back of labor, an idle class sucking the substance of the poor. I will not be a social climber, but will stay with the workers in class solidarity till class shall have been done away in fellowship's glad dawn. I will seek recruits for the Church of the Social Revolution unto the overthrow of the present-day society, and its rebuilding into comradeship."

Church Paper Condemns the Germans.

The expressions of the religious press following the Lusitania catastrophe vary from mild protest to vigorous condemnation. Among the journals stating the case more vigorously is the Continent, the leading weekly of the northern Presbyterians. This paper calls the catastrophe "a deed at which savages would blanch." It goes on to express the editorial attitude in this wise: "Christians of the United States have sincerely sought to observe that neutrality of feeling which was enjoined on them by President Wilson as a duty to their own nation and which was besought of them by German sympathizers in the name of fairness in an inscrutable conflict. And beyond question, they still desire and purpose, in common with the mass of their fellow citizens, that neutrality be maintained politically. But the sinking of the Lusitania makes moral neutrality impossible to an unfettered Christian man. Can a Christian be neutral in a matter of unprovoked murder? He must denounce it or be himself stained with the guilt of an accessory."

Death of Dr. B. A. Greene.

Dr. Benjamin A. Greene was a professorial lecturer at the University of Chicago at the time of his death, May 12, 1915. He had been one of the leading Baptist pastors of America and had a long and noteworthy pastorate in Evanston, a suburb of Chicago, before going to the university. Though of an older generation, he was thoroughly modern in his thinking.

Religious Guidance for Illinois Senate.

The members of the state senate of Illinois will receive spiritual ministrations from all the leading denominations this year. A chaplain will be appointed for each week of the session by Lieutenant-Governor O'Hara. The Methodist representative was Rev. J. W. Ferris, of Colfax, who is a chaplain of the Illinois National Guard, having held this position since the Spanish-American war. He will go into camp with the militia at Dixon, Ill., this year.

Here and There

ELBERT HUBBARD.

Fate played a strange prank with the man who boasted that he would interview the Kaiser at St. Helena. He who wrote so fiercely against the war fell an innocent victim to its unreasoning frenzy.

Many of those who will write about him may remind us that he was neither scholar, sage nor saint, all of which may be interesting but is no more germane than to say that he did not invent an aeroplane or discover America. Possibly, I may fall into the easy task of explaining a personality by mere negatives before I get through, though I hope to be saved therefrom. Hubbard was not an ideal in many respects, but to thousands of people he was the livest wire of his day.

He was the jester of the age. His eccentricities of dress and manner took the place of cap and bells. Had he lived a thousand years ago his name would have come to us as the fool who made his king famous. He had a habit of tweaking the nose of many traditions and customs often for the purpose of amusing the bystanders and nothing more. He lived two-thirds of his days in the world of jest and the other third in the world of earnest. He could caricature as few men could. His free and easy style of writing "took" with a great many people who like amusement in balloon-like capsules and instruction in pellet form. Many of his epigrams were sermons in vestpocket editions, always sparkling and quotable. His racy language often shocked the proprieties and even went into the debatable border land. Everything within sight must be made to contribute a smile or a laugh; the sea must be put through a wringer to get at its gold. If there were no jokes in the world East Aurora would not have been possible.

Elbert Hubbard reduced the study of "what the people wanted" to a science. Then he resolutely set himself to work to give them that. He discerned the doctrine of the main chance while the majority could not see it with a microscope. He studied the language of the crowd and entered into their thinking with them. He became more of a comrade than a leader of that large group of people who hold the creed of one world at a time, those who say to their own souls, "Let us eat and drink for tomorrow we die," who hold life to their lips as an orange today, no matter if skin and pulp are all that remain tomorrow. Elbert Hubbard was a Philistine among Israelites, a dissenter within the borders of the establishment, an agnostic who lived on familiar terms with the thinking and speech of the orthodox.

It is barely necessary to say more than a word about his habit of ridiculing the Church and the ministry. He was so fond of a jest here that he never cared to be just. Mirth, in his sight, covered a multitude of sins. As long as he provoked a laugh the end sought was obtained. Few men of serious minds ever deigned a reply, knowing how difficult it is to reply to a sneer; but the friends of this lamented caricaturist would not restrain their indignation if it were known that his victims did not cherish a wholesome resentment for his methods of warfare. That resentment is deep and abiding. At a time when the Church is doing the greatest and best work that it has ever done, the ridicule of one of its enemies seems as unjust as it is untimely. That he could see nothing but superstitions, foibles and follies in a day when the heart of the Church is racked with pain because of its own sense of inefficiency, argues his own lack of appreciation for those who had a better sense of the world's need and the ability required to meet that need than he. It is too bad that he chose to be a clown when he might have been a voice crying in the wilderness. But his friends need not think that any aspersions will be cast upon his memory, now that his voice is still. The same people who suffered from his stings in silence will drop the mantle of charity over his faults.

That same class lament that he came to such an untimely end, for they appreciated his powers, laughed at his jokes, winced under his flings, and hoped now and then that he would mellow with the years, and let up. They rejoice at the success that he won, while never allowing their appreciation to blind them to faults for which excuse seems difficult. He made a place for himself in the world, rising like hundreds before him from the great common people and holding a high place in their ranks. He represented the "get there Eli" spirit of the age, and he reached his goal.

A WORD OF EXPLANATION.

For some weeks we have had house-cleaning, paper-hanging and painting at the parsonage, and I was as the man who sat among the tombs. I believe that the house-cleaning argument was a solar-plexus to those who in the long ago advocated a settled location instead of dwelling in tents. The tent survived many, many years in the face of the annual domestic cyclone. I never fully appreciated the charm of the ancient slogan, "To your tents, O Israel!" until now, though in former years when I read it the bugles started blowing in my ears. When, in these recent weeks, I was persecuted in one room, I fled into another, and like Noah's dove could find no place to light, or sit down. Those in charge of the operations offensive and expensive have agreed to a truce, and the prospects for an explanation that will explain the presence of domestic torpedoes and other contraband of war, are growing brighter every day. So if any unseemly language creeps into this department, know all men, that it was provoked and amply justified by the perverse practise of putting the rollers under a good man year after year.

O for a lodge in some vast wilderness!

TWO KINDS OF INFIDELITY.

One is that which denies the existence of a God and acts accordingly. The other affirms the existence of God, but acts as if there were no God. Some men are fond of calling men infidels who do not agree with many accepted conclusions, though the lives of these dissenters are no whit inferior to the lives of those who denounce and brand. We ought to remind ourselves that a man who does not provide for his own household has denied the faith and is worse than an infidel. So even the infidel has not sunk to the deepest depths!

The infidelity of dissent among Christian peoples is a shining virtue compared with that spirit which assumes to be orthodox, but often lacks the homely grace of being kind.

THE WORLD DO MOVE.

As I write, a great prohibition meeting is being held a few blocks distant. I hastened down after dinner to show my loyalty to the cause, wondering whether the speakers would have a respectable hearing, although they are known all over the state. One is a United States Senator, the other was a candidate for the governorship a few years ago. Imagine my surprise to find standing room at a premium, crowds being turned away. I stayed long enough to hear the familiar arguments applauded which fifteen years ago were received by all except the few in contemptuous silence. Then the hearers would have numbered twenty-five or fifty, while a houseful would have made us yearn for the spirit of humility, lest we should be exalted above measure. Then no man of any prominence in politics would have touched prohibition with anything but a gatling gun. To advocate such a measure would have been political death. His zeal would have been expended in fighting the temperance cranks "who were doing more harm to the temperance cause than the distillers." Well, as it was in the beginning, is now, and ever shall be, the pioneers do the work, endure the pain, while others wear the crown. So don't get discouraged if good causes move slowly.

ALEXANDER CAMPBELL ON ORTHODOXY.

In the early days when Mr. Campbell and his co-workers were in the minority, they were shut out of churches, reviled and abused, as all heretics are. They were not ashamed of that appellative. They knew that heresy is an opprobrious word used by majorities to kill off reform movements and to entrench themselves in power. They also knew that the heresy of today may be the orthodoxy of tomorrow, and they were content to endure hardness as good soldiers—and to wait. Those who held the fathers up to scorn are now hidden beneath the mantle of a Christian oblivion. But here is what Mr. Campbell said about orthodoxy:

"Who that has his eyes open has not seen that men of the lowest intellect and of the lowest moral endowments are the most zealous in the cause of orthodoxy—and the reason is, they are conscious that unless they can raise a clamor about orthodoxy they are likely to pass off the stage as they ought? I have always found those of the most orthodox scent the slowest in the race, and the loudest in the sound. The foremost hound makes the least noise in the course, but those hindmost are always sounding, lo here! lo there!"

What ho! Ye brethren who denounce all those who do not accept your conclusions, ponder well the above and mend your ways.

E. B. BARNES.

Disciples Table Talk

Mr. Weaver's Three Years at Pendleton.

The resignation of Tolbert F. Weaver from the pastorate of First church, Pendelton, Ore., to take effect Aug. 1, brings to light the facts of a successful and faithful three years' ministry. Upon assuming his work in 1912 he found the church heavily burdened with debt and with a dwindling membership. Through an aggressive campaign which he inaugurated a year ago, a note of $8,400 was paid off and an additional $600 paid on another debt. There have been 185 additions to the church since his incumbency, new improvements have been made to the church building and there has been increased life and enthusiasm in the congregation. These statements are made upon the authority of the officers of the church. The congregation feels a great sense of loss in his resignation. When he announced his intention to leave recently, several of the leading members of the church arose and spoke in such terms of praise of his work there that the minister was much moved. Mr. Weaver will attend the Oregon state convention in July, and the General Convention at Los Angeles, going thereafter to his old home in Texas. He expects not to be ready for a new pastorate until the end of the present year.

A Pastoral "At Home."

Dr. and Mrs. Finis Idleman of Central church, Des Moines, Ia., gave the evenings of an entire week to the gracious task of being "at home" to the membership of their church in a series of receptions. The congregation is enthusiastic over the event.

Adopt Vestments, Then Resign Them.

The choir of Central church, Des Moines, Ia., some time ago adopted the custom of wearing vestments in the service. Their motive was to displace the ornate and varicolored hat and gown of the street with a simple and undistracting vestment. On hearing that there were in the congregation some who feared the effect of the new custom the choir voluntarily laid them aside and resumed the former garb. The episode caused some favorable comment in the Christian Worker, Central's parish paper, an elder of the congregation making it the text for an article in praise of the gracious spirit of the choir.

Oklahoma Convention.

Oklahoma State Convention will be held at First church, Oklahoma City, May 31 to June 3.

Hugh McLellan in Union Meeting.

Hugh McLellan, pastor at San Antonio, Tex., is holding a union evangelistic meeting at Brownsville, Tex., participated in by all the Protestant churches of the place.

Public Interest in Organ Dedication.

Central church, Spokane, Wash., has just installed a beautiful pipe organ in their house of worship. The instrument was dedicated on May 21 with a concert by Edward Kreisler, organist at Dr. Combs' church in Kansas City. The fact that Central church has been for many years a downtown meeting-place for many public gatherings beside its own services prompted many public men, including the mayor of the city and prominent pastors of other churches, to write to the local press urging the people to attend the opening recital on the organ and thereby aid in paying for the new instrument. The pastor, J. E. Davis, and his services to the city, are held in high regard by the entire citizenship.

Another Pastor Given Automobile.

The congregation of South Street church Springfield, Mo., voted recently to give the pastor, F. L. Moffett, an automobile as a mark of affection and an aid to efficiency.

First, St. Louis, Location Decided.

First church, St. Louis, John L. Brandt, pastor, has purchased the property of Delmar Baptist church, 4300 Delmar avenue, for $21,000. It has been the sentiment of the members of the First Christian church to move westward and several weeks ago a proposition was submitted to purchase the Delmar avenue property.

Bequest for Girard, Ill., Church.

By the will of the late Miss Hattie Shepherd, one of the oldest members of the congregation in Girard, Ill., the church there was left $500 to be kept as a distinct fund, the interest to be collected annually and held for church purposes under the direction of the trustees.

Butler Man Wins Yale Honors.

F. E. Davison, a graduate of Butler college, carried off the first Downes prize for the highest proficiency in the public reading of the Scriptures and of hymns in the Yale School of Religion. The prize is worth $30.

Louisville Institute Graduates Three.

Graduation exercises of the Louisville Christian Institute were held at the First Christian church recently and three young ministers were presented with diplomas. The graduates were W. L. Foster, pastor of Christian churches at Cecilia and White Mills, Ky.; W. H. Stewart, pastor of churches at Rolling Fork and Pleasant Hill, and John E. Lord. Addresses were made by D. W. Scott, dean of the institute and pastor of Parkland Christian church, Dr. E. L. Powell, pastor First Christian church, and members of the graduating class. The institute was formed three years ago by First church, and has for it object the training of Sunday-school teachers, missionaries and men for the ministry. Classes are held at night in the Sunday-school rooms of the church. About thirty students were enrolled this year.

Church Unity in Religious Education

Under the directorship of Pastor Charles M. Watson, of First church, Norfolk, Va., there has just been brought to successful completion a seventeen weeks' School of Religious Training and Social Service. The significant fact about the school was its community character. It was not an affair of a single congregation, much less a denominational enterprise, but gathered its students and faculty from all churches of the city. It was projected and carried out in the spirit of service with no thought of sectarian gain. Two hundred and eight students were enrolled. The average attendance was 185. Besides the regular departmental courses there were provided professional courses in Sociology, Pedagogy, Boy Training and Missions. The Presbyterian and Methodist pastors were members of the faculty, the president of the "Inter-Church Conference" under whose auspices the school was organized was a Methodist layman. The Bible lecturer was the pastor of the First Presbyterian church and the sessions were all held in the beautifully appointed Sunday-school building recently erected by the Disciples church. Some one asked Mr. Watson, the Disciple pastor, what he and his church "would get out of it." "The question startled me," writes Mr. Watson, "for it represented the attitude that seems to prevail in so much of congregational life. My answer to the question was that the consciousness of showing forth as a congregation the spirit of Jesus Christ who came not to be ministered unto but to minister, was what we got out of it." The school will be repeated next year beginning in October.

Why Dr. Chilton is a Disciple

The Y. M. C. A. at St. Joseph, Mo., has been lending its auspices to a series of addresses by leading pastors on their reasons for belonging to their respective denominations. Dr. C. M. Chilton spoke for the Disciples. He said in part:

"I have no desire to engage in debate on these Christian matters. If there was a time for the cultivation of differences it has passed, it is now time for the cultivation of agreements. But I am asked to join in a fraternal statement of the Christian situation.

"As I look back over forty years in this nation there have been many changes, and they are very encouraging One can hardly realize that these are the same churches we had then, we have all greatly changed. Vulgar materialism was rampant in the churches in those days, and narrowness and deep, bitter prejudices everywhere. Today there is sanity and a growing friendliness, except among the belated ones.

"During these years there has been a gradual conformation of doctrine and practice till we are not aware how near we have come to one another. We are practically agreed upon the great facts and doctrines of our religion. We do not question one another's standing. This is the most encouraging sign of the times.

"I go with those who call themselves Christians because I like their passion for unity. Jesus made His church one and prayed that it might continue one. The apostles warned them against division. One of the secrets of the wonderful power of the early church was its unity. The church of today is sadly narrowed and weakened by its divisions.

"Then I believe in the program of unity by way of a return to Christ and his teachings. I do not believe the church will ever unite on any human platform. Other foundation can no man lay than that is laid, which is Jesus Christ. I like the exaltation of Christ and His word. I like the New Testament names and practices. I like being with a people who are trying to work out the meanings of religion as they appear in the church. Have others these same aims? Are others engaged upon these same tasks? We bid them Godspeed and pray for a day when we shall all 'see eye to eye, and speak the same thing.'"

New Preacher Introduces Himself

Launching his pastorate at Central church, Houston, Tex., H. King Pendleton, dwelt on the difficulties that Paul faced when he entered Corinth and contrasted them with the more favorable and stimulating circumstances which attend the new minister's entrance into Houston. Concluding his frank and humble address Mr. Pendleton said: "I ask you to bear with my egotism if I take a few moments to introduce myself. I am not a man of eloquence or of great literary parts. I have studied, for thirty-three years, how to use the simplest language and put my thoughts in the clearest expressions in order that the children might understand my message and they have honored my ministry; my churches have been thronged with young people wherever I have ministered. I have no brilliancy; I only have some power to create enthusiasm and transform it into Christian service.

"Wherever my ministry has been fruitful it has been because the churches have worked and have won success. If you are looking to me to do anything startling I had better resign now. But if you will go on to do great things I can succeed here as elsewhere by being the honored pastor of a church that is doing great things for Christ and humanity. If you are going to do great things it must be in the power of love first to Jesus the Christ, a love that pours itself out in deep devotion and untiring service."

Mr. Pendleton recently resigned at Independence, Mo., in order to go to Houston, where he succeeds W. S. Lockhart.

Endeavor Session at Los Angeles.

National Secretary of Christian Endeavor Claude E. Hill has announced that Saturday evening has been appointed for the Christian Endeavor session at the General Convention at Los Angeles next July. The speakers will be Addison L. Cole, of Carthage, Ill.; Leon V. Shaw, of Los Angeles; Austin Hunter, of Chicago, and Dr. George H. Combs, of Kansas City. Mr. Hill will preside. The Endeavor hour, 6:15, on Sunday evening, will be used as a great testimony meeting with talks by many speakers from all parts of the country.

Mrs. Lindsay in Demand.

Mrs. Catherine F. Lindsay of Springfield, Ill., is in much demand for missionary addresses on convention programs in many states. She has recently spoken in Ohio and at several district conventions in Illinois. Mrs. Lindsay's messsage came out of her life-long study of missions and her recent tour of investigation of the Chinese and Japanese missionary situation.

Fourth Illinois District Convention.

The attractive program of the Fourth Illinois District convention, to be held June 1 and 2 at Paxton, includes addresses by Mrs. Catherine F. Lindsay, State Secretary John R. Golden, L. G. Huff, H. H. Jenner, Miss Bertha Lacock, Miss Jennie Call and others. Guy B. Williamson, pastor at Paxton, will lead the music. Among the larger churches in the district are those of Bloomington, Eureka, and Gibson City.

Mr. Marshall Convalescing.

L. J. Marshall, pastor Wabash Avenue church, Kansas City, who recently underwent an operation for appendicitis, has been taken from the hospital to his home and is recovering very satisfactorily. E. E. Violett, the evangelist, is acceptably supplying Mr. Marshall's pulpit during the pastor's illness.

They Take the Sunday-school Seriously.

First church, Wellington, Kans., has a remarkable Sunday-school in at least two particulars. One is the regular attendance of officers and teachers, which is almost 100 per cent, and the other is that every member of the church board—elders, deacons and deaconesses—attend the school regularly. Few schools have such a record. Henry W. Hunter is the pastor.

Sunday Evening Exchanges.

Dr. George H. Combs is exchanging pulpits with five Kansas City pastors on Sunday evenings, giving them a chance to speak to his people on the subject. "What Should the Church Do for Kansas City That It Is Not Now Doing?" The speakers are conspicuous leaders in the ministry of the various evangelical denominations. Dr. Combs will himself conclude the series with a sermon on the same theme.

Dr. Breeden Given Happy Welcome.

Upon the return of Dr. H. O. Breeden from his evangelistic meeting in Springfield, Mo., to his home in Fresno, Cal., a large crowd of his friends and church members assembled at the train, greeted him with a shower of roses, and escorted him to his home.

Baseball on Sunday Evenings.

C. R. Stauffer, pastor Norwood church, Cincinnati, is preaching a series of sermons on "The Game of Life," which are proving quite popular on Sunday evenings. The themes are as follows: "Play Ball," "Safe Hit," "Reaching First Base," "Sacrifice Hit," "Dying on Third," "Errors," "Safe at Home," "The Great Umpire and His Rules." The congregation is exhorted to "get into the game and help build up a congregation that will pack the church each Sunday evening."

A Genius for Difficult Service.

Mark Wayne Williams seems to have a genius for difficult fields of Christian ministry. Nearly ten years of labor among the churches of England, culminating in an effort to save the West London Tabernacle, were followed by five years of out and out pioneer work in Milwaukee, Wis., resulting in a brand new congregation strongly welded together in affection and purposes and housed in a tasteful and commodious church home. And now, as though that were not enough of difficulty, he has undertaken the pastoral guidance of the St. James Street church, Boston, where he will find the same type of problem with which he has labored for fifteen years. Mr. Williams is the son of Rev. J. Madison Williams, one of Iowa's best known Disciple ministers.

Greeting the New Pastor.

The first Sunday of the new pastorate of J. Boyd Jones at Central church, Terre Haute, Ind., was advertised in the church calendar and throughout the city a "J. Boyd Jones Day." A large attendance greeted the new pastor both at Sunday-school and the church services.

Gains for the Easter Offering.

The Easter offering of The National Benevolent Association up to May 4 was $17,262.24. The amount for the same number of days last year was $16,529.10. It is hoped that this gain of $733.14 is an indication that a larger offering will be received this year than last. The association's work has grown to large proportions. The demands for service made by churches and pastors upon the homes were never so heavy. The amount of assistance being given by the association to our Lord's needy ones was never so great. All the homes are filled.

Old Bethany Church on Fire.

The old church edifice at Bethany, W. Va., was discovered to be afire on May 11, but by quick action the blaze was put out before serious injury was done. The building was erected in 1850 and is one of the old landmarks of the place and possesses a peculiar place in the hearts of Disciples because of Alexander Campbell's relation to it. The new house of worship now nearing completion will be used for all church work, but it is understood that provision has been made to preserve the old church on account of its historic interest. The fire is believed to have been of incendiary origin, and the community is much agitated over it.

Auto Service for Sunday-school.

A plan for making permanent use of an elaborate automobile service to bring people to Sunday-school was put into operation by First church, Oklahoma City, on a recent Sunday. Forty-four automobiles each made three trips between 9:00 and 9:30 a. m. from various stations which had been established in all parts of the city. Special heed was given to elderly people and children. The stations were in each case removed some distance from the street car lines. The attendance at Sunday-school was considerably increased by the plan and it is expected to continue it indefinitely. H. E. Van Horn is pastor of First church.

Disciple "Bishops" at Last Identified!

The Christian Century has received several letters of inquiry concerning an item in the World Almanac for 1915 describing a so-called "United Christian Conference of the Disciples of Christ." The article claimed that one who styled himself "The Right Rev. St. D. Martin, Bishop of Columbia" was the head of the new organization which represented the "progressive" wing of the Disciples and connected The Christian Century with the alleged organization as its official organ. The New York World recently published in the front page of its Sunday edition the following correction:

"Charles Clayton Morrison, editor of the Christian Century, published by the Disciples Publication Society in Chicago, has requested The World to contradict certain claims made by a former resident of Portland, Ore., who styles himself 'Right Rev. St. D. Martin, Bishop of Columbia of the United Christian Conference of the Disciples of Christ.'

"Several months ago the editor of The World Almanac received for publication in the 1915 issue, a statement purporting to be signed by Martin and bearing the official seal of his organization. In this paper the writer claimed that his society was 'a new department' of the denomination known as the Christian church or Disciples of Christ, that the Christian Century was 'recognized as their journalistic leader,' and that the Right Rev. J. D. Meade was the Bishop in charge of 'Eastern headquarters.'

"Editor Morrison wrote The World that he had never heard of the society or the men named as its bishops. The World correspondent at Portland was asked to investigate, and has sent the following statement from the Rev. C. F. Swander of Portland, Superintendent of Missions of the American Christian Missionary Society:

"'I first met Martin in 1911. He had come to Portland from Illinois and announced to us that he was an accredited minister of the Christian church and wanted his name enrolled in the Oregon Ministerial Booklet, which I then was preparing for publication. I looked him up to learn of his credentials and then found things not altogether satisfactory, and his name did not appear in our booklet, as he had requested. Then he set up his own church, apparently. He never was indorsed by our church body; in fact, the records of our state convention, held in 1913, at Turner, Ore., show that resolutions at that time were adopted disclaiming any connection with Martin or his organization. Later he was arrested here for vagrancy. He was convicted, and I have heard little of him since that time. I cannot say where he now is.'

"The prosecution of Martin grew out of a 'tag-day' sale conducted in behalf of his church. The sum of $75 was secured from the sale of ten-cent tags, and only a very small percentage went into the fund, the remainder being charged to expenses. Martin was given a jail sentence, but was afterward paroled. He is a veteran of the Spanish War.

"The Right Rev. J. D. Meade, described by Martin as the Bishop in charge of his Eastern headquarters, is a colored preacher who until recently was living at No. 159 New street, Newark, N. J."

A Church Music "Campaign"

A unique and greatly needed Christian service is that being rendered by Mrs. Celeste B. Givens, of Des Moines, in providing for the systematic upbuilding of church music in Des Moines and throughout the state of Iowa. Mrs. Givens is one of the leading musicians of the state and possesses an enthusiasm for church music that is equaled only by her rare insight into its significance. She is now engaged in giving the churches the benefit of her knowledge, skill and enthusiasm. By a plan which secures the co-operation of the musical people of the local church she spends a week or more in an institute which she frankly calls "An Educational Campaign for the Extension of Church Music." By means of public lectures, choir instruction and rehearsals, private work with special pupils on piano, organ or voice, Mrs. Givens is able to awaken the entire church to a new sense of the importance of the musical part of church worship and to a deep love for the hymns of the soul. The instruction and inspiration extend all the way from children's choruses through the young people, the choir singers, the church officers and to the pastor himself. Her work is commended by Dr. M. L. Bartlett, president of Des Moines Musical College; Pres. H. M. Bell of Drake university; Dean A. M. Haggard, Dean Sherman Kirk and many others. The Christian Century also would be glad to underwrite anything Mrs. Givens would do in the field of church music, as the editor testifies with gratitude that much of his love and appreciation of the hymnal are due to the insights she succeeded in imparting to him through our association in Central church, Des Moines, twenty years ago.

Congregational Neighborliness.

On the occasion of a lecture by Albert Swartz, Disciple pastor at Knoxville, Ill., in the Presbyterian church of Galesburg, the Sunday evening congregation of First Christian church went over to the Presbyterian church in a body with Pastor H. A. Denton. The courtesy created much good feeling in addition to the delight produced by the lecture.

Indiana's Enthusiastic Convention.

Indiana's state convention was held May 11-13 at Marion. Features of the gathering were a ministerial institute on the first day when papers were read on religious and professional themes by Dr. Charles E. Underwood, Clay Trusty and David S. Shields; a big banquet presided over by A. L. Ward of Lebanon and attended by a large company; the reports of the four district superintendents—G. I. Hoover, T. J. Legg, Melnotte Miller and Fred R. Davis—and State Secretary C. W. Cauble; the first appearance of F. W. Burnham as president of the American Society before an Indiana audience; the setting forth of the institutional interests of the Disciples of the state—Butler college by A. B. Philputt, the State University Bible Chair by E. F. Daugherty, the work among the student body of Purdue university by Prof. E. H. Clarke and the religious education experiment at Gary by Prof. Myron C. Settle; the sessions of the C. W. B. M.; great addresses by many speakers with J. Boyd Jones of Terre Haute and Pres. W. L. Bryan of the State university among the more prominent. It was an optimistic and loyal company of perhaps 400 persons whom Pastor Rollin A. Bennett and his Marion church entertained in their homes for three full days.

Third Illinois District Convention.

At the Third Illinois District convention held in Quincy, May 13-14, W. D. Endres, pastor First church at Quincy, speaking on the problem of poverty, declared that the great human task of relieving want and uplifting the poor will draw divided Christendom together more than agreement in creeds. He pointed out from the Scriptures how upon the church is placed the burden of caring for the poor. The great social problems, of this world, he declared, are the church's essential problems. George W. Wise of Camp Point spoke in the same vein, asserting that the church must not only be of God and for the people but must be where the people are. He said it was wrong for churches to move from down town districts to residence districts where work is much easier for them. He declared that the church gives the world the best code of morals and the greatest ideals and that from these all reform movements spring. The convention was well attended and the work in the district was reported as generally prospering. ing.

Pastor Substitutes for Evangelist.

I. J. Spencer, of Central church, Lexington, held a two weeks' evangelistic meeting in Shelbyville, Ky., assisted by Mr. W. E. M. Hackleman, musical director. Herbert Yeuell had been engaged for the meeting and finding it impossible to come Mr. Spencer took his place. The pastor, Homer W. Carpenter, had the field ready and the meeting was fruitful.

A Sunday-school in the Movies.

A moving picture of the Sunday-school of First church, Lincoln, Nebr., was taken May 16. Automobiles were sent after the shutins and extra efforts were made to get the entire enrollment of the school present. It is intended to present this "movie" as a part of an evening's entertainment showing a great school at work. The film will be kept as a permanent possession of the church. It is believed its use in later years will be of great interest. H. H. Harmon, pastor, keeps the church life continuously active. The Sunday-school work is pitched on the highest level of religious pedagogy.

Active Church Woman Dies.

Broadway church, Los Angeles, Cal., recently sustained a deep-felt loss in the death of Mrs. Sarah E. Garvin, widow of the late Thomas D. Garvin, whose ministry in various cities on the Pacifice Coast and in Honolulu was blessed with much fruit. Mrs. Garvin was a sister of the late B. F. Coulter, the Los Angeles merchant who built Broadway church and ministered to it as a lay preacher for many years. Mrs. Garvin shared in the plans and benefactions of her brother and was much beloved by the congregation. Her funeral service was conducted by John C. Hay, assisted by the pastor, Charles F. Hutslar.

Build Battleship with Mission Money!

The preposterous conception some people have of the "vast amounts" of money sent to the mission field is well brought out by Graham Frank, pastor at Liberty, Mo., in the following paragraph published in his parish paper: "We recently heard of a man who thought that a better use could be made of the money that is now being given by American churches for foreign missions. He suggested that all such money be taken for the building of a navy with which to obliterate from the face of the earth all those who dare lift a finger against Uncle Sam! Only two or three things stand in the way of such a suggestion being very valuable. First, when the proposed navy was completed its guns would not have to be turned against the so-called heathen nations which money given for foreign missions is used to evangelize, and, then, too, there is the fact that if all the money given in a year by all American churches for foreign missions were taken for the proposed navy instead of having enough to build and equip such a fleet of dreadnaughts, submarines, etc., as would strike terror into the stoutest hearts, there would be just enough to build one battleship, fill her bunkers with soft coal, and give her one round of ammunition! Aside from these considerations, the suggestion seems very practical, even if it does grate a little on ears that have become accustomed to peace-producing words of the Prince of Peace. However, when the world is in such chaos as it is now, one need not be surprised at hearing all sorts of suggestions. One may even be tempted to offer some rather questionable suggestions oneself."

Union Seems Far Off.

The proposed plan of union between the southern Presbyterians and the United Presbyterian church has failed of favorable action in the presbyteries of the latter denomination. It would seem that it also failed of even any serious consideration, for several presbyteries voted for both of two contradictory resolutions. The Christian Observer, speaking for the Southern Presbyterian church, says "it is probable that no further steps will be taken for the present looking toward union between the two churches."

HIRAM COLLEGE.

Commencement falls this year in the week of June 12. Professor E. E. Snoddy, of the Department of Philosophy, Transylvania college, will be the commencement speaker on Tuesday, June 14.

The veteran missionary, W. R. Hunt, of Chu Chow, China, together with his lovely family, recently paid Hiram a visit. Brother Hunt delighted three audiences with addresses. His eldest son is a Freshman at Hiram.

During the past year the college library has received nearly 1,000 additional volumes, the largest accession in any single year. The daughters of the late President B. A. Hinsdale are arranging to turn over their father's valuable library also to the college.

Hiram has just won in a literary contest with Wooster university, the Presbyterian college of Ohio. This is Hiram's fifth intercollegiate contest this year, which her representative won over the Ohio colleges.

Curing "Yaws" in the Philippines.

Dr. C. L. Pickett, of Laoag, Philippine Islands, has been doing some wonderful work in cleaning up the dreaful disease of "Yaws" in the whole province. A new German discovery for the cure of this disease has been working miracles in Dr. Pickett's hands. The Philippine government has granted him $3,000 to help in ridding the province of this terrible disease. The medicine is expensive, but the government is willing to pay the price. Our hospital in Manila also received a fine subsidy from the government.

Gospel Conquest in Philippines.

D. C. McCallum of Vigan, Philippine Islands, reports that we have 800 members in the Cagayan valley, in the distant northeast section of the Island of Luzon. No missionary has ever been located in this section and it is a very difficult point to reach. Native evangelists and the apostolic spirit of conquest have been responsible for this remarkable growth. The Cagayan valley is noted for its growth of tobacco. We have a Chinese church in this section of eighty members, which is self-supporting.

White Baby Interests Congo Natives.

The natives in the region of Longa, Africa, are coming long distances to see Mr. and Mrs. Hedges' little baby. Charles P. Hedges, Jr., is the first white baby born in this whole section of the Congo and the natives look upon him with great wonder and admiration. A medical missionary is sadly needed for this section. Both our missionaries and the native people are without any medical attendance, the nearest physician being 100 miles away and difficult to reach.

J. C. Archer Instructor at Yale.

J. C. Archer has been permanently engaged at Yale as an instructor in Christian missions. He graduated at Hiram in 1905 and served as a missionary under the Foreign Christian Missionary Society in Jubbulpore, India, for a term. He took his B. D. in Yale in 1914, specializing in philosophy of religion and missions. This present year he has been studying in the Divinity school at Harvard university. The Disciples in the eastern institutions speak in terms of highest appreciation of the standing of Mr. Archer in the religious circles of the great universities.

A County Seat Church with a County-Wide Conscience

BY CLOYD GOODNIGHT.

There needs to be new conscience developed among our strong county seat churches. In many cases the strong church at the center of rich and populous counties has been built at the expense of the small village rural congregations. In this new era of phones and "Fords" the strong church ought to bear the infirmities of the weak and not to please itself. As a sample of what can be done we herewith give an outline of the home mission work of the Uniontown, Pa., church of which Cloyd Goodnight is pastor.

The Uniontown church was regularly organized on January 26, 1890, and began a growth that has never ceased. Today the membership is more than 1,100.

The mission at Hopwood was started in November, 1891. Locked out of the three different houses in the village decision was made to build. On April 3, 1892, the Hopwood building was dedicated. The lot and building cost $1,600; the amount raised was $1,616.04.

Previous to 1896 but little had been done toward starting the work of this church in New Salem. Some time in the early seventies a few sermons were preached in this neighborhood, and after the establishment of the Central Christian church of Uniontown, the ministers from that church came to the village occasionally, preaching in the old Methodist church and when that was closed against them, they preached in the schoolhouse, but not much had been accomplished. The storm of 1896 blew down the building belonging to the Methodist people and they, being few in numbers, were discouraged and ready to sell their property.

A committee consisting of M. M. Cochran of Uniontown, and E. W. Hess, from near New Salem, was appointed to purchase the lot with the demolished building on it as the storm had left it. The purchase price was $100.

Arrangements were immediately made to rebuild the old structure, which was done at an expense of $1,200. The building was dedicated by W. J. Cocke, January 3, 1897. From this time, the pastors of the Uniontown church preached in the church up to the fall of 1909, when R. G. Manley was called to the coke regions.

He decided to make New Salem the center of operations; one strong point in its favor being the fact of there being a building there. R. G. Manley began his work here in November, 1909, under very discouraging conditions, with about fifteen members, but the work prospered. Mission schools were established in surrounding towns. New Salem now has a membership of 320, with a Sunday-school attendance of 160.

The next center opened was Republic, in the fall of 1912, with A. F. Hanes as first missionary. The Tower Hill Coke Company gave a building for our use and the Baptists furnished a lady worker for a co-operative work. There are now, besides, the strong central school of Tower Hill, averaging over 125, and its union congregation of over fifty, of whom about twenty are Disciples, schools established at Republic, Thompson No. 1, Thompson No. 2 and Cardale. These, like the ones at New Salem, are coke towns within a radius of from one to two miles of the Tower Hill church.

Especially are these outlying schools doing a splendid work among the foreign peoples, the population in some cases being as much as seventy-five per cent foreign. Sewing classes and basket making classes are also conducted. The end and aim of all this work is to bring them in touch with the central congregation, where they may accept Christ as their Savior and be led to devote their lives to Him.

Oliver No. 3.

At the solicitation of some of the residents a school was established at Oliver No. 3 in the early spring of 1913. This coke town is situated about three miles from Uniontown, and much help has been given from the Uniontown church. At the beginning Frank Varndal and Ralph Miller, from the Hopwood church, went every Sunday to help in the establishment of the school and later several teachers from Uniontown gave their help in teaching classes at Oliver.

There have been over forty here who have made decisions for Christ, the greater part of whom have taken membership with Central church, Uniontown. The present monthly average attendance of the Sunday-school is 75. For the past year a monthly contribution of $5 has been sent from Oliver No. 3, to the Western Pennsylvania Society.

The first step in the Brownsville work was a careful canvass of the city, enlisting such Disciples as were interested in establishing a Christian mission. Then attention was turned to the selection of a desirable site, and when this was located, M. M. Cochran made the purchase for $8,000, in his own name, and transferred it to Central church, Uniontown, making the first payment of $3,000, as a donation. The property consisted of a large lot on the best street in South Brownsville upon which was a huge frame building, containing two store rooms, with cellars, two six-room flats, and a large lumber shed. On March 30, 1913, a meeting was called in one of the store rooms of the building, and a Bible school was organized with thirty-five present. On April 25, the first invitation was given, to which seventeen responded. Three of these made the good confession. Three, whom I had recently baptized, and eleven former Disciples, came by statement, thus beginning the organization. Brownsville now has 210 members, a Sunday-school with an attendance of 250.

A recent tabulation of attendance at the fourteen points of contact which the Uniontown church has with the people, and on only ordinary occasions, records as follows:

Brownsville	153
Cardale	37
Dearth	36
Hopwood	65
New Salem	125
New Town	108
Oliver No. 3	54
Republic	36
Scaright	23
Shamrock	79
Thompson No. 1	41
Thompson No. 2	36
Tower Hill	115
Uniontown	543
Total	1,442

This record of interest and activity on the part of a county seat church is published with the hope it will prove an inventive to others similarly situated.

Lethbridge has made a good record since the work was organized less than three years ago. Somewhat depleted in numbers by removals, this church is facing its opportunities courageously. W. C. Asher, has just been called as pastor in the place of J. B. Pickel, who has served the church for nearly three years. A mission Sunday-school has been started in an outlying part of the city—and the main school has done splendid work. The church occupies a rented building. In the Lethbridge district a country field has been developed, where L. M. Doughty is at work and rendering efficient service.

CHURCH EXTENSION NEWS.

In the extremity of a great need, I am writing to urge that individuals will send personal gifts and annuity gifts to the Board of Church Extension. There are many churches that will lose their buildings, recently erected, unless the Church Extension Board helps them. Last August, when the European war situation struck the country, many churches came to our board for relief. The banks in their neighborhoods had promised these churches loans on their buildings and the churches and proceeded to build on the strength of these promises from the banks. When war was declared in August, then these banks absolutely refused to make these loans which they had promised. This put these churches in bad financial reputation in their communities because they were expecting to pay their contracts with the money which these banks had promised to lend them. When the churches failed to get money from the banks they naturally came to their only friend, the Church Extension Board. We are now trying to save these churches from financial embarrassment. Where could they come in their distress except to the Board of Church Extension which is the brotherhood's organization for giving relief to churches in financial distress because of such circumstances as indicated above. The problem with the board now is how to save these church properties. At our meeting on the first Tuesday of May we could only grant $10,000 though we had calls for $36,000. These applications had been waiting since last January. The $10,000 was promised to six congregations to save them from the immediate sale of their property because of liens about to be filed. The Church Extension Board is the friend that stands between the stronger churches and the churches that have been struggling to build. In times such as these, the board is not able to get very great returns on loans already made. It is natural then that your Board of Church Extension should come to the great brotherhood and ask that at this time personal gifts be sent and sent speedily.

At the last board meeting, Mansfield, Wash., was promised $500; Grayson, Ky., $1,000; Maplewood, Mo., $3,000, 6 per cent; Staples, Minn., $400; Tab, Ind., $1,000; Greenwood church, Seattle, Wash., $1,500; Wentworth, N. Car., $200. There are still $25,000 of applications on the waiting list that ought to be helped at our meeting June 1.

During the month of April the following churches completed their buildings and received their loans from the Church Extension Board: Wolfe City, Texas (K. C. Linwood Blvd. church fund), $800; Elk City, Okla. (Portland, Oregon fund), $400; Adairville, Ky. (J. C. Mason fund), $250; St. Charles Avenue church, New Orleans, La. (General fund), $5,000.

During the month the board has received an annuity of $1,000 from a good friend in Ohio which completes a $5,000 annuity gift. The receipts for Church Extension are considerably behind last year though the demands have more than doubled. Send remittances to G. W. Muckley, 603 New England building, Kansas City, Mo.

CHARLES CLAYTON MORRISON, EDITOR HERBERT L. WILLETT, CONTRIBUTINGEDITOR

Do You Dare to Pray?

WHETHER YOU PRAY OR NOT is at bottom a question of courage. What chokes prayer is not intellectual doubt so much as moral cowardice. No coward can pray the prayer that availeth much.

The courage needed in prayer is not simply the kind we need with which to face our fellows—the courage the boy needs who ventures to kneel on his first night in the dormitory. That situation calls for courage, to be sure. And no doubt there are many homes in which there would be prayer if husband or wife but had the courage to acknowledge to the other the need of the open window toward Jerusalem.

But it is not that kind of fear that prevents most people praying.

We are not very much afraid of the face of man; we are afraid of ourselves.

We lack the courage to face the facts of our own inner lives. Our thinking gets tangled up when we think of ourselves. Our vision is then likely to be blurred. We can apply moral principles to the conduct of others, but we make exceptions of ourselves. We haven't the courage to examine under all our disguises and make out frankly what our lives are really like.

To deal justly with our fellows, to tell the truth to our customer, to pay the last farthing of the debt—that is honesty. But it is a higher order of honesty to look fearlessly and calmly into one's own soul and make out the facts one finds there, and reckon with them as one would with any other set of facts it was one's business to deal with.

Honesty is easier everywhere than in dealing with our souls. We take a sly peep now and then at our soul. We really do not want to know what the facts of our inner life are. We are afraid to know.

This timid and fearful way we have of treating with ourselves is the reason we do not pray. If we really pray we must search ourselves. We must be willing for God to search us.

Our soul is such a mystery to us. We have a certain superstitious fear of looking into its affairs, much as a child has of going into the dark. Of course we cannot pray while our minds are haunted with that superstitious feeling. To look into our soul honestly and bravely, resolved to deal with whatever facts we find there, good or ill, in a brave and honest way—this is the very essence of prayer.

What would we certainly find if we fairly faced our own soul?

We would find sin there.

And what else can we do with sin except pray?

We would find broken purposes for good, resolutions formed in the glow of some illuminating experience. How weak our memory is! How soon our inspirations pass! How almost inevitable is our return to the valley from some mountain of revelation and hope! A parting, a death, a success, a defeat—some experience that shocked us into a consciousness of the deeper realities of life. But soon that consciousness fades.

How can we keep it vivid save by prayer?

We would find fertile germs of good lying dormant in our soul.

What can we do for these seeds of virtue except pray? Prayer is the atmosphere in which they grow.

However, our not praying is not due alone to our moral fear of the realities of our inner life; it is also due to fear of God.

We are not quite sure that we can trust Him!

It is a great risk to pray!

It means that we trust ourselves to powers we cannot see. In prayer we walk by faith, not by right. And the essence of faith is courage.

Faith is the act of putting unseen things to the test. It is an actual yielding of ourselves to the invisible forces of the spiritual order in trust that "angels will bear us up in their hands."

But this is simply spiritual courage. To deliver one's soul into the keeping of God whom one has not seen is to take life's supreme risk. To let the crash come in business when we could avoid it by a simple trick of injustice is to turn from a path we can see to one we know not. Who can prove to us beforehand that it will be better to do right and take the consequences than to do a simple wrong?

Prayer involves just this faith that the laws of the spiritual world will take care of us if we trust them. We are like an aeronaut who, reaching a great height with his balloon, fears to let go lest the atmospheric laws might not operate to inflate his parachute, and so he would be dashed to the ground.

But great souls who have made prayer the vital breath of their lives tell us that God and his promises are to be trusted as one trusts the law of gravitation. They urge us to cast our care and our burden upon God and let Him care for us.

When our hearts take counsel of those great ones who have built their lives by prayer, we too may learn the way to the secret place of God. But we will never enjoy the blessings of prayer so long as we stand outside it and discuss it.

Only by taking the risk, by courageously flinging away every cowardly prompting, and acting as if God would indeed keep his promises, can we ever know the peace and power of the life hid with Christ in God.

British Feeling Toward America

BY LESLIE W. MORGAN

This article was written before the sinking of the Lusitania British criticism has been somewhat inhibited since President Wilson sent his note to Germany in protest against that inhuman act. But the interpretation here given holds essentially true, even so. Mr. Morgan is a native American, pastor of a London Church of Disciples, and while still retaining his fundamental loyalty to his native land feels the English attitude as one on the inside.

THE moderation of the British press in its attitude toward America has been a source of wonder to me more than once, when, during the past few months, there has been no little occasion, from the point of view of Great Britain, for strong resentment to be felt. At the time of the first American note the situation was the most critical, and yet the Press, almost without exception, was patient and restrained. The strongest language I saw anywhere was that used by myself in an editorial in the Christian Monthly—an irresponsible writer who scarcely knows to what country he belongs, in an irresponsible journal quite unknown to the censor.

AMERICAN SILENCE.

In that article it was pointed out that the most unsatisfactory feature of the whole affair was that our American friends had been strangely silent while one after another of the rules of the Hague Convention had been broken. No matter by whom broken; why had they not spoken? And why had they spoken instead when their trade had been touched? Dr. Dicker, who for thirty years has been pastor of the American church in Berlin, had just returned from a visit to America and had said that "Western opinion in the United States is hardening against England because of the injury done to the copper trade."

Also, Dr. A. C. Dixon, of the Metropolitan Tabernacle, had prayed on the Sunday following the issue of the note, evidently with his own native country in mind, "that a nation that professes such high ideals of liberty and has striven to live up to them may not be consumed by the spirit of commercialism and may have the spirit of sacrifice for the sake of humanity."

THE PRESIDENT WARNED.

President Wilson was warned in this article—I fear he is still ignorant of the warning—lest in time he should be compelled to say, "Alexander, the coppersmith, did me much evil." It was pointed out that President Wilson had probably acted under the pressure of business interests, and the opinion was expressed that if American Christian sentiment had pressed as hard for an utterance—courteous, but firm and frank—on the violations of the Hague Convention, as the business interests of America had pressed for a representation to be made concerning the detention of neutral vessels, two notes might have been sent instead of one—or perhaps only one, but to a different address! Any single individual, however high his office and however noble his own ideals, was all the stronger for the moral backing of the community, and unfortunately, even the strongest might yield to subtle influences that stand, to say the least, for something below the highest. President Wilson had many times shown himself not lacking in moral courage, and hence it was all the more to be regretted that he had seemingly become the mouthpiece of certain material interests and had been content to leave to the "judgment of history" certain great moral principles. This writer of mongrel nationality said all this and more. He said that unless figures lie—admitting that they sometimes are capable of doing so—it would seem that the "injury" to American trade consisted, not in taking away what they had before the war broke out, but in slightly limiting the enormous increase, and that neutrality was evidently interpreted by some people as meaning the liberty to profit out of the strife of other countries. Then, using an English expression, it was asked, "Is this cricket?" Attention was also called to the fact—as evidenced by many speeches delivered by various speakers from President Wilson downward, and by the tone of the press, especially some of the American religious press—that America was just a little cocky over the fact that they of all the great nations were not at war. No one would deny them such sincere satisfaction as they could get out of it, nor detract from the virtue of it, although rejoicing with even more satisfaction that they had not been subjected to the temptation to pursue other ways than the ways of peace. Let the Monroe doctrine be violated by a European Power, as Belgian neutrality had been violated, and then listen for America's answer: you would not be able to hear it above the roar of their cannon! According to their own standard, peace would then not be a virtue but cowardice.

MODERATION OF BRITISH PRESS.

I have given at such length the sentiments expressed in the article referred to just to show that if a born American yielded to the temptation to thus write, it is all the more surprising that the genuinely British press used such moderate language as was everywhere apparent. The moderation shown has been due not to a lack of provocative elements but to the intensity of the desire that Anglo-American peace should not be broken after a hundred years, and that, too, over a similar dispute which was so happily closed by the Treaty of Ghent.

The anxiety of both the British press and public not only to actually keep peace with America, but to minimize any seeming indication of ruffled feelings on the part of America, is largely due to the unwillingness of the British people to believe otherwise than that the vast majority of Americans sympathize with the Allies. They naturally feel that the maintenance of such an attitude will have a wholesome influence upon Germany.

SIGNS OF FRIENDSHIP MANIFEST.

The tone of President Wilson's notes has had a good effect. His frankness has not been less appreciated than his courtesy. The replies of Sir Edward Grey, characterized by the same elements, have had a sobering influence upon the mind of the British public. It is felt that neither country has kept anything back. Both courtesy and frankness are characteristic of true friendship. One does not trouble much about being courteous to a certain or prospective enemy, and as for frankness, subterfuge is usually counted a better weapon in the early stages of a contemplated altercation. As far as either country is concerned, war between them is as unthinkable as is civil war within the borders of either.

NEUTRALITY NOT SILENCE.

There is still a strong feeling in the popular mind, whatever may be the official opinion, that neutrality ought not require a nation to seal its lips in the presence of inhuman violation of recognized laws of warfare. If so, neutrality is a demoralizing attitude to assume, and exacts a high price for the benefit it confers. It would be unfortunate if a nation must sell its soul in time of every war, great or small, or else declare itself on the side of one combatant or the other. If this were so we would be continually involved in world wars, for nations would be too high-minded to adopt a neutrality of such a compromising character. To a degree neutrality may involve suspended judgment, and always it should insure impartiality, but it should never require silence in the presence of undeniable acts which violate not only international agreements, but the instincts of humanity, as old as humanity itself.

THE HAGUE CONVENTIONS.

My own disappointment at the silence of America over the violations of the Hague Conventions has been in part due to the fact that it has given Ex-President Roosevelt the opportunity to say, and with considerable justification, "I told you so." When President Taft was working for international arbitration, Roosevelt said no nation would observe the rules any longer than it suited its own interests to do so. Germany has not disappointed him; this is not surprising to some people. It is surprising, however, and indeed bitterly disappointing to many people, that America has not entered a protest, seeing she is a signatory to the Hague agreement. No one wants America to join in the war; it is too nearly a world war already for any one to wish other nations to become involved; but neutrality ought not exclude righteous judgment, giving liberty to apportion righteous indignation or Christian sympathy without partiality.

The working classes of England gave such sympathy to the United States at the time of the Civil War, although they were great sufferers from it. English officialdom was cold, to say the least, but there was no absence of English sympathy outside the governing classes. The working classes of Manchester, in a message to President Lincoln, hailed "the beginning of an epoch of universal freedom upon the Western Continent, and of a closer friendship between the people of England and America." In his reply Lincoln said, "I know and deeply deplore the sufferings which the working men of Manchester and all Europe are called to endure in this crisis," and referred to their "decisive utterances" as "an instance of sublime Christian heroism," and added that "whatever else may happen, whatever misfortune may befall your country, or my own, the peace and friendship which now exists between the two nations will be perfected."

That these historic words may prove eternally true, even as they had been true for fifty years before their utterance and have stood the test for fifty years since, is the sincere wish of the British public, as I believe it is also of the vast majority of the American people.

The Kikuyu Controversy

BY ORVIS F. JORDAN

No more important case has come up to the Archbishop of Canterbury in a generation than that involving a dispute between the African bishops over open communion. In June, 1913, a missionary conference of various denominations was held at Kikuyu in Africa. The Anglican bishops of Mombasa and Uganda took part in this conference, and at the close administered the communion in a Presbyterian church to all the members, whereupon, in September, the Bishop of Zanzibar addresses a formal communication to the Archbishop of Canterbury, charging the bishops of Mombasa and Uganda with "propagating heresy and committing schism." On receiving the charge, the Archbishop decided it was of such importance as to refer it to the central Consultative Body of the Lambeth Conference. This Consultative Body met at Lambeth the last days of July, 1914. The report made to the Archbishop was signed by all the members present, including such representative Churchmen as the Archbishops of York, Armagh and Jamaica, the Primates of Canada and of Scotland, the Bishop of Winchester, and the Dean of Westminster. This body saw "no essential difficulty in inviting a minister or lay person not of our own Communion to address our people, providing the Bishop inviting him or authorizing the invitation is satisfied as to his qualifications." They further admitted the principle that a baptized person who had not been confirmed, under certain circumstances might rightfully be admitted to the Holy Communion, these circumstances to be decided by the administrative and pastoral discretion of the Bishop. The Consultative Body abstained from any expression of judgment about the closing Communion Service of the Kikuyu Conference, since it was "unpremeditated, and prompted by an impulse of a deeply Christian kind," and since they believed that "for the purity of its motive, and for the love that was in it, it was acceptable to Him to whom it was offered and whom its participants united to adore," but they did not encourage habitual action of this kind. The Archbishop shows that one can believe Episcopal government to be the right method of government and Episcopal ordination the right method of ordination, and yet refuse "to place of necessity extra ecclesiasm every system and every body of men who follow a different use, however careful, strict, and orderly their plan." By implication, the Kikuyu scheme would suggest that members of the English Church might receive the Holy Communion at the hands of ministers not Episcopally ordained. The Archbishop shows that this is so far only an academic question, for the Bishops of Mombasa and Uganda are so conscious of the perplexities which might arise that they do not wish or intend to give that advice to African Christians, and he draws attention only to the well-known fact that the Church of England has laid emphasis on the distinction between "regular" and "irregular" ordination without attempting "to lay down limits as to the operation of the Grace of God vouchsafed to those who minister His Gospel to the souls of men." The full report of the Archbishop is contained in a booklet published by the Macmillan Book Company, called "Kikuyu."

Union in the Philippines

A Presbyterian and a Methodist church uniting and an Episcoipal bishop pronouncing the blessing is sufficiently unique to deserve attention. In the Philippine Observer it is stated that the Central Methodist Episcopal church and the Presbyterian church of Manila, after much prayer and careful thought, have united to form the Union church of Manila. The first public services took place October 11 in the Presbyterian church on Calle Padre Faura, Malate. Every available foot of space was occupied, and the sermon was preached by Bishop Charles H. Brent of the Episcopal Church. The evening sermon was delivered by Rev. T. J. Pace of the United Brethren Mission.

Who Can Celebrate the Lord's Supper?

A correspondent to the Churchman, a prominent journal of the eastern Episcopalians, takes George Wharton Pepper to task for some of his utterances in his Yale lectures which are not regarded as "churchly," especially with regard to Christian Union. This correspondent asks for a categorical answer from the Churchman to the question, "Is there any rite that can be celebrated by a layman that is really the Lord's Supper?" Pressed for a straight answer the Churchman says "No."

Co-operative Theological Education in Canada

The Anglican, Congregational, Methodist, and Presbyterian bodies have for three years been operating their theological schools under a federated plan in Montreal. The faculties of the four institutions have lectured to joint classes of all the students. The first class under the union plan, numbering fifty members, was graduated this spring.

Big Deficit in Methodist Papers

There are ten official Methodist papers published in America, each of them being called "Advocate," with a local designation, such as "Northwestern Advocate." These papers have a present deficit of $114,000. The subscription price of these papers was once $1.50, but was cut to $1.00, since which time the deficit has increased by leaps and bounds.

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY

EDITORIAL

A PATHETIC NECESSITY.

BECAUSE of the conditions created by the war in Europe the receipts of the Foreign Society are $28,000 less than they were for the corresponding period last year. For this reason the Society has been compelled to reduce the salaries of all the missionaries and of all the native workers ten per cent, and the salaries of the secretaries twenty per cent.

For the missionaries this means much inconvenience and suffering. The war has increased the cost of living on all the fields. The salaries of the men and women at the front are meagre at best. The missionaries cannot live as they should and do their best work with their incomes reduced one-tenth.

The native workers receive an average salary of less than one hundred dollars a year. On that allowance they support themselves and their families.

It is plain that the Disciples of Christ are well able to carry on the work on its present scale and to enlarge it. We have never given as much as an average of forty cents a year for foreign missions. No one who knows the Disciples will say that they are not able to give as much as forty cents each in twelve months.

The people's minds have been so taken up with their thoughts about the war that the normal appeal of foreign missions is not as vivid as if times were normal. But in this announced cut of the missionaries' salaries is an appeal that ought to cut its way clean through to the quick of our people's consciences.

Look at it! There is a deficit of $28,000. Who is to make it up? The Society says that unless the churches make it up the missionaries must themselves make it up! The Society must take this $28,000 from the scant pockets of missionaries whose salaries range from $600 to $1,200 per year. Ten per cent from each salary—some missionaries thus giving $60, others $120!

And native Christian evangelists on the mission field who receive $100 per year will have to give $10 each to make up this shortage.

And the church members at home give less than 40 cents each!

If the churches, knowing these things, should allow their missionaries to add this sacrifice to the heavy crosses they are already carrying, the churches have less of the spirit of their Lord than the most cynical is willing to concede.

TWO SIGNS.

IN a single day the newspapers brought us two little tokens of the new sentiment on the saloon question.

It was announced that the Blackstone Hotel, one of Chicago's most fashionable hotels, had decided to close its bar on Sunday.

The same paper reported that the Brunswick-Balke-Collender Co., manufacturers of saloon fixtures, billiard tables, etc., had decided to go out of the saloon fixture business. The reasons given were that the day of the small saloon is passing, and that the billiard table suffers by its identification with it in the public mind.

Billiards, the statement went on to say, is a clean respectable game, but it can be kept such no longer unless it is altogether divorced from the saloon, which is coming to be regarded generally as disreputable.

NO LONGER A "COTERIE."

ONE would think the readers of a certain paper whose business it seems to be to hunt out heretics would begin to wonder whereto the heresy among the Disciples extends. For a long time the guilty ones were for the most part supposed to be located in Chicago. They were designated vernacularly as "the Chicago crowd," or, more suggestively, as "the Chicago coterie."

Rapidly, however, Chicago's distinction has been lost, as other cities one by one have been labeled as centers of "departures" from the faith. There are Des Moines and Kansas City and Cleveland and Berkeley and Atlanta and Louisville and Lexington and Baltimore and Richmond and Pittsburgh and Denver and various other towns in Missouri and Indiana and Illinois and many other states.

And now comes the latest manifestation. It is alleged in a lengthy article that "our cause is England" is honeycombed with the "New Theology." The president of the convention of our churches in Great Britain, and the secretary, together with many of the lay leaders, are declared to be heretics who are deliberately conspiring to "poison" other minds with their heresy and to "capture" the organization.

It is well known, of course, that the whole General Convention "scheme" was conceived and carried out by "gentlemen of this ilk," and all the missionary societies are under their domination.

If this thing grows so fast whereto will it attain? It seems to be a sort of ecclesiastical epidemic or tidal wave.

The followers of certain leaders are likely to wake up to the fact that their leaders have excommunicated everybody except J. B. Briney, and it may occur to them that Mr. Briney's good standing and full fellowship may some day be called in question.

"There are nae Christians but mesel' and Sandy, and I sometimes ha' me doots about Sandy."

A long campaign of heresy hunting is bound to end up in just about that way.

"PRINCIPLES" COUPLED WITH METHODS.

A SIGNIFICANT change of name is announced for the annual meeting of Kentucky Sunday School workers, to be held this year at Lexington. Following tradition, the gathering has heretofore been called a "School of Methods." It is hereafter to be called a "School of Principles and Methods."

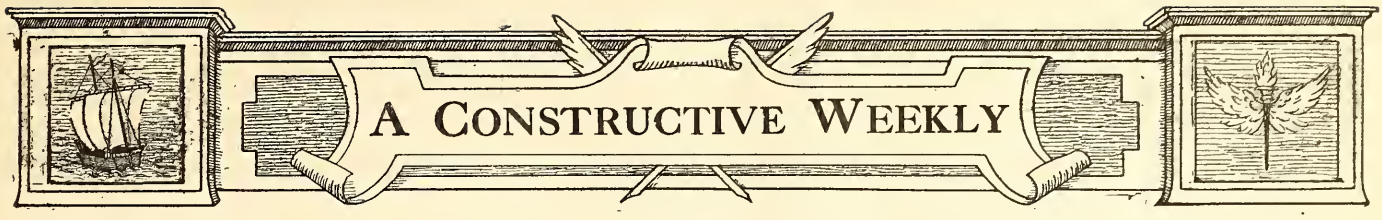
This is in every way hopeful.

The bane of the modern "successful" church is its top-heaviness with methods. Souls are smothered in methods.

"Principles" is a good addition. But "Principles" must be taken to refer to something besides pedagogical principles or it will be but little improvement. Life principles—that is what the Church needs, and the Sunday Schools, and what men everywhere need.

The best name of all would be a "School of Truth," spelled with a capital T.

It is Truth that makes men free, and what with our mechanical evangelism and our Sunday School methodology our religious life is poor indeed for the lack of it.



GREAT SERMONS OR HELPFUL TALKS?

WE HEARD of a great preacher lately whose congregation shifted from the morning to the night service because he preached the best sermon he could produce at the morning hour and went back to his barrel of seminary sermons for the evening.

Whereupon he stood aghast and wondered at the wonder that had been wrought, and resigned his charge.

"I will not be a seminary sort of preacher all my days," said he. "I know I have grown in ten years, and I will not go back to days when growth just began. If this congregation wants a stripling preacher, and their action shows that they do, let them hale one into their pulpit. As for me, I go far West to the golden hence."

And he did.

This revives the old question, Shall the preacher give the people what they want or what he thinks they need? Shall he come down to their level or make a faithful effort to bring them up to his? Shall he teach them what he has been taught in the schools, maintained by endowments of Christian men and women, or shall he go back to where he was before he entered college, and live his life out on that plane?

Selah. We know not what to do.

But you may write it down that no matter what he does he will probably wish he had done something else before he gets through—if the Lord spares his life!

TO GO IN OR NOT TO GO IN.

MANY pastors are facing the embarrassing necessity of determining their attitude toward a "Billy" Sunday meeting in their communities.

They do not believe a Sunday meeting is in the long run good for religion. They believe that the level of religious life tends to be loweerd by that sort of revivalism, that religion is cheapened and coarsened, and that the steadier and permanent processes of religious growth and evangelism are set back perceptibly by the overwrought sensationalism of a Sunday visitation.

In the days of discussion with their ministerial brethren these pastors withstood the proposal to invite Mr. Sunday, but at last by a large majority the invitation was voted and sent.

What now shall these pastors do?

Shall they, like Washington Gladden, of Columbus, Ohio, stand out alone while the meeting goes forward, or shall they, like Dr. Burris A. Jenkins, of Kansas City, subordinate personal convictions to the combined will of the churches of the community and heartily go into the meetings?

It is a delicate and trying question for any minister who strives to hold himself and his work to the highest standards.

If he stays out, he is subject not only to the flings and taunts of the evangelist, but to harsh and regretful criticism of his brother ministers and of many Christian laymen. He is put in a non-cooperative position. He is isolated from the united fellowship of his brethren in an enterprise which they regard as one of the greatest they have ever undertaken. He is regarded as offish, selfish, individualistic, and even sectarian.

On the other hand, if he goes in, he feels that he loses his chance to testify on behalf of his deepest convictions. He feels that Sundayism is in its net effect a bane and a blight on modern Christianity. He is not misled by the fact that Mr. Sunday does much good—that fact he, of course, concedes. But he sees how Sundayism thrives on illusions of success, and he knows full well that all real success in religion and in moral character is wrought by the quieter, steadier processes of education which this kind of revivalism renders tasteless and dull to the churches that participate in it.

What, we repeat, shall such a pastor do?

It is his problem. The solution rests with him. One man will solve it one way, another another way.

But there are two comforting considerations.

One for the man who stands out: Ten years from now he will be proud that he did.

The other for the man who goes in: Towns never get the Sunday habit. This evangelist never comes back. And probably no community, notwithstanding its enthusiasm for Mr. Sunday, ever would ask him to come back. So if the pastor goes in this once he need have no fear of establishing a precedent which he will have to repeat.

TEXAS DISCIPLES ON CHRISTIAN UNITY.

TEXAS Disciples recently held what is generally regarded as the most successful and heartening state convention in their history. Dallas men reinforced the out-of-town delegates and made an enthusiastic masculine company of 800 who sat down to a banquet one evening. This banquet was a great feature of the convention. Another feature was the report of the Committee on Christian Union appointed a year ago. The report is extraordinarily well written, conceived in a gracious and tolerant spirit. It would bear quoting in full, but these paragraphs must suffice:

> In all of our pulpits the Disciples continue to plead for unity with reason so strong as to seem almost irresistible; and yet their very zeal and force are often interpreted by other people as merely an effort to catch and proselyte unwary members of other communions. If the call to unity is really a call to the position of the Disciples, it is sure to seem to many only an invitation to change from one sect to another. The Disciples indeed are not chargeable with insincerity in this, since in their judgment the Bible and the Bible alone, which is truly the position of the Disciples, is in general terms the only possible ground of Christian union. But in the minds of many an agreement in such general terms, even if reached, cannot remove the particular differences which are the present barriers to union.
> But the Disciples really have a great plea, a practical unsectarian plea, even regarding differences both in faith and practices. It is desirable that this plea should be heard under conditions most favorable to an unprejudiced consideration. Other pleas must be weighed in the balances with it, and a divided Christendom must in some way be brought to search after and welcome the best possible plan of unity and cooperation. The best plan cannot be wrong, and neither the Disciples nor any other people in accepting it will be required to sacrifice either truth or conscience.

The committee was made a standing committee of the convention to report each year on the state of the cause of Christian Union. To those who share the earlier ideals of the Disciples it seems strange to be handing over the question of Christian unity, after the fashion of the Christian denominations, to commissions and committees.

But perhaps the final report of some such committee will tell the churches of Disciples that they—the churches themselves—are union churches, no more and no less, and if they are not they must become such, that through their character and service and message the prayer of our Lord may be answered.

The Larger Christian World

A DEPARTMENT OF INTERDENOMINATIONAL ACQUAINTANCE

Presbyterian General Assembly at Rochester

The General Assembly of the Presbyterian church in the United States of America (north) closed its annual session at Rochester, N. Y. Presidents of three Presbyterian educational institutions were put in nomination for moderator, and Dr. J. Ross Stevenson, president of Princeton Seminary, was elected. He is well known in Chicago as a former instructor in McCormick Theological Seminary for six years, and in New York as the successor of Dr. John Hall at Fifth Avenue Church, where Dr. Jowett now preaches. A lengthy debate resulted in a decision to merge the college board and the board of education of the denomination. The Assembly considered the overture to allow women to become deaconesses and voted favorably on it. Rev. Chas. Stelzle has been the conspicuous sociological heretic of the Assembly for many years, his connection with the Home Mission society having been severed after a long agitation. This year he was accused of being a "socialist" and was acquitted. What would have happened had he admitted being one is an open question.

Denomination Makes Large Gains

Gain of membership in the northern Presbyterian church is accelerating rapidly each year recently. The number of members gained in 1911 by evangelistic effort was 72,000; in 1912, 79,000; in 1913, 88,000; in 1914, 93,000, and in 1915, 112,927. The year given in each case is that ending with the Assembly in May. The territory covered by "Billy" Sunday was shown to have had very large gains.

Presbyterians Efficient in Home Missions

Presbyterians of the North are a great people in home mission work. They are raising and expending a million dollars per annum, which is not the full total, for state and local organizations add materially to this. The Home Mission board helps three thousand churches and out-stations in various parts of North America. Fifteen hundred ministers are supported wholly or in part by this great central disbursing agent. The work in Cuba and Porto Rico is under the Home Mission board in this denomination. In the former country there are twenty-five pastors and helpers at work in thirty-six mission points; in the latter seventy-two pastors and helpers work in ninety stations. The denomination has gone into the frozen north, and in Alaska there are twenty-four missionaries and helpers and fourteen churches, with 1,400 communicants. The work among the Indians has been especially well developed and fifty-seven tribes are reached by 152 ministers and helpers. It is estimated that 17,000 Indians are either members of or adherents to the Presbyterian church. The Mexicans who live in the United States are cared for with a most efficient program. The Presbyterians claim to be the only denomination at work among the lumbermen through organized agencies, and ten thousand are reached in the central northwest alone. The denomination is represented at Ellis Island, where the newly-arrived immigrant is welcomed and helped by the representatives of this aggressive Christian body. In the field of social service, the Presbyterian board is a pathfinder. There has been definite effort to reconcile the workingman to the church. The problem of the great city has been studied with awareness and the great city experts, men of the type of Josiah Strong and Chas. Stelzle, are mostly Presbyterians. The Rural Church movement is also a Presbyterian movement in its beginnings, though it has now been taken up by many denominations. Presbyterian pastors worked out the device of making the rural church an experiment station for the farmer and a social center for his young people. The Home Mission Board of this denomination has a well-organized publicity service which sends hundreds of communications to the secular press of the country on religious matters every year. The production of books and tracts by this group of workers is also a noteworthy service.

Union Seminary Question Up Again

The General Assembly has been for many years disturbed over the question of Union Theological Seminary in New York. This institution was organized by Presbyterians, but was at first independent of Assembly control. Later it established an official relation with the Assembly as a Presbyterian institution. Following certain heresy trials, notably those of Prof. C. A. Briggs and Prof. A. C. McGiffert, the trustees of the school voted to resume their former independent position. This was accomplished with such legal skill that the reactionaries have never found a way to lay claim to Union endowments as being Assembly property. The friction over the school has found expression, however, in continual efforts to prevent the ordination of Union graduates when they appear before the various presbyteries. As a result, most of the Union men are ordained before they leave New York, in a Presbytery where the progressive element predominates. Although the matter was perfectly clear in Presbyterian circles, two years ago a commission was authorized to pass on the question of relations with Union. The commission was headed by a reactionary leader, Rev. Mark A. Matthews, former moderator, and pastor in Seattle. His sommission reported it impossible to do anything legally against Union, but reported among other things that "the directors and the professors who are connected with the Presbyterian church are very glad to sit in the judicatories and be members of the boards of the Presbyterian church, but they do not feel under obligation to teach or promote the teaching of Presbyterion doctrine in Union Theological Seminary." Dr. Francis Brown, president of Union, claimed the privilege of recording on the Assembly minutes his denial of this charge. Some of the members of the commission complained of the speech made by Rev. Doctor Matthews, insisting that he agreed to present his report without the inflammatory comments which followed. It would seem that the question of Union is to be settled by admitting the interdenominational character of the institution, a thoroughly good settlement for a school that does so much for students of every creed.

Southern Presbyterian Assembly at Newport News, Va.

Presbyterians designate the northern and southern churches as the "U. S. A." and the "U. S." respectively. The Presbyterian Church in the United States held its Assembly at Newport News, Va. Dr. William McFaddin Alexander of New Orleans, pastor of Prytania street church, was elected Moderator. The Assembly passed a motion of confidence in President Wilson with many expressions of affection, and sent it to him as the first act of business. The business of the Assembly was carried forward smoothly, and a new Synod has been created of the mountain country of the east, uniting the mission work of the denomination in that section.

The Pope's Position Delicate

The departure of Italy from her neutral position and her entrance into the war will place the Vatican in a most delicate and dangerous position, threatening the unity of the Roman Catholic Church in Europe. The difficulty of maintaining harmony within the Vatican councils of the representatives of the warring nations with Italy herself engaged in the struggle will be multiplied many times. The departure of the diplomatic corps from the Vatican will be an event without precedent, at least for hundreds of years. Austria, the strongest of Roman Catholic countries, may find it difficult to keep in touch with the Roman Church largely under Italian influence.

Lutherans to Have Press Committee

The Missouri Synod Lutherans, the most conservative of all the Lutheran bodies, and having a German constituency, have adopted the plan of a Lutheran publicity bureau to have headquarters at Jersey City, N. Y. The purpose of this bureau is to furnish the secular press with news and reading matter making plain the doctrines and activities of the denomination. The General Council Lutherans are said to have taken similar steps.

Opposes Constitution of the United States

A tractarian propaganda has been inaugurated by the Reformed Presbyterian Church protesting against the non-Christian character of the constitution of the United States, and insisting that public officers should be Christians, in opposition to the constitutional provision that there shall be no religious test to holding office in the United States. There are four Reformed Presbyterian denominations in America, and they have a combined membership of a little over twelve thousand people. Among these are the "Covenanters."

Norwegian Lutherans May Unite

The Norwegian Lutherans of America have been divided into three separate denominations, Norwegian Synod of America, Hauge's Norwegian Lutheran Synod, and the United Norwegian Lutheran church. A joint committee of the three bodies met in Minneapolis May 5 and adopted a statement of doctrine that was acceptable to all, and it is now hoped that union may be consummated at an early date. The three bodies have 3,000 congregations and 300,000 members.

Y. W. C. A. National Convention

Several hundred conventions will be held on the Pacific coast this year. One of this number, held recently, was that of the Young Women's Christian Association, which assembled at Los Angeles and lasted for five days. The sessions were held in the First Methodist church of that city. One of the most important matters considered by the convention was the changing of the terms of membership for the student associations. This change was recommended by delegates at a gathering of student associations at Lake Forest, Illinois, last January, and was adopted by the national convention. The change does not, however, take effect until three years hence, assuming that the proposal will be adopted again at the next convention. The amendment to the constitution provides that any woman of the institution in which the college is located may be a member of the association provided she is in sympathy with its purposes and that she has made the following declaration: "It is my purpose to live as a true follower of the Lord Jesus Christ." Adoption of this eliminates the necessity of being a church member before being an active member of the association. John R. Mott, of the Young Men's Christian Association, was one of the prominent speakers at this convention of women. Dr. Walter Rauschenbusch conducted a Bible study hour each day. Miss Mabel Cratty, general secretary of the national Young Women's Christian Association, announced that in the last eight years there have been over 200,000 women added to the association membership. Next year the fiftieth anniversary of the forming of the first association will be observed. A number of speakers made reference to the life and work of Miss Grace Dodge, who was president of the national board at the time of her death. Among other speakers were Dr. Katherine B. Davis of New York; Miss Oolooah Burner, college secretary; Mrs. Harry M. Bremer, immigration secretary; Miss Una M. Saunders, Toronto, general secretary Dominion Council of Young Women's Christian associations; Miss Michi Kawai, secretary Japan national commission; Miss Abby Shaw Mahew, national secretary of physical education in China; Miss Clarisa H. Spencer of London, secretary of the world's committee, and Orin C. Baker, general secretary of the Travelers' Aid Society.

Methodist Bishops Want Union

The Board of Bishops of the Methodist Episcopal Church, North, met recently in Des Moines. The most important matter considered was the question of the union of the northern and southern Methodists who were divided over civil war issues and who have remained separate ever since. Bishop Cranston went on record in a ringing appeal favoring a united Methodism. "The Church will never be a power for peace or the arbitration of international disputes till it shows the world that there has ceased to be a division in its own ranks," said Bishop Cranston to local newspaper representatives in explaining his address following the session. "The first duty of the two great branches of the Methodist Church is to realize that it is an absolute necessity for them to get together. Then they will be ready to build themselves into a single great structure." A Committee on Unification was appointed to consider Bishop Cranston's appeal and recommendation of Church unity. The members of the committee were Bishops Cranston, Hamilton, Hughes, Bashford and Henderson. The committee reported as follows: "The bishops of the Methodist Episcopal Church realize that the formal responses to the tentative basis of union, as proposed by the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, must come from our own General Conference. Nonetheless, our hearts prompt us to the following declaration: We are convinced of the essential unity of the two great Methodisms in doctrine and life, and that the essential unity must in due season express itself in outward and organic form. Without presuming to pronounce upon the terms of union, we declare ourselves earnestly in favor of the organic union of the Methodist Episcopal Church and the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and of such other Methodist bodies as may share our common faith and experience."

Here and There

A Man Unknown to Fame

His name is Frank M. Tinder of Lancaster, Ky. He is good in the pulpit, good on the street, good in the home, good in council, good as a peacemaker, good as a farmer, a landowner, and is a model citizen. He has one of the best groups of children in the land—no man can throw stones at this preacher's eight. Every boy and girl is taught to work, to be useful in the church and community. One son is preparing for the ministry and is making a fine record. Mrs. Tinder is the home-maker, a worthy helpmeet, one of the genuine mothers in Kentucky and in Israel. The children of these parents will rise up and call them blessed.

Henry Watterson

The great editor of the Courier-Journal is known of course to all Kentuckians, who, with few exceptions, take their political opinions from that paper as naturally as the ozone with their breath. Marse' Henry as he is known familiarly to all, and especially to his brethren of the craft, writes with a master hand, flays his opponents as delicately as the proprieties of the occasion will permit, smites a political error with sledge hammer blows, laughs at the follies of the wise, and at the cackle of the fools. He does not favor state-wide prohibition, nor does he like Mr. Roosevelt, nor did he for a time like President Wilson, though now he and the President drink their grape juice from the same bottle. But he never speaks to the ex-president as they pass by. All prohibitionists are cranks, lunatics, or hypocrites; in fact, no Democrat can be a prohibitionst. But for all, his abuse makes us smile, and we love him just the same. We cranks can afford to smile; things in Kentucky are coming our way, though Bourbon County where the choicest of the brands is made, is dry, and Christian County, of which better things were expected, continues wet. Think of Kentucky's going dry—and be thankful. No wonder Marse' Henry weeps and tears his hair, and says terrible things in print. He hates the feminist movement almost as much as the "dry," but he has a foe in the progressive women of the country worthy of his steel. That's all I can say on this side of the question.

Since the great war began, he has been doing valiant service for the cause of peace and humanity. The sympathizers with the Kaiser all double up after he lands a few in the region of their solor-plexus. He has spoken with the fervor of a prophet, and we know of no religious journal that has been so religious in its views of the war as his. He is a fine example in this instance for the sleepy pulpits of the land that pray for peace, but seem to say that war is inevitable, or that talk of international peace with an apology. If any man wants to have his backbone braced with a moral fibre as hard as steel, let him send for a copy of the Courier now and then, and read what this great editor has to say on the brutalities and inhuman practices of the war. He is the last of the great group of editors whose personality made the paper, so you may know he is not a spring chicken any more.

Are You Troubled With Christian Science?

Don't be afraid to show it up. Our friends of that cult have the habit of saying that whenever a sermon is preached against them they gain more converts. Don't believe it. It is a scheme to deceive the uninformed. They dread a sermon that shows them up, and if the process made converts they would have many sermons by request. When you get ready to preach, arm yourself with any of the good books written against the delusion, and show no quarter.

Improving Our District Conventions

All of them need a change of program. The regulation program provided by the state and district workers is good, but it needs more variety. Provision should be made for speakers from outside the district and their expenses of travel. New voices have a charm now and then. The devotional exercises should be magnified, though too much time should not be taken in commenting on the chapter read. The men who can comment to advantage are few and far between. Every convention needs new themes from year to year; and inspiration should be the object of them all. We need to get out of the ruts in our convention work.

Why Not Boost Our Standard Colleges?

The future of the Disciples does not depend upon those who have had a mere technical training in a college that of necessity cannot do more. At best these are intended for lay preachers who have been denied the benefits of a careful college training. We say not a word against them. They serve a good purpose. But there is a tendency to exalt the irregular way of doing things just now among the Disciples, and it is almost made to appear that the college that can promise little may be expected to do more than those which have a much better equipment. If the day ever comes when the training of our preachers to any large extent is committed to the care of "get-ready-quick" institutions we shall be in a sorry plight. It would be far better for us to make an advance in the direction of better training and wider scholarship, than to settle down in complaceny with the hope that great numbers of half-trained preachers will do more in the world than half the number well trained. Knowledge and training in the ministry were never needed as sorely as today. We have sympathy for all men whose training is not of the highest. We hope to see the day when our standard colleges will be filled with those who seek the highest and best that these institutions can afford.

A Suggestion for the Needy

Why would it not be a good thing to give a copy of "Studies in the Psalms" by our late English brother, Joseph B. Rotherham, as a premium for every new subscription sent to a certain journal which deals in wars and rumors of wars? Its devotional spirit would be balm for the troubled breast. We have only one objection. The Congregationlist in a recent issue mentions the fact that the author acknowledges indebtedness to Driver, Briggs, Ginsburg, Ewald, Thirtle, Delitzch and others old and new. "But his use of these varied and conflicting writers is judicious." So says the Congregationalist; but if it supposes that a little "wumgush" of this sort will deceive any well informed man among us, we now serve notice of its mistake, and if further assaults are committed we shall see that the offender is hoist upon his own petard.

Fitting Hymn to the Sermon

A pastor recently preached a sermon on the "Miseries of Marriage," and at its close found that the organist had selected the familiar hymn, "Rescue the Perishing!" Only one more inappropriate can be thought of just now.

A PRAYER FOR THE TEMPTED.

(Temperance Lesson.)

LESSON XII—JUNE 20.

Golden Text.—Keep me from the snare which they have laid for me. Psalm 141.9.

Lesson.—Psalm 141. Memorize verses 3, 4.

(1) Jehovah, I have called upon thee; make haste unto me: Give ear unto my voice, when I call unto thee. (2) Let my prayer be set forth as incense before thee; the lifting up of my hands as the evening sacrifice. (3) Set a watch, O, Jehovah, before my mouth; keep the door of my lips. (4) Incline not my heart to any evil thing, to practice deeds of wickedness with men that work iniquity: and let me not eat of their dainties. (5) Let the righteous smite me, it shall be a kindness; and let him reprove me, it shall be as oil upon the head; let not my head refuse it: For even in their wickedness shall my prayer continue. (6) Their judges are thrown down by the sides of the rock; And they shall hear my words; for they are sweet. (7) As when one ploweth and cleaveth the earth, our bones are scattered at the mouth of Sheol. (8) For mine eyes are unto thee, O Jehovah the Lord: In thee do I take refuge; leave not my sould destitute. (9) Keep me from the snare which they have laid for me, and from the gins of the workers of iniquity. (10) Let the wicked fall into their own nets, Whilst that I withal escape.

Verse by Verse.

By Asa McDaniel.

1. Make haste unto me. He pleads for a speedy answer to his prayer. My voice. My voice of supplication.—I call unto thee. The word "Kara" to call, or to cry, is used twice in this verse and is used continually in Scripture.

2. Set forth. Be prepared, or set in order. He thoughtfully prayed. Prayers should be made thoughtfully in our day. —As incense before thee. Incense was offered daily. Ex. 29:38-42; 30:7, 8; 2 Kings 16:15.—The lifting up of my hands. The gesture of prayer indicating invocation and supplication. It is the outward symbol of the uplifted heart.—As the evening sacrifice. "Minchal" properly denotes the oblation or meal-offering which accompanies the daily burnt-offering; but it may be used here to indicate the whole of the evening sacrifice. Cam. Bible.

3. Set a watch, O Jehovah, before my mouth. He needed to be protected from without that he might not use the profane language of the ungodly men about him.—Door of my lips. The lips, as the mouth in the former statement, stands for the whole man. He needed to be protected from within that he might not speak bitter words concerning man.

4. Incline not my heart. The mind needs the divine control more than the lips. In this connection read Matt. 6:13. —With men. The word for men implies that they are men of rank who set this bad example.—Let me not eat of their dainties. The psalmist did not want to share their life of sensual luxury. Evil associations have resulted in the ruin of untold numbers of men and women both young and old. It is the kind of thing the sturdy manhood and womenhood must keep saying in these days of "high living."

5. The righteous. This may mean Jehovah; but the most natural meaning is that the blows given by righteous people are to be preferred to the hospitality of the wicked.—Oil upon the head.—Oil was considered healing and refreshing.—For even in their wickedness shall my prayer continue. Or. Still is my prayer against their wickedness, RVm. I will only meet my enemies' attacks with prayer.

6. Judges. The word may refer to rulers. It may refer to the corrupt judges who led the people into wickedness. It may also mean the Syrian governors and oppressors.—Hear my words. When these oppressors are destroyed by being thrown down from the rocks, then the people will listen to my words. The prayer is renewed.

7. Our bones are scattered at the mouth of Sheol. Dr. Briggs reads "their" bones rather than "our" bones, and makes the verse refer to the bursting of the bodies of the judges beside the rocks.—Sheol. Sheol is the place of the unseen.

8. My eyes are unto thee. The attitude of expectant prayer. The way seemed dark but he kept his eye upon God.—In thee have I taken refuge. He has put himself under the protection of Jehovah.—Leave not my soul destitute. Or. Pour thou not out my life, RVn. Suffer me not to perish.

9. Keep me from the snare. These enemies are crafty and treacherous. The ground was sown thick with snares and gins to entrap the feet of the saints of God. This is a prayer for all time, and never more timely than for the people in our large cities.

10. Let the wicked fall into their own nets. The usual form of calling down by prayer exact retribution.—Escape. Hebrew, pass over, Rvm. No one can lead others astray without suffering for it. Paul urged us to "Take up the whole armor of God, that ye may be able to withstand in the evil day, and having done all, to stand." "To realize God's presence is the one sovereign remedy against temptation."—Fenelon.

Snares

The Lesson in Today's Life.

BY JOHN R. EWERS.

Our lesson today is a prayer for deliverance. "Keep me from the snares which they have laid for me." It reminds one of that petition in our Master's prayer, "Lead us not into temptation." A good way to be kept from the snares is not to go near the snares. There are snares of which we are unaware; there are others of which we know full well. Will power must be exercised. Keep away from the saloons. Keep away from the red-light district. Keep away from the gambling dens. Keep away from the poolrooms. Keep away from the hang-outs of the gang. Keep away from those delightful companions who drag you down.

HIDDEN SNARES.

On the other hand, there are snares which one cannot avoid, we have to go about our business and on the corners are the saloons. We have to meet people and among them are those who are evil. We cannot stay locked up in our rooms and perhaps if we did, we would, like ancient hermits, find our biggest temptations within our own hearts. Moreover, there are hidden snares, cleverly concealed. There are masked people. Unexpectedly one is confronted, not by a grinning devil, but by an angel of light, apparently—and what is one to do?

STEEL FRAMES.

Shanties may be constructed by the aid of scaffolds, but sky-scrapers demand steel frames. Surely a Christian's character should be a "sky-scraper." Then must the beams be laid of steel. Riveted with red-hot metal and strong enough not only to bear their own weight but to support ten thousand tons of walls and floors. Japan recognizes that Shintoism lacks the power to produce morality. Christianity is the only religion possessing the moral sanction, the dynamic to make men and women be good. The home and Sunday-school which build these steel frames of Christ-like character are doing the biggest business of the world. This is a mechanical age. Men glory in the construction of mighty bridges, huge cannon, dreadnoughts, office buildings. We need to remember that he who works constructively with children and who builds in the iron beams of religion, works not for today nor tomorrow but for eternity, and his work has value above all earthly treasures. We need to know that. We need to believe that.

EFFECTS OF TRAPS.

We have all seen animals that have escaped, maimed, from traps. One animal will gnaw off his own leg in order to escape. He who encounters the hidden snare will evermore bear its scars and marks. Recently seventy-five young cadets from one of our military schools spent a night in a great city. In that night all but ten entered the paths which lead down to death. It is frightful beyond words. We do not like to believe such a thing of our young men. We do not like to talk about it. But what about the terrible, ghastly, rotten fact? What about the parents who have failed to teach? What about the day-school which has failed to mold? What about the church—a blind leader of the blind? On the other hand a young relative of mine, whom I am proud to call a relative, has been winning a series of brilliant races. A mile he runs or a mile and a half. Down the last stretch he comes free and clear, far in the lead. When other boys are gasping for breath, rolling upon the ground exhausted, he pulls on his sweater and swaggers about, as though he had just been taking a leisurely stroll. Why is this? Ah, this young Sir Galahad is clean. No cigarette soils his pure lips; no vile habits sap his strength; he possesses what God intended every young man to have —fine, clean energy. Thus he wins. The race in these days is too strenuous for anyone to win who saps his strength at any point. Panting cigarette fiends, hollow-chested young libertines, puny, sallow complectioned young bloods have no show. They are flagged down. They are contemptible, pitiable, miserable. The wages of sin is death. The way of the transgressor is hard. God be merciful to the sinners. It only remains to say that an alert church will smash the traps. You remember Jacob Riis's good story of the little girl who prayed that the birds might not enter the traps and then smashed the traps to make sure!

A FRIEND IN NEED.

"A friend in need"—my neighbor said to me—
"A friend indeed is what I mean to be;
In time of trouble I will come to you,
And in the hour of need you'll find me true."

I thought a bit and took him by the hand:
"My friend," said I, "you do not understand
The inner meaning of that simple rhyme,
A friend is what the heart needs all the time."

—Henry van Dyke.

Disciples Table Talk

Religious Education Summer School.
Canton, Mo., is to have a "School of Religious Education" from June 21 to July 4. Those interested in Sunday School work in the churches of Northeast Missouri can find instruction and recreation and inspiration sitting at the feet of such teachers as J. P. Rowlison, dean of the school; Prof. A. W. Taylor of the Missouri Bible College, Dr. H. B. Robison, Prof. C. A. Lockhart, C. A. Vannoy and Prof. H. M. Garn, of Canton College.

Seeks Larger Proportional Attendance.
Central Church, Buffalo, N. Y., B. S. Ferrall, pastor, is striving to make its Sunday morning attendance reach 60 per cent of its membership enrollment. Many churches would be surprised to know how small a proportion of their membership attends the services regularly. The only way to find out is to count the attendance carefully over a considerable period.

Lincoln's Debt Halved.
First Church, Lincoln, Nebr., H. H. Harmon, pastor, raised one-half its entire debt on a recent Sunday morning and is making plans to raise the other half shortly. City Superintendent F. L. Bowen of Kansas City has been invited to address the Joint Board of Officers of all the Lincoln churches at an early date. The Joint Board of Lincoln is patterned after that at Kansas City, which has accomplished much good work in that city.

Pres. Howe to Young People.
President Thomas C. Howe, of Butler College, Indianapolis, spoke to the young people of Seventh Church, Indianapolis, on a recent Sunday evening. He urged strength and purity of mind and body for the sake of the crises of life. "You never know when you will open the door behind which you will find a sorrow which will go with you through your whole life," he said. "You never know when the tiniest artery in your brain will change you from a man of sound mind to a raving maniac." He urged young people not to fill their minds with that which, when a test comes, will cause to come to the mind a suggestion that will sweep them to destruction.

Recreation for Sunday School Workers.
"A school for the higher training of Sunday School teachers," is the subtitle explanatory of the fourth annual "School of Principles and Methods" to be held at Lexington, Ky., June 10-18. Walter E. Frazee, state superintendent of Disciples Sunday Schools, is the administrative head and about him is gathered a faculty consisting of Prof. Walter S. Athearn, of Drake University, Prof. W. C. Bower and Prof. E. E. Snoddy of Transylvania, Prof. E. F. Farquhar, of the State University of Kentucky, and the national departmental secretaries—W. J. Clarke, Cynthia Pearl Maus and Hazel A. Lewis. Homer A. Carpenter, pastor at Shelbyville, Ky., will conduct the chapel hour services. The announcements say, "The School of Methods is a school and not a convention. Lectures, conferences, and study periods are the order; not addresses, praise services, or business meetings. Such subjects as Bible Study, Bible-school Administration, Religious Pedagogy, and Child Psychology are taught through lectures offered by a faculty made up of college professors, and experts in the Bible-school work. Those who attend are "pupils," taking notes upon the lectures, frequent opportunities being given for questions and conferences with the faculty. At the close of the school the pupil submits his note book to the faculty for examination and upon his return home agrees to read a book recommended by the faculty and write a review of it. While the School of Methods is a school where consistent and hard work is done, it is not a grind, because to do the best work there must be a time for rest and recreation. In each of the larger schools the afternoons are devoted to recreation."

Union Meeting Yields Church Accessions.
Randolph Cook, the pastor, says the church at Trinidad, Colo., will receive about 100 accessions to its membership from a union meeting recently conducted there by Evangelist C. A. Gridley, of Atlanta, Ga. The total number of conversions reported is 400. Five churches cooperated.

Kokomo Achievements.
David H. Shields, pastor Main Street Church, Kokomo, Ind., has received fourteen new members in the past month and the basket-ball team of his Sunday School won the city championship with a clean record of 1,000 per cent, a remarkable showing. On Mothers' Day the men

Around the World of Foreign Missions

A. F. Hensey, who has recently reached home from Africa, is visiting the conventions in the northwest. His present tour will take him to Los Angeles for the National Convention, in July.

Charles P. Hedges, of Longa, Africa, writes: "This is the fortieth year of the society's history and this month marks the sixteenth milestone since the society gained a footing on African soil. As I think over the past of our Congo Mission the hand of God seems to be prominent. Men have come and gone but that power has remained ever present. For all success in this work we must make acknowledgment to our God."

Dr. and Mrs. C. L. Pickett, and Mr. and Mrs. D. C. McCallum have been spending their vacation at Baguio. There are no mountains in the Philippines to which the missionaries can go, as they can go in India. Beguio is three or four thousand feet above the sea and is a delightful place in which to spend a few weeks.

Mr. and Mrs. P. A. Sherman of Bilaspur, India, are on their way home on furlough. They left Bombay on the 12th of April. They expected to land in Liverpool on May 10th.

O. J. Grainger of Mungeli, India, writes: "During the year 1914 we baptized ninety-one persons here. A number of these were lepers, but the majority were converts from heathenism from the villages. The leper converts were also from heathenism, but we consider them on a different basis, as they are fed and clothed by the Leper Mission. Again, they do not count in the building up of a Christian community as others who are on their land in the villages. The task of training and developing these converts is a very difficult one. By becoming Christians they are cut off more or less from their old friends and associates, and they are cut off entirely from the old social organization. As the social organization of the villages is such as to make them economically dependent upon one another, the economic problem of the new converts becomes a serious one. For three and one-half years the people in and about Mungeli have not had a good harvest. In fact, the total of the last three years' crops was little more than what would be considered one good harvest. Some of our Christians have gone and others will have to go to other parts of India to find employment."

Mrs. M. B. Madden of Osaka, Japan, writes: "Mr. Oliphant made his first speech in Japanese at the annual convention and it was wonderfully well done. He and Miss Brown are making fine progress in the study of the language. Mrs. Oliphant's time and strength are necessarily devoted to their two children. I think the part our young Japanese women had on the program deserves special mention. We were very proud of them. They gave very earnest talks about meetings for women, kindergarten work and kindred subjects."

The churches that took the offerings in March and have not forwarded their offerings will confer a great favor upon the society by forwarding this money without delay. Those that are giving to Mission on the weekly plan should forward their offerings as often as once in three months, at least. If the offerings are poured into the treasury in a steady stream, the society will not be obliged to borrow from the banks. The savings in that case will be enough to support two or three missionaries.

HOW CHRISTIAN WOMEN ARE BEING REACHED FOR CHRIST.
Miss Mary Kelly and her organized Women's Class of sixty members at South Gate, Nankin, China. Miss Kelly can be seen in the second row from the rear, marked with a cross. This class was organized during the meetings held at South Gate by R. A. Doan. Mrs. Doan can be seen in the front row.

Dr. G. J. P. Barger has finished his work in Harvard. He has been giving special attention to the study of tropical diseases and their treatment. He and Mrs. Barger expect to leave for the Congo about the first of August. In the meanwhile, Dr. Barger will visit a number of churches and talk to them about the work to which the Lord has called him and to which he is devoting his life.

W. H. Edwards, who has been in the College of Missions for two years, leaves for the Congo on the 19th of June. He expects to spend some time with his family and kindred in Scotland. Mr. Edwards has been already three years on the Congo.

S. J. Corey, Sec'y.

of the church provided carnations, automobiles, invitations, and also the evening program for the mothers. Great audiences responded to their efforts. Mr. Shields also reports that South Side Church gave a farewell reception to Rev. J. G. Smith and wife on their departure for their new pastorate, Harrisburg, Pa. The congregation presented them with a number of valuable presents and wished them much good in their new field. Fine progress was made by Mr. Smith in his pastorate there, in spite of unfavorable conditions. The church has engaged C. B. Grubb, a member of the graduating class at Eureka, to supply the pulpit until he enters Yale this autumn.

Daily Vacation Bible School Again.

Encouraged by the success of their daily Vacation Bible School held last summer the church at Lebanon, Ind., has decided to maintain such a school this summer. Under the leadership of A. L. Ward, the pastor, volunteers are being enlisted from all the churches of the city for teaching. The teachers are usually high school graduates, or college students who desire to use their vacation time to more profit, or teachers in the public schools. The hours of the school are from 9 to 11 o'clock in the morning and from 2 to 4 in the afternoon.

"Summer Excursions With Christ."

Henry W. Hunter, pastor at Wellington, Kan., will preach during the early summer Sundays a series of sermons on the general subject, "Summer Excursions With Christ." Following are the titles of the sermons: 1. "By the sea shore." 2. "On the mountain top." 3. "Among the Flowers." 4 "With the birds." 5. "After the Finny tribe." 6. "Afar in the Wilderness."

Chilton Convinces Iowa Disciples.

One hundred and eighty delegates made a fine showing of attendance at the Southeast Iowa District convention which was held at Lenox, May 17-19. Geo. E. Roberts, State Secretary of Efficiency, and Leon S. Dudley, State Bible School Superintendent, were present and were a great help to the convention. Dr. C. M. Chilton of St. Joseph, Mo., delivered an address on Church Polity. It is reported that in all probability he led the delegates to be in favor of the delegate plan of holding conventions. Why should we run an unorganized convention instead of doing business in a systematic plan? It was decided to employ an evangelist for the district. The ministers present organized for an annual institute. The next convention goes to Shenandoah.

The Closing of the Colleges

Bethany's Seventy-fifth Commencement.

Bethany College Commencement week will open on Sunday, June 6, with baccalaureate sermon by Pres. T. E. Cramblett in the morning. In the evening Wallace Tharp, pastor North Side Church, Pittsburgh, will deliver the annual sermon to the Christian Associations. On the following Thursday the Commencement address will be delivered by Governor H. D. Hatfield of West Virginia. This is the seventy-fifth Commencement of old Bethany. The session now closing has been one of marked progress. The college has never been so prosperous. The assets of the institution in endowment and property, amount to almost a million dollars. The total enrollment for the year, not counting summer school students, is three hundred and fifty-six. These students came from twenty-four states and five foreign countries. The Agricultural Department, with its excellent equipment of 535 acres of land, and one of the best herds of thoroughbred Gucrnsey cattle in the country, is attracting a strong body of agricultural students. The dairy herd is cared for and the dairy products marketed, wholly by students. During the past eighteen months the sales of dairy products have exceeded $600 per month. Of the forty-two graduates, nine have chosen the ministery for their life work; three are to be missionaries, eighteen teachers, four attorneys, and three physicians.

Elaborate Plans at Eureka.

Eureka College at Eureka, Ill., was chartered in 1855 and graduated its first alumnus in 1860. It is closing sixty years of continuous work and will, on June 11, celebrate its fifty-fifth commencement. It is also getting ready to break ground for the new gymnasium, money for which was secured during the recent visit of the Men and Millions Commission to Eureka. This combination of events will be celebrated by a great home coming during commencement, June 6-11. Elaborate preparations are being made by the citizens of Eureka to provide for a large company of visitors. In addition to the usual invitations to alumni and former students, special invitations have been sent to one hundred business men, asking them to meet the Board of Trustees in a special conference, to three hundred young people who are prospective college students, and to several hundred old friends of the college who have helped support it through the years. The students of the institution are planning to stay over and will, on Thursday afternoon, put on one of their famous "Booster" meetings for the benefit of the visitors. The college will graduate a class of nineteen young people, a number of whom are planning for missionary service. All friends of the institution are given a very cordial invitation to join in the festivities. The Baccalaureate address will be delivered by Pres. H. O. Pritchard, Sunday, June 6, the commencement address by Henry Wallace, editor of "Wallace's Farmer," of Des Moines, on Friday, June 11.

Rev. Graham Frank, pastor at Liberty, Mo., who has been elected to the Presidency of William Woods College at Fulton, Mo. Mr. Frank has not yet announced his decision, but the college trustees are hopeful of his acceptance.

Canton College.

The week of June 6 is set for commencement festivities at Canton College in Missouri. Pres. Earle Marion Todd delivers the baccalaureate sermon on Sunday and Rev. Jenkin Lloyd Jones, of Abraham Lincoln Centre, Chicago, delivers the commencement address on Thursday.

Commencement Speakers at Cotner.

Chancellor-Emeritus W. P. Aylsworth will deliver Cotner University's baccalaureate sermon next Sunday morning and on the following Thursday Dr. Charles S. Medbury, of Des Moines, will deliver the commencement address.

Phillips Commencement This Week.

Phillips University at Enid, Okla., is holding commencement exercises this week, the baccalaureate sermon being preached last Sunday by Rev. A. G. Smith, pastor of the local Methodist Church. The commencement address is set for June 3 with George E. Lyon, of Topeka, Kan., state secretary of Kansas churches of Disciples, delivering the commencement address.

Happy Week at William Woods.

Commencement week at William Woods College, Fulton, Mo., was a gala week, with many festivities and important announcements. Dr. Peter Ainslie, of Baltimore, preached the baccalaureate sermon on Sunday, May 23, and the Hon. Champ Clark, speaker of the National House of Representatives, delivered the Commencement address on the following Wednesday. The board of trustees elected Rev. Graham Frank, pastor at Liberty, Mo., to the presidency of William Woods, to succeed Joseph L. Garvin, whose resignation was announced some time ago. Mr. Frank's decision has not yet been given. Dr. William S. Woods, of Los Angeles, Cal., the school's chief benefactor, was present during the week and proposed to build a home for the president as a special inducement to Mr. Frank to accept the position offered him. Dr. Woods also authorized the erection of a gymnasium building which will cost between $25,000 and $30,000, in addition to the proffered residence for the president, which will cost about $5,000. Plans for the residence have been prepared and the house will be erected at once. Work on the plans for the gymnasium will begin immediately, and the officials of the college hope to have the building ready for use during the fall. The gymnasium will complete the building equipment at William Woods and give the institution a physical equipment hardly surpassed by any girls' school in the West. Dr. Woods' gifts to the college already amount to $200,000, and the gifts he announced at this Commencement will run the figures up to a quarter of a million. He considers the college his child, and with Mrs. Woods takes great pleasure in doing for it. Rev. Joseph L. Garvin, retiring president of the college, submitted a report to the board at its meeting which showed the institution to be in excellent condition. The report is praised highly by individual members of the board for its thoroughness, and Mr. Garvin also is praised for the splendid condition in which he leaves the college. The outstanding event of the week was a pageant celebrating the twenty-five years of William Woods' history. The spectacle was presented on the college campus, nearly 500 actors taking part, and witnessed by 3,000 people. In the interlude between the three episodes of the pageant beautiful aesthetic dances were given in which most of the students and many young ladies of the city participated. The pageant presented the story of the college from the days of its founding as the "Christian Orphan School," through the successive periods of its change of character and growth of influence, down to the present day. No expense was spared in its production, Dr. Woods himself having given over $1,000 toward the expenses involved in it.

Among the prominent guests at the pageant were, Rev. W. F. Richardson, Kansas City; Rev. A. W. Kokendoffer, Sedalia, Mo.; Rev. A. W. Shellenberger, Mexico, Mo.; Rev. Levi Marshall, Nevada, Mo.; besides those whose names appeared on the program of the week's exercises. The year has surpassed all previous years in the prosperity enjoyed by the school, and the good prospects for next year are indicated by the fact that already seven times as many reservations are made by students as were made at this date last year.

Iowa Convention at Colfax.

The Iowa state convention will be held at Colfax, June 14-20. Monday and Tuesday are devoted to ministers' conferences. On Wednesday the convention adjourns to Des Moines to attend Drake University Commencement and hear the address by Dr. Finis Idleman. The C. W. B. M. sessions are held Wednesday afternoon and evening in Central Church, Des Moines. On Thursday the convention at Colfax is resumed under the auspices of the state society. Dr. Medbury makes the closing address on Saturday.

The Season's First D. D.

H. A. Denton, pastor First Church, Galesburg, Ill., received the degree of Doctor of Divinity from Eugene Bible University, Eugene, Ore., last week. Dr. Denton was a student some years ago at Eugene and received his Bachelor of Divinity there. This is the first D.D. announced for this season. Others will, no doubt, be announced at later commencements.

Dr. Ainslie With the Congregationalists.

Dr. Peter Ainslie, of Baltimore, addressed the state convention of Ohio Congregationalists at Painsville recently. He is mentioned by the daily press along with Dr. Washington Gladden, Dr. Hubert C. Herring, Dr. Howard A. Bridgman and others, as one of "the leading congregationalists of the country." This is a sort of error that a man of Dr. Ainslie's Christian union sentiments rejoices in.

Rains on the Knowledge of God.

F. M. Rains of the Foreign Society, Cincinnati, while visiting his son in Dallas, Tex., recently preached in Central Church in that city. "Heathenism," he said, "is always debasing. It debases men, primarily, and women. It debases all social, commercial and political relations. It debases even animals. The horse, the cow, the dog and the cat are less worthy animals in pagan lands than they are in other lands. It is good to know God. You want to make Dallas a great city. Banks will not make it great, nor railways, nor chambers of commerce, nor influential clubs. But the knowledge of God will make it great. You would like to see the nation great. You would like to see it prosper, and you know that peace is a condition of prosperity; and you are told that peace may be had and kept at the price of a navy of a suitable strength. But, friends, not navies, but the knowledge of God is the condition of peace. If the amount already expended in the present European war had been spent a little earlier for Christian education, the war would have been impossible and her poor, oppressed and decimated people would have been intelligent, free and prosperous. So is it good to build a church. It is the best possible structure. It is better to build churches than to build empires, for those who build churches build the best of empires—the kingdom of God."

North Dakota Convention.

North Dakota will hold its state convention at Minot, June 18 to 20. Some of the out of state speakers are, Dean A. M. Haggard, Des Moines; Caspar C. Garrigues, St. Louis; A. F. Hensey, Bolenge, Africa; E. W. Thornton, Cincinnati, and Mrs. Nellie Haverstack, field worker for the C. W. B. M. F. B. Sapp, state secretary, writes optimistically of the church work in North Dakota and invites the editor of the "Century" to speak, an invitation it would be a great pleasure for him to accept if it were possible.

New Children's Home Opened.

The new building at Dallas, Tex., erected by the National Benevolent Association for the care of homeless children was opened the last of April. This new home cost $40,000. It is located in East Dallas alongside of Sarah Harwood Hall, the Home for the Aged. The building is of light grey brick, trimmed with sand stone, two stories, with basement under all. When finished it will accommodate about one hundred and twenty-five children. It is perfectly modern. It was designed and constructed with reference to the care of children. One wing remains unfinished. It accommodates fifty children at present. Mr. and Mrs. Thornberry, formerly of the Home for the Aged at Jacksonville, Illinois, have just been installed as superintendent and matron, respectively. They will have the general oversight of both institutions. Mrs. Thornberry will have an assistant in each of the homes. Mr. Thornberry, with the aid of the boys, will look after the fifteen acres of ground, the joint property of the two institutions. The people of Texas are very loyal to these two homes. No work of the church in the state has a larger place in their hearts. They visited these homes in throngs during the state convention, recently held in the Central Church of Dallas.

Mr. Allen's Springfield Ministry.

Frank Waller Allen preached the annual memorial service of the Federation of Labor last Sunday at First Church, Springfield, Ill. The federation attended the church service in a body. Edgar DeWitt Jones, of Bloomington, Ill., is announced to deliver the commencement address for the graduates of Mr. Allen's class in Religious Education on Sunday evening, June 6. The spirit of Mr. Allen's ministry at First Church is richly suggested by the following prayer which appeared on the front page of the parish paper recently:

"Our Father who art in the hearts of men, teach us this day Christmindedness. Help us to forget what we have done for other people, and to remember what other people have done for us; to ignore what the world owes us, and to think what we owe the world; to put our rights in the background, and our duties in the middle distance, and our chances to do a little more than our duty in the foreground; to see that our fellowmen are just as real as we are, and try to look behind their faces and their hearts, hungry for joy; to own that probably the only good reason for our existence is not what we are going to get out of life, but what we are going to give to life; to close our book of complaints against the management of the universe, and look around us for a place where we can sow a few seeds of happiness.

"Help us to stoop down and consider the needs and desires of little children; to remember the weakness and loneliness of people who are growing old; to stop asking how much our friends love us, and ask ourselves whether we love them enough; to bear in mind the things that other people have to bear on their hearts; to make a grave for our ugly thoughts, and a garden for our kindly feelings with the gate wide open.

"Lead us to believe that love is the strongest thing in the world—stronger than hate, stronger than evil, stronger than death—and that the blessed life which began in Bethlehem nineteen hundred years ago is the image and brightness of the Eternal Love. Thus may we be Christminded and pray thy blessings in the name of Christ. Amen."

"The Isaac Errett of Our Day."

The standing of Dr. Peter Ainslie is somewhat under discussion in Iowa circles, judging by the talk in the Christian News, Iowa's state paper, edited by the irenic minded Charles Blanchard. Whatever others may think Mr. Blanchard puts Dr. Ainslie down as "the Isaac Errett of this generation." He says: "The Christian News is not the spokesman for Bro. Ainslie, nor for any man or set of men, nor for any fad or faction. As we see it, Peter Ainslie is pleading for the things for which we are supposed to stand, as a Restoration Movement, on the true Scriptural basis, and in the true Christian spirit, and comes nearer being the Isaac Errett type of man than any one among us today who is prominent in making the plea for Christian Unity. In his book and in his lecture on the "Message of the Disciples for the Union of the Church" he pleads for unity on the Catholic name—Christian; the Catholic Creed—Jesus the Christ the Son of God; the Catholic Book—the Bible or the New Testament; the Catholic Baptism—immersion; the Catholic Fellowship—all true believers. If this is not the plea of the Church of Christ then the editor of the News frankly confesses that he does not understand what it is, notwithstanding the fact that for thirty-five years he has been fairly steeped in the writings of Alexander Campbell, Ben. Franklin, Elijah Goodwin, Isaac Errett, B. W. Johnson, J. H. Garrison and a host of others of similar type."

A Pastor's "Baby Talk."

Charles H. Swift, pastor at Centralia, Mo., is a keen student of child psychology. In his parish paper he is running a series of little articles from week to week under the heading, "Baby Talk," in which he interprets the saying of Jesus about the necessity of our becoming like little children. Following is a sample of this "Baby Talk": "Baby's world of impressions is limitless. It is a world of wonderment. Everything is new and strange. Baby has no idea what things are round about nor what they are used for. They are amazing in their makeup, often holding the attention of the baby for several minutes at a time. They have got to be learned and names must be associated with them. A big job for a little brain, yet baby does it in a wonderfully short time. Think of the many, many things about the home which baby's eyes fall upon. The serious aspect of it all is that the first impressions baby receives are the lasting impressions in the moulding of baby's character. Baby's world grows rapidly for the first few years and the little mind works faithfully to keep pace with this growth. When we grow up to maturity our tendency is to be less observing. This ought not to be. God's revelation in His great world holds out to every mind a continuous study. Never should impressions cease to flood the mind. Every day should bring some new and wonderful observation. Nature is fathomless and yet how ignorant we are concerning her wonders. The tiny flower and the mighty storm are worthy of careful observation. Throw open the flood gates of the soul and let the glories of the world flow in with their forceful revelations of the Almighty. This is life and this is happiness."

—During George A. Campbell's two weeks' absence in Houston, Tex., where he was dedicating the new church building in the south side of the city, his pulpit at Hannibal, Mo., was occupied by Pres. E. M. Todd of Canton College, one Sunday, and President F. W. Burnham of the American Society, on the other Sunday.

—The Men and Millions Commission have finished their work in Illinois, spending the last days of their itinerary in the southern part of the state. They were in the state fifteen weeks.

I chatter, chatter, as I flow,
To join the brimming river;
For men may come and men may go,
But I go on forever.

Ten Big Reasons Why

BETHANY GRACED LESSONS are being adopted by so many of the best schools among Disciples.

1. There is more to them—at least a third more—than is contained in any other series.
2. They are rich, vital and full of suggestion to teacher and pupil.
3. They are free from the sectarian spirit.
4. They are soundly and fervently evangelical.
5. They are truly artistic in all their illustrations.
6. They are printed on better paper with better binding and in better taste than any other series.
7. Every lesson writer is an expert of interdenominational reputation.
8. They are a monument to the modern spirit of unity —several leading denominations have co-operated to produce them and are now using them.
9. The Disciples possess full editorial rights, through the editor, Charles Clayton Morrison.
10. Every Disciple school that uses them participates in and promotes a great Christian union enterprise.

What is Faith?
By Frank E. Boren

What is Faith?

BY F. E. BOREN.

IT IS the persistent declaration of the New Testament that we are saved by faith, and faith alone. Not faith plus something else. Not plus repentance and baptism. But faith expressing itself in repentance, baptism and godly living. The value of these things to the religious life depends upon their being acts of faith. Faith is that attitude of the soul which puts us in touch with the power that makes for goodness.

Since salvation is not a matter of locality but of character, faith is the discernment of spiritual values. Faith is not concerned merely with the abstract truthfulness of a thing, but asks: What value has this truth for life? How can it be built into the structure of manhood? Since faith is the discernment of values, it has to do first and last with ideals, for these are of supreme value in the making of character. The man who has ideals, who believes in them, loves them, chooses them, lives for them, is the man of faith. The man who has no ideals is lacking in faith, no matter what dogmas he may hold or how tenaciously he may hold them.

The man of faith is the idealist. He is the man who sees things as they ought to be and devotes himself to the fulfilment of his ideals.

FAITH "SPIRITUALIZED IMAGINATION."

Faith is the imagination at work upon the problem of human redemption—at work, not to build castles in the air as a mere dreamer, but to create sane and solid ideals of human achievement, and having created them, to choose them, to make them dominating forces of life. "Faith," said Beecher, "Is nothing but spiritualized imagination." "Faith," said Dr. Hillis, "Is but the imagination allied with the confidence that God is able to realize man's highest ideals." "Faith is the pencil of the soul that pictures heavenly things."

It is hardly necessary to state the question negatively and say what faith is not. Faith is not the same as credulity. It is not, as a little boy defined it, "believin' something when you know it ain't so." It is not the credulous and half superstitious assent to traditional dogmas upon the basis of a second-hand authority. It is not intellectual assent at all, per se, however important that may be. It is the values in the truths believed that faith lays hold upon. Faith is not a passive attitude of the soul—a patient, expectant waiting for some spiritual wonder to happen. Faith is an active, constructive, positive and vital principle.

An idealist buys a piece of land. It may be virgin soil, untouched by the hand of man. It may be an old, neglected ranch, with tumble-down buildings, neglected fences, all sadly in need of rejuvenation. But the idealist sees the ranch as it may be. In imagination, a new house displaces the old. A young, fruitful orchard takes the place of the fruitless trees. New barns, drying houses, modern equipments, form a part of the idealist's picture. The ideal may not shape itself in an instant. It grows and changes as the days go by. Suggestions and materials come from many sources. Months, even years pass away, and there may be no startling change in the old ranch. Young trees grow slowly. Gradual earnings are necessary to make the new improvements. Plans mature slowly. Crop failures interfere. Unforeseen circumstances block the way. But misfortune only tests the faith and gives a truer experience.

FAITH A DIFFICULT ACHIEVEMENT.

Such a faith is not an easy achievement. Faith is more than intellectual assent, but nevertheless, clear, robust, honest thinking is needed to give sanity and solidity to our ideals. We need more, not less, of doctrinal preaching, but our doctrine must be related to life.

Two classes of people are very disappointing to the minister. One is the kind that yawns and looks bored when he tries to do any serious thinking with them. "Don't preach doctrine," say they. "It is not what we think, but what we do that counts." Which may have a measure of truth in it, but is false as an excuse for intellectual laziness. The other is the kind that is alert at the slightest scent of heresy, as if correct belief meant everything. This class is equally impatient with real doctrinal preaching. It is satisfied with traditional dogmas. The one class is too indifferent to think; the other, too superstitious to suppose it necessary to think, so long as they blindly believe.

Shall we not get over this credulity, this superstition, this legalism, and pay the price of an ideal? Let us feed the imagination upon the idealism of the Bible. Let us fire it with the contemplation of the Christ. Let us turn it to the great problems of eternal character. Let Christ be formed in us. Let us be free. Let us be "sons of God, through faith in Christ

The Fine Art Of Finishing

ARE YOU READY FOR YOUR VACATION?

Have you made the year such a year as a vacation naturally fits onto? As you look back over the year's work does it bring you a solid sense of progress in the thing you have engaged in, a sense of real achievement, of completeness?

It is well for us before we go forth to our holiday to let the year pass before us in retrospect, to see it whole, to analyze it and to judge it.

We shall certainly find faults enough in it. We shall see where we tried and failed, and where we failed to try at all.

But in the years of most of us the constant, persistent flaw that runs through all the days and that now mars the total cycle is the fact of incompleteness—incomplete from day to day, incomplete now that the year is done.

We learn many arts and tricks of living. But one art we master only by much struggle and grace—what someone calls "the fine art of finishing."

We are ever in arrears. Much of today is taken up with doing what we should have done yesterday. Much of next year will be taken up with doing what we should have done the past year.

There is no better time to face the perverseness in our nature that is responsible for this ragged-edged character of our days and years than just before we go on a vacation.

It does not follow that we should penalize ourselves for our fault by giving up the holiday and turning back resolutely to our task again. But without morbidness we should faithfully examine our methods and motives of work and instruct our hearts in the secret by which the days may be built into next year like solid blocks of granite in a finished temple.

Let it be clear that by "work" we do not mean merely one's vocation—his business or profession. Nor yet do we mean simply what commonly is called "Christian work," for which the church affords so rich an opportunity. By "work" is meant all this and more.

One's "work" includes the daily task by which one's livelihood is made. It includes those courtesies and self-denials demanded of him who enjoys the privileges and inspirations of home and friendship. It includes the service of helpfulness in neighborhood and church. It includes the positive obligations that grow out of one's purpose to make one's personality worth as much as possible in every relationship of life.

One's work, in a word, is one's life regarded in terms of duty. And it is the lack of wholeness, of completeness, the haunting sense of constant arrearage, that rebukes us as we earnestly look back over the year before letting it go.

In this work-aspect of our life, as in every other aspect, we find that Christ has provided help for us. We are well along toward practical salvation if we have learned to bring our days and years into the presence of Christ, the Master Workman. Here as everywhere in our moral life Christ is without the sin for which our hearts now shame us.

Christ came amongst men as a worker. And at the close of his life he said without self-deception, "I have finished the work thou gavest me to do."

It was big work. It was busy work. No critic of Jesus ever called him an idler. There are the signs of strenuousness and vigor upon every page of his biography. At twelve he assured his mother that he "must be about his Father's business."

From the carpenter shop he passed into a strenuous public minstry. Here we find him engaged constantly. Crowds surrounded him. They formed at the door of the house where he was preaching. They came early in the morning with their sick to be healed. They broke up his holiday by following him around the lake into the desert place. Only at night had he a chance to pray.

No loitering, leasurely ministry here. Likely he was aged prematurely by his strenuous toiling, for some guessed him to be fifty years old when he was about thirty-two. His task was serious. The time was short. The will of God drove him on.

But as we watch the busy Master we cannot fail to observe his calm orderliness at his work. Each day seemed complete. He betrays no distraction due to unfinished tasks.

With a steadiness and balance that marks him one of the sanest of men he moves easily among his duties and keeps his work ever ahead of him. There are no arrears from day to day. Sleep came to him easily, as when he lay in the boat and slept through the tempest.

As disciples of Jesus, at work in mart and school, in home and church, no help from the Master is more needed than the help his example affords us in our workaday life.

Christ possessed the fine art of finishing.

Like Him we, too, should learn to round out the day and the year and be able at evening or at vacation time to say, "I have finished my work."

These unfinished tasks are what worry us. They deplete our vitality. They wreck health. They weaken our personal address. They prohibit our undertaking greater things.

Shall we not, before our vacation begins, carry all our unfinished tasks up into the presence of Christ, and with them our careless habit of leaving tasks unfinished, and get his secret of calm, of completeness?

It is immensely important if we follow Christ that we follow him in this as well as in other ways. It will bring an experience like a "second blessing" if we should at this end of the year lay our work alongside of Christ's work and let it be measured and judged by him.

Thus a new calmness, a new completeness, would come into the next year. And the vacation upon which we enter would prepare us to make the new work-year the brightest and best of our lives.

"When Thou Prayest"

BY JOSEPH FORT NEWTON

> "Pray without ceasing."—I Thess. 5:17.
>
> "Ask, and it shall be given you, seek and ye shall find."—Matt. 7:7.
> "When thou prayest, enter into thy closet and shut the door."—Matt. 6:6.
> "And he continued all night in the prayer of God."—Luke 7:12.

LET us take the first text first, not only because it is the shortest verse in the Greek Testament, but because it may well set the key for all our thinking about prayer, and the practice of it. How much high and beautiful truth is packed into three words! At first sight its counsel seems impossible, if not actually irreligious, as if the common offices of life were unnecessary and to be laid aside. But those offices are of divine appointment, and it would be disloyalty to devote to the exercises of religion the time required to do our work in the world. There is a place for work as well as worship, and something is amiss when either encroaches upon the other.

Therefore it has been attempted to tone this precept down and make it to mean that we are to pray often and earnestly. But the Apostle meant what he says, and if we think of it, we shall see that not only is it possible, but that there is in fact no other way of praying. Indeed, our difficulty arises from a too narrow and imperfect conception of what prayer is. We think of it as a formal exercise of devotion, but it is much more. It is not merely or necessarily going apart from the world and kneeling down and pouring out our hearts. If it were that alone, of course it would be impossible to pray without ceasing. But prayer is something higher, deeper, grander, and if in our meditation today we can arrive at a larger and truer conception of prayer it will be worth our while.

LOVE DOES NOT CEASE.

Now, consider. If we love at all, we love without ceasing. A mother never ceases to love her son. She is not always caressing him, nor is she even thinking about him every moment of the busy day. But her love never tires, never tarries, never sleeps. If you find her in the midst of her employments, she will talk to you of many things; but just mention the name of her son, and her eyes grow soft, wistful and dreamy at thought of him. Her love may be hidden and silent; but her heart is full, and a touch makes it overflow. That is her constant and characteristic attitude toward him. When she sleeps at night, her love is still aglow like a pillar of fire. She may go apart and write him a letter, but she does not have to retire to her room to think of him, much less to love him. Just so it is with prayer. If we pray at all, we must pray without ceasing. As Elizabeth Browning said:

> "In a mother undefiled,
> Prayer goeth in sleep, as true
> And pauseless as the pulses do."

Prayer, then, is not simply an act, but a constant and characteristic attitude of reverence, of dependence, of thoughtful, aspiring, adoring life. How any man can live a single day of life and not be always aware of his absolute dependence upon Another than himself, is hard to know. Manifestly it was God who made us, not we ourselves, and we are every moment dependent upon Him, as a brook is dependent upon the spring from which it flows, as a flower is dependent upon the sun from which it derives its life and color. To recognize this fact, and order our lives accordingly, is prayer. To be real, prayer must be a constant, earnest desire of the mind, the heart, and the whole life toward Him in whom we live and in whose great hand we stand every hour. As Erskine put it, "When we have learned to offer up every duty connected with our situation in life as a sacrifice to God, a settled employment is just a settled habit of prayer." No doubt this was what the ancient seer meant when he said that to labor is to pray, to work is to worship.

A MAN'S MEASURE.

Every man can measure himself by asking this question: What are, to me, the profoundest necessities of life? The religion of a man, is not what he professes, but what he lives out and acts upon from day to day. His life is his religion. As Emerson said, all men pray and all prayers are answered. Therefore be careful what you pray for in youth, for in old age you will get it. Aye, be careful what you desire unconsciously today, for tomorrow it may come upon you, and the price you pay for it may be the defeat and ruin of everything you consciously desire. An unconscious desire may be an ambush to betray and overthrow us. Moral victory lies in teaching the deepest desires of our nature to serve the highest ends of life and character. What a man is speaks louder than what he professes, and his life is an unceasing prayer the answer to which is inevitable. Our characters are the sum of our answered prayers; they reveal today what we have been really asking, desiring, pursuing in the days that have passed.

If this be so, what is the place and value of the hour of prayer in the life of a man? Perhaps it may be stated in this way. When the captain of a ship is setting out on a voyage he first of all adjusts his compasses, corrects their divergence and counteracts the influences which draw the needle from the pole. Well, that is the office of the hour of prayer. It is the adjustment of the compass of the soul; it is the restoration of deflection; it is the pointing of it to the will of God. And the soul which thus sails forth on the sea of life finds itself, not indeed freed from all storms of the spirit, but at least sure of its direction through all of them. This is to say, the hour of prayer is a time when we test what our unceasing prayer is. And the test is this. Is it the reknitting of a severed bond or the recollection of an unbroken fellowship? When our hearts get dull and dry we should pause, lay aside our tasks, and make test of our lives in the silent place of self-recollection and renewal. Happy the man who at the end of the day can say, like the old English saint, "Lord, it is the same between us as when the day began."

ALL OBJECTIONS FALL.

When we look at prayer in this larger, truer way, all the objections urged against it fail and fall flat. Admit that God produces foreintended effects by the instrumentality of the forces of nature, are not our human forces a part of these? Men do not cease to make effort to attain their ends because they cannot change the order of the natural world. They use that order to work out their ends in a thousand ways. Our effort is also foreintended, and not the less our effort made by our free will. So likewise we pray, because prayer is also a force of our nature and a law of life. To deny the efficacy of prayer is to deny the efficacy of effort, the force of faith, the power of thought, the worth of love. It is absurd to say that because it is not possible for us, by means of prayer, to persuade God to alter his plans, prayer is useless. Prayer is not an effort to deflect the will of God to ours, but to adjust our will to his. As such, it is not only vitally real and rewarding, but the most profoundly practical of all forms of human effort and aspiration.

THE LADDER OF PRAYER.

St. Bonaventure wrote of the Ladder of Virtues up which we may climb to a higher, freer life of the spirit. There is also a Ladder of Prayer, the first round of which is an instinctive, involuntary cry for deliverance from physical danger. When man is faced by dire peril, or in a situation of hazard, he cries out for help to one higher than himself. Most of the early prayers of the race that have come down to us are of this kind, often bargaining with God for safety. Above this lowest step on the Ladder is the stage when men pray for rescue from sin, first from the penalty of sin forefelt by conscience, and, later, from the stain and shame of sin itself. "God be merciful to me a sinner," is a nobler form of prayer than a mere cry of alarm in the presence of disaster. Higher still is the prayer which sees the need not only of purity, but of power to shun evil; that there are virtues that must be achieved, and graces to be attained. Thus, from a cry for pardon prayer broadens and deepens into a petition for courage and companionship in the culture of the life of faith and character.

Yet in all these forms of prayer the presence, if not the pressure, of great joy of life, not only a confession but a high ineffable communion, less an eager petition than a quiet listening. Hither the great souls come after many tribulations, and here they find rest of heart and the power not only to endure, but to conquer and achieve. Blessed is the man who learns this great secret of life, making it a passion to hold youth in sacrificial bonds, a law to hallow his mid-years of toil and care, and a light to lead and consecrate his declining years.

Prayer is the deep heart of religion, and if we only knew it there is in it a sure path out of division into the unity of the spirit. Not long ago in New Zealand a few Quakers began to hold meetings in the chapel of an Anglican church, by the goodwill of the rector. After a time the rector and his wife joined them, and then others, and all were so deeply moved and exalted that they formed a Fellowship of Silence, of which the rector tells us in a tiny book of that title. Very beautiful is their testimony to the joy and power of reunion through silent worship, as witness these words:

"We were but a handful. There was no sound of vocal prayer, no leader of worship, but our service needed no voice to begin it. There came very quietly a sense of the Presence, and the work of prayer grew strangely easy. We were not resolutely fixing our thoughts on a Friend in a far country; we were listening to One who was very near us. We were in a church, but it was more than a church. The atmosphere was different, deeper, as two substances, united, form a third, different from either, yet including both. Thus the blending of silence and fellowship created an air in which the spiritual man was set free. It was an attitude of still waiting, and listening, with the soul alert. We were of different communions, but it was hard to commit schism or propagate heresy in silence."

Prayer

FATHER of our Faith, who art Thyself the bestower of the need by which we are drawn together at this altar, and the source of the very desire which moves us to seek Thee, teach us how to pray. Purify our spirits, that nothing may remain in our desires save what is in accord with Thy high and holy will, that so our prayer may be in spirit and in truth, and invoke Thy refreshing grace. Humbly we make request, not for what we would have of Thee, but for what Thou wouldest have of us, that we may know the truth that makes us free indeed, and be the men and women we ought to be.

Enter not into judgment with us, O Lord, because of our sin, but cleanse us according to Thy tender mercy and renew in us the joy of Thy salvation. If we have spoken of others without kindness, while Thou hast ever dealt with us in long suffering love, forgive us; and enable us to forgive as we would be forgiven, to bless as we would be blessed. Make a new beginning, and bring us together in a new alchemy of love, and with some finer essence of forbearance temper our minds; that our worship may be a sacrament of fellowship one with another and with Thee who art our life, our hope, and our everlasting joy.

Remember, in Thy great compassion, all who suffer, all who walk the sorrowful way, weary and heavy of heart. May they also walk the holy way of prayer, humbly and in faith, finding that in every difficulty Thou are a Guide, in every temptation a Defense, in every weariness a Rest. Let the desperateness of our need discover to us the exceeding richness of Thy grace, and so draw us to Thee that neither life nor death can ever estrange us from Thy deep and revealing love. May the vanishings of time unveil the eternal life, in which Thou hast made us partakers even while yet we live amidst the shadows of earth.

Lord, our hearts are Thine, make them arks of Thy covenant grace and presence; our days are few, help us to live them in purity, nobility and service. Give us strength and wisdom to walk willingly in obedience to Thy awful yet gracious law, and a quiet and cheerful trust in Thy infinite love. By Thy spirit teach us how to live, how to love, even as Thou hast loved us; how to bear when life seems unbearable, how to hope when all seems hopeless. In accordance with Thine ancient name, we beseech Thee to pray in us, correcting our foolish desires and lifting our hearts into a purer, deviner air; in His name, Amen.

HEAVEN PRAYS TO EARTH.

What can be the meaning of the last text, which Wesley translated by the phrase "the prayer of God?" It is indeed strange and almost startling. Does heaven pray to earth, as earth must needs pray to heaven? Indeed, yes. No soul climbs the shining ladder of prayer to return alone. Angels ascend and descend, thitherward and hitherward, now facewards, now returning, in the fellowship of God and the soul. Yes, heaven prays to earth, "as though God did beseech you by us," said St. Paul, "be ye reconciled." What a sentence! Its suggestions are overwhelming, waking echoes too far and deep for us to follow. Yet if prayer be a constant and characteristic attitude of reverence in man, it is itself a proof of constant and unwavering love in God, as effect reveals cause. After all, mysticism is only common sense, the endeavor to bring the love and light of God to solve the problem of the day and do the duty appointed to it.

THE LAW OF DAY BY DAY.

Whoso learns to live in the love of God comes to know that other great law of life—the law of day by day. This law runs all through the grand old Bible. Manna lasted only one day. Jesus taught us to live one day at a time, asking only for bread to feed us from sun to sun, "this day our daily bread." If you have a great sorrow, bear it for one day, without bitterness and without foreboding. Sufficient unto the day is the duty thereof, and the grace to do it or bear it. Thousands would despair but for the wise law of day by day. Tender and beautiful is that noble hymn, which is also a sublime prayer:

"Lord, for tomorrow and its needs
I do not pray;
Keep me, my God, from stain of sin,
Just for today.
Let me no wrong or idle word
Unthinking say;
Set Thou a seal upon my lips,
Father, today.
Let me both diligently work,
And duly pray;
Let me be kind in word and deed,
Father, today.
Let me in season, Lord, be grave,
In season gay;
Let me be faithful to Thy grace,
Dear Lord, today."

self is felt—not necessarily selfishness, but a sense of self giving an eager, insistent urgency of prayer. Not until we climb up to the Great Prayer, "Thy will be done," does this shadow of self vanish and admit us to the supreme emancipation. Having forgotten ourselves, we are free. Thinking only of a will higher and wiser than our own, the self which vexed us and made us restless and fearful even in our prayer, passes in music out of sight, and we find peace. Other peace there is none, as Dante learned long ago, and until we make that ultimate surrender our lives are lived in miseries and in shallows. Then prayer becomes the

THE ONLY WAY.

DR. COMBS of Kansas City found a great gospel text in the fact that Italy's entrance into the European war was determined not by any military party, nor by the king, but by the clamor of the people themselves.

For months this clamor has been increasing while the king and the court have done all in their power to repress it. The advantage of the nation lay in the course of peace and neutrality, but the people's passion was aroused, the opportunity to redress ancient wrongs and to recover territory was too obvious and appealing, and at last, as the headlines put it, "the street won!"

This, says Dr. Combs, brings us back to first principles. It is the man in the street who must be taught the law and art of peace. The notion that wars are imposed by sovereigns or by the military clique and that the people if left to themselves do not want war and would not wage one does not have the support today that it seemed to have eight or nine months ago.

There is no wholesale method of stopping war or any other evil. These things spring out of the savage heart of man, and only as that heart is tamed and trained to peace and righteousness will the nations find peace.

The church, therefore, in working at the task of winning individual men and women to the Christian ideal of life, is doing the thing that is absolutely indispensable if our social order is ever to become the Kingdom of God.

GREAT BRITAIN'S DEFEAT.

WHO does not pity poor England in the recent ghastly revealings of the deep clutch of the liquor traffic upon her social order?

If ever there were cause for belief that a positive step in reform was about to be taken it was given to the world a few months ago when Mr. Lloyd George declared that liquor was a more serious foe to England than Germany or Austria. It was plain to all the world that Mr. Lloyd George was feeling his way toward prohibition of the liquor traffic. Through his suggestion, no doubt, the king took a pledge of total abstinence for the period of the war, and the country was asked to stand with its king.

Systematic statistics were compiled, showing the indisputable effects of drink upon the efficiency of labor. All the arguments—pragmatic, patriotic and moral—were brought forward again and again in speech and newspaper by statesman and soldier and preacher.

But the roots of the business are driven down so deep in the social soil that so far no progress at all has been made in dislodging it.

Driven from the policy of prohibition, Mr. Lloyd George has in turn tentatively championed the policy of prohibition of spirituous liquors only, as distinct from malt liquors, then the policy of state ownership of breweries, distilleries and public houses, and now a policy of mere local regulation in the vicinity of the great plants where munitions of war are made.

A few weeks ago we were all sure Great Britain would soon be in the "dry" column with Russia and France. But it seems evident now that the utmost to be expected is a limited and cautious tinkering with the drink evil.

Russia's success in this reform is due to the autocratic power under which the nation lives.

France's success is due to the assumption of similar autocratic power by the government under stress of extraordinary peril.

But England is still a democracy, and democracy accepts reformation only through education, and England has lacked education on the question of the evil of drink.

THE LOS ANGELES CONVENTION.

UNFORTUNATE for the larger work and urgent problems of the Disciples is the fact that this year's General Convention is to be held so far from the center of the brotherhood.

Two years ago the convention was on the rim, at Toronto, last year it was again near the rim, at Atlanta. This year it is as far from the center as it could have been taken.

Too long has the convention location been considered from the standpoint of the benefit the gathering might confer upon the cause in this or that community. Such a consideration is valid, but it is relatively unimportant.

The primary consideration must hereafter be: What city offers the best opportunity for the convention to gather its constituency together to do its work?

The Los Angeles convention will, in all likelihood, be as large a meeting as could be expected. The local attendance from Southern California promises to make up in numbers what the more remote churches fail to send.

But the essence of a convention is not numbers but representatives. And in these times when the problems of our church life are so acute the convention place should be the most accessible in the country.

For at least the next five years no General Convention ought to be held outside the great central section of our land where the preponderating majority of Disciples dwell. That would give a chance to thrash out to a finish two or three of the troublous questions which illy attended conventions cannot effectually solve.

A REGRETTABLE COURSE.

SAD news it will be to all forward-facing men and women to learn of the course chosen by Rev. George B. Van Arsdall, whose resignation as pastor of Central Church, Denver, has recently been announced.

Mr. Van Arsdall confesses that it is his purpose to leave the ministry altogether because he is disillusionized as to the effectiveness of the Church in modern society.

"The call for larger service comes from outside the walls of the Church," he is reported in a Denver newspaper to have said, "and I hope I may answer it."

Mr. Van Arsdall's leave-taking from the Christian ministry is described by a feature writer who betrays the characteristic effort of such writers to make a sensational story. But, however the facts in the case may be exaggerated by the reporter, there is enough of truth plainly evident in his account to cause deep regret in the hearts of all who read it.

Mr. Van Arsdall has had a useful ministry for twenty goodly years among the Disciples of Christ. His work has prospered in Denver, where he has been regarded as a leader in all good causes making for civic uplift. In the wider interests of the Disciples he has been influential, holding at the present time the presidency of the state convention.

In resigning Mr. Van Arsdall confesses anew his faith in God and Christ and the great ends which Christianity seeks to attain, but confesses also his sense of the impotence of the church in this transition time to attain these ends, and speaks of his impatience with the limiting restraints under which the minister is compelled to do his work. He says:

> "Neither a clergyman nor his family own themselves. There is no privacy. All of our time and home belong to the members of the congregation. We are on call early and late, and setting an example is an arduous task."

All of which is true. The pastor's personality and family come near being public property. And it is indeed an arduous task to live out one's life on those terms.

But how far-reaching a life it is when one is enabled by divine grace to make a success of it! We have only to think of a few great pastor souls in order to refresh our own faith in the preeminent effectiveness of the Christian ministry.

That men who bear the burdens of church leadership in these days of confused purposes and clashing ideals would often fall on discouragement is not strange. But in the case of George B. Van Arsdall all will hope his discouragement and disillusionment are but a temporary mood, exaggerated by the newspaper report, and that he will see his way clear to continue in the calling whereto he was ordained.

A GROWING FELLOWSHIP.

IN THE practice of an unsectarian fellowship in their local churches a comradeship between Baptists and Disciples appears to be steadily growing.

A number of Baptist churches have in recent years adopted the practice of accepting a letter from any other church of Christ as a sufficient qualification for admittance to membership in their congregations.

The most recent acquisition to the front rank of progress is that of Dr. D. T. Denman, pastor of the First Baptist Church of Oak Park, a suburb of Chicago. He has been "called upon the carpet" for the departure from custom which his church recently introduced. At a meeting of the Baptist Association last week a delegate objected to the appointment of Dr. Denman on a certain committee, and this same delegate tried to have the Oak Park pastor debarred from preaching in the Englewood Baptist pulpit, in the absence of the Englewood pastor, on account of his alleged departure from Baptist traditions.

All of which reminds us of something familiar.

The movement for fraternity, for unhindered fellowship across denominational lines, for a fellowship as broad as Christ's fellowship—that movement, of course, is not peculiar to the Disciples. It is working in all Christian bodies.

Baptists, it is true, do not have equally strong motives for breaking down the custom of close membership that Disciples have.

In addition to the clear teaching of the Scripture on the meaning of baptism, the Disciples have the strong motive of their fundamental principle of Christian unity.

But the teaching of the Scripture is becoming plain enough to some Baptists in this county, as it has long been plain to their brethren in Great Britain.

We welcome Dr. Denman and his great church into the fellowship of those who cannot longer debar from their churches any one whom Christ has reecived into His Church.

INDIGENOUS EVANGELISM.

PASTOR F. L. MOFFETT of Springfield, Mo., reporting in The Christian Century of two or three weeks ago an evangelistic meeting held for his congregation by Dr. H. O. Breeden of California, made this discriminating comment:

> It was especially pleasing to me as pastor to have no outgrown theology palmed off on the people in the name of evangelism, no coarse expressions in the name of effectiveness and no harsh, cutting things said in the name of loyalty. Love was the dominant note throughout. Possibly the most satisfactory thing to me as pastor is the fact that when I took my pulpit the Sunday following the close of the meeting, I did not need to create a normal atmosphere again; it had been normal all through the campaign.

The words of that comment are as illuminating of evangelism in general as they are appreciative of the particular evangelist to whose work they refer. The fault and bane of our typical modern revivalism is that it is a sort of importation into the church, something sensationally different from the steady, fruitful processes of church life.

Everything about these meetings is labeled "special." There is a special choir, a special song leader, a special personal workers' organization, special songs, a special order of service, and often a special place for the meetings to be held in, such as a tabernacle or operahouse.

Along with the special devices there goes a special mood or attitude on the part of the people. The reverence and reflectiveness that belong inherently to religion are broken down, and a special "crowd consciousness" is created, which responds to hypnotic suggestion more than to the Truth.

When the "special" meeting is over the pastor experiences great difficulty in taking up the thread of his regular work again. The hymns are strangely different; the church house is like a foreign land to those who were converted in the tabernacle; the quiet and thoughtful mood of the Sunday morning service is unlike anything that belonged to the revival campaign with its high pressure activity; even the minister's message is changed—a theology is preached in the revival that the pastor of average intelligence would not tolerate in his regular preaching.

Such revivals are exotic.

Either the constructive processes of our church life are misdirected and mistaken, or that sort of revival is out of place in them.

That our pastors feel this inconsistency increasingly is becoming clear. The discerning are becoming a large company who demand an indigenous evangelism, an evangelism consistent with and complementary of the regular processes of church activity.

An indigenous evangelism will make so much of its Evangel, its Truth, that it will, in comparison, hold in contempt the devices and methods which modern successful revivalists adopt to awaken or to create spiritual life.

The Larger Christian World

A DEPARTMENT OF INTERDENOMINATIONAL ACQUAINTANCE

Baptists Adopt Five Year Program

The northern Baptists recently held their national convention at Los Angeles and one item of business was the adoption of a program of activities lasting for five years. They propose that in that period a million people shall be added to their churches by baptism. They are seeking to recruit a force of five thousand men and women for special service in America and the non-Christian world. The denomination will ask for an annual income of six million dollars for missions and benevolence. The means to be adopted to realize these ambitious designs are evangelism, systematic giving, the every-member canvass, education, social service, and prayer.

Baptists Issue New Year-book

The Baptists of America have a very comprehensive year-book giving the statistics of the denomination in great detail. It is published by the publication society and prepared by Dr. J. G. Walker. It contains information about the various Baptist activities. The issue for 1915 is just out and gives the statistics for the denomination, showing that they have 54,410 churches in the United States, 37,371 ordained ministers, and a total membership of 5,932,364, which is an increase for the year of 133,111. The percentage of growth is less than for some denominations, on account of the great bulk of membership which has already been acquired. The increase for the last ten years is as follows: For 1915, 108,515; for 1906, 103,342; for 1907, 156,871; for 1908, 145,653; for 1909, 151,192; for 1910, 167,575; for 1911, 170,254; for 1912, 75,375; for 1913, 269,680; for 1914, 133,111, making a total of 1,331,568, or an average yearly gain of 133,156. During the year 1914 there were 309,243 baptisms, an increase over the previous year of 17,572. There are 42,769 Sunday schools, 325,475 officers and teachers, and 3,288,992 scholars. There was given for church expenses $22,486,248, an increase of $1,701,516; for Sunday school expenses, $1,078,009; for State missions, $1,059,914; for home missions, $965,698; for foreign missions, $1,231,664; for Bible and publication work, $113,619; for education, $424,391; for miscellaneous, $1,907,488, making a grand total of $29,043,181, an increase of $1,493,470.

Episcopalians Lose in Detroit

The eighty-second annual convention of the diocese of Michigan of the Protestant Episcopal denomination has been held recently. Bishop Williams, the noted social service speaker, presided. The reports showed that while the churches in smaller towns had increased 74 per cent in a given period, the churches in Detroit had decreased 18 per cent. The diocese is to have a Commission on Church Architecture. Social Service in this diocese is one of the prominent features of Episcopalian effort.

Resist Union With Unitarians

Certain ministers in Massachusetts are undertaking to bring about union between Congregationalists and Unitarians. This tendency is being vigorously resisted by the evangelical elements of the denomination.

Presbyterians Care for Sick Ministers

The Board of Ministerial Relief of the Presbyterian church north has established a sanitarium at Albuquerque, New Mexico, where the ministers of the denomination who need sanitarium care will be received. It has accommodations for fourteen men.

Bible in Schools Agitates New Zealand

There has been a vigorous campaign in New Zealand to put into operation the plan of religious education in use in New South Wales. This provides for a series of Bible lessons taught by the teacher in the public school. In addition, the denominational pastors are given the "right of entry" to impart denominational instruction at certain hours. The plan seems to work well in New South Wales, but the effort to transplant the plan to New Zealand has resulted in a tie vote in Parliament and may bring about the fall of the ministry. The Roman Catholics opposed the innovation, though priests were to be given the "right of entry."

Archbishops Ask Support for Government

The archbishops of Canterbury and York have issued the following joint pastoral letter, which was to be read in all churches June 6: "After ten months of war we see more clearly than at first the greatness and severity of the ordeal which is putting the spirit of our nation to the test. The spirit arrayed against us threatens the very foundation of civilized order in Christendom. It wields an immense and ruthless power. It can only be decisively rolled back if we, for our part, concentrate the whole strength of body, mind, and soul, which our nation and our empire holds. We solemnly call on all members of the church and urge upon all fellow citizens to meet with glad and unstinted response whatever demands of service or sacrifice the government decides to make. The great war, righteously waged, calls out that spirit of willing sacrifice with a plainness and intensity which nothing can rival. On behalf of righteousness, and in our country's cause, there is nothing too dear or too sacred to be offered. God has so taught us. Let

Pittsburgh Has Socialist Church

Rev. William A. Prosser, a prominent Methodist minister of Pittsburgh, has formed the United People's church of Pittsburgh, a socialist religious organization. He was formerly pastor at McKee's Rocks church near that city, and later of a wealthy church called the Ames church. He felt, however, that his work as a religious socialist needed more room, so he has organized an independent church. The United People's church recently celebrated the first anniversary of its birth, and the reports were very interesting. The institution was launched with a pledged membership of 85. The increase during the year, from the first to the last Sunday inclusive, was 228, an average per month of 19. Two have died, four have been dismissed by letter, and five are said to "have gone back to the fleshpots of Egypt," leaving a total membership, at the end of the first year, of 302. Among this membership there are Jews and Gentiles, Catholics and Protestants, Socialists and non-Socialists, liberals and conservatives. Its primary principles are eight in number: The Universal Fatherhood of God. The Universal Brotherhood of Man. The equality of the sexes and the same standard of life for both. The superiority of human rights over property rights and the subordination of institutions to human well-being. Personal liberty in matters of conscience, speech and activity limited by and commensurate with collective good. The limitless possibilities of man and society under a social order of justice. The socialization and democratization of society. The organic union of the human race, a universal coöperative commonwealth.

The object of the institution is set forth in the following statement: "We declare our object to be the establishment of the kingdom of God and His justice on earth by destroying the profit system, educating and organizing the people, preaching true catholicity and righteousness and practicing charity in all its Christ-like forms, especially toward such as are in distress through sickness or poverty."

us obey by what we give and by what we are. May His will be done!"

City Superintendent Changes

Rev. W. E. Parker, Jr., formerly associate superintendent of the church extension board of Chicago Presbyterians, will become superintendent of church extension at San Francisco. He was once in charge of a Russian church in San Francisco, composed of members of the Molokanee sect.

Well-Known Pastor Goes to Denver

Dr. John McNeill, for many years the well-known pastor of a Presbyterian church in Toronto, Can., has been called to Central Presbyterian church, Denver. He was installed on May 10, pastors of Episcopalian, Methodist, Disciple and Baptist churches taking part.

Advertising Men to Fill Pulpits.

For five days, beginning June 20, Chicago will entertain the biggest gathering of advertising and publicity men ever assembled in one city. Delegates to the number of 10,000, representing 160 organizations comprising the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World, will come from every state in the Union, Canada, England and the English-speaking islands of the Pacific. On the morning of Sunday, June 20, pulpits in fifty Chicago churches will be filled by business and advertising men of national prominence, who will deliver lay sermons on business ethics.

Senator Root's Prayer

As there was no minister present at the session of the Constitutional Convention of the state of New York one day a week or two ago, Elihu Root, the chairman of the convention, offered the opening prayer, and it was one upon which any minister would find it difficult to improve. This was the prayer: "Almighty God, we pray Thee to guide our deliberations this day. Make us humble, sincere, devoted to the public service. Make us wise, considerate of the feelings and the opinions and the rights of others. Make us effective and useful for the advancement of Thy cause of peace and justice and liberty in the world."

Southern Presbyterians

Southern Presbyterians have recently been holding their assembly at Newport News, Va. Evangelism was the dominant interest and the visitors participated in shop meetings. A telegram was sent the northern Presbyterians commending the work of Dr. J. Wilbur Chapman in the south. The assembly voted down a proposition to abolish the life eldership in the church. A committee on comity was appointed to face out some knotty problems where the denomination overlaps with the northern body.

Here and There

A Pastor's Dream

He saw a reverent congregation before him as he stepped into the pulpit. There was no talking, no shuffling, no indications of indifference to the occasion. The organist brought out the soul of the organ because there was more than his fingers in the service. The hymns were sung with spirit and feeling. The pastor felt that the deepest longings of his heart were being met by the response of the congregation. Deep answered to deep in that part of the service. The sermon was better than the sermon on paper because of the expectant attitude of all. Nobody slept; nobody assumed that the sermon was "the same old thing" over again; nobody acted as if an intolerable bore was being suffered for half an hour. At the conclusion, a young man and wife came forward to confess their faith. The pastor not long before had stood with them by the grave of their first born. The memories of that hour were upon all concerned. The benediction was pronounced, and all wended their way home subdued and strengthened by the influences of the holy place.

It was a dream, yet not all a dream.

Another Dream.

A pastor dreamed that war in Europe had ceased, that war among religious journals had ceased, that peace was reigning on the earth, and in the sanctum. He awoke—in heaven.

Rare Parishioners We Have Known

Every congregation has a few whom no pastor ever forgets. We have one in mind whom we shall call Brother James. He is a beautiful spirit, blessed with an abundance of this world's goods which are freely bestowed, judicious and charitable in all things, never speaking at all of his neighbors, unless he can speak well. He is at Sunday-school and prayer meeting and at the preaching service twice a day. We have often wanted to elect him to an office, but he prefers to remain in the ranks or in the trenches—anywhere so long as he may do his own quiet work. In all the years, he has been involved in no pastor's or church quarrels, but ever has been the pastor's friend. He has a good word for the sermon, leaning always to the side farthest from flattery. There is a fine courtliness in his bearing; no one ever becomes intimate with him, and none would dare to become familiar. He has a few faults which mark him as a human being, but not often does it fall to the lot of ordinary men to be associated with a Brother James who will leave such a sense of loneliness in the congregation when he joins the choir invisible, and a place that will ever be hard to fill.

What Is Sectarianism?

The word may have a good and a bad sense. If we admit that Luther, Calvin, Wesley, and Campbell found a purer form of worship and a nearer approach to New Testament Christianity by "breaking" with the older forms, then they were justified in their course. They were protesting against abuses which age had sanctioned or ignored. They were called schismatics, heretics, etc., but was the charge just? Were they heretical in coming out or would they have been schismatic and heretical by staying in? They were disturbers of the peace, but would they have kept the peace by remaining silent and doing violence to their sense of right? The world has long since approved the course of men who break with old forms of faith that they may realize the best that is within them, rather than to sanction error by holding inviolate the traditional forms. These made a "schism" in the body for the good of all concerned, as history will attest.

The sectarianism which is ever to be deplored is that which sees the good of party only, or which sacrifices the greater good for a minor triumph, or continues to assert that the part is equal to the whole. This form is so evident on all sides that it were superfluous to do more than mention it.

Of Course You Have Noticed

That the brethren always swell up with pride when all the church debts have been paid off—by the women of the congregation.

That many men would get on the water wagon if it were an automobile.

That when our neighbor starts a scheme for the welfare of the church it should be opposed because it may lead to ecclesiasticism, but when we start one it should be put through because it is wholly in accord with the Scriptures.

That choir troubles make the same demand upon our vocabulary as tire troubles.

That there are many good people in every congregation who have missed their calling. Their knowledge of how the sermon should be preached, what the subject should be, how the church should be conducted, is proof conclusive that they should have entered the ministry.

That the man who is as meek as a mouse in his own home often aspires to be the church boss.

"The Highest Point"

The Lesson in Today's Life.

BY JOHN R. EWERS.

Review, Lesson for June 27.

There is a place upon a hill-top in Pittsburgh where one may stand, and from the perch of one of our good member's home, see the entire East End spread out at one's feet. There it is, the Carnegie schools and institute, the university, Schneley park, the avenues lined with superb residences, the church spires, the office buildings of East Liberty, the railroad curving about in its deep cut, the trees and the bordering hills. It is a fine sight—the most beautiful residence section in the whole wide world, without any exception. Ask your globe trotter and he will acknowledge it. Away over on the highest hill stands a great brown church—the highest point, and strangely enough, a Protestant church, commanding the landscape.

The Outstanding Fact.

Sweeping our eyes over the past quarter, what truth stands out like a church spire over and above the mass of common facts? Is it not the superiority of David's personality? Saul was rejected because he was inferior. Account for that inferiority as you will. David won because "It was in him" and you may seek, if your please, for the reasons for that situation. Why does one man "have it in him" and another not? There is a very interesting question for this review study.

Personality.

On a clear night we love to look up at the stars. Very soon certain shining points stand out with a singular distinctness. They show. In any group of people, one or two, after a time stand forth with a distinct power, all others are lesser lights. "After a time," I said, for there is usually present in any company one or two conceited individuals who desire to monopolize the conversation and to impress themselves upon others. But wait awhile and there will emerge the people with the real worth, not so noisy and self-assertive, perhaps, the ones with the quiet power. That which causes them to rise above their fellows is personality. You feel it. You bow before it. You are mastered by it. It is as irrisistible as the rising sun.

Breeding.

Personality is grounded in ancestors. There is no formula for it. You cannot produce it by rule. Keats was born in a livery stable. Franklin's father was a soap-maker. Lincoln—well, God and Nancy Hanks had something to do with him. But nevertheless, blood tells. Breeding counts. Strange, hidden streams of influence coursing down through ancestors unite to form the attractive, capable elements in people who possess that indefinable something called personality.

Training.

Cultivation alone will not accomplish it. Basswood will never become oak; onions will never become roses. No amount of weeding and watering will ever make figs grow upon thistles or grapes upon thorns. And yet culture has much to do in adding charm and finish. Training cuts the diamond. Training polishes the gem. Education helps what ancestors contribute.

Association.

Companies cannot give personality, but they can greatly assist in bringing out what is already in. As sunshine coaxes the seeds so good friends develop the good in one. Breeding plus cultivation, plus association, equal personality. And personality conquers the earth.

The Conquest.

The twelve lessons of the past quarter show the fading out of Saul like the moon before the rising sun. David is superior. The elements were so mixed in him that everyone recognized the man. Saul felt his weakness in the presence of David. Dancing maidens sang the praises of the man of destiny. Men of initiative and force gathered under his standards. Victory perched upon his banners. David was inevitable, because he possessed personality. You cannot choose your parents, but you can choose your school and your companions. You can use your imperial will and then, if there be anything in you worth while, it will come out. And I believe it is in you!

Disciples Table Talk

Dr. Philputt Honored by Lodge Parishioners

Twenty-five Scottish Rite Masons who are also members of Central Church, Indianapolis, presented their pastor, A. B Philputt, with a beautiful Scottish Rite ring set in diamonds, on the occasion of his recent initiation into their order. The membership in the order was also the gift of the men. One of their number explained that this was simply one way in which they desired to show their esteem for Dr. Philputt's work and his friendship. "He is one of the finest men we know," said the parishioner.

Texas Needs $100,000 for State Work

Plans to raise $100,000 for State mission work were discussed at a meeting of the State Board of the Texas Christian Missionary Society, the first held since the convention in Dallas on May 4. Judge Anson Rainey was re-elected president of the board and A. L. Clinkinbeard was elected recording secretary. A. D. Rodgers of Cleburne was re-elected State superintendent of missions. Following a discussion of mission work to be done in Texas during the next fiscal year, it was decided that it will be necessary to raise $100,000 to carry out this work as desired.

Courier May Become State Organ

The Christian Courier, of Dallas, Tex., an estimable weekly paper devoted to the Disciples' church life of Texas, is likely to be taken over by the state board of the Texas Missionary Society and operated as its organ. A committee was appointed at Dallas to investigate the practicability of such a move. The paper is in hard lines just now on account of the delinquency of its subscription list. For some years the Courier has been owned and conducted by Cephas Shelburne and his son, C. G. Shelburne. It will be with the consent of these two men that the church will take the paper under its direct control and it is understood that they are in sympathy with the proposal.

Texas Christian University Closes This Week

Texas Christian University graduates this year number thirty-five. Twenty will receive diplomas from the college of arts and science and eleven from the college of medicine. Three or four will complete special courses. The commencement program began Saturday, June 5, with a joint session of the four literary societies of the university. Hugh McLellan, pastor of the Central Christian Church of San Antonio, preached the baccalaureate sermon Sunday, June 6. Mr. Cullen F. Thomas of Dallas delivers the commencement address Thursday, June 10.

Keuka College Commencement

President Joseph A. Serena is to give the baccalaureate sermon to the graduates of Keuka College, Keuka, N. Y., on Sunday, June 20, and Dr. W. A. Granger, President New York State Baptist Missionary Convention, will deliver the commencement address on the following Wednesday. Keuka College is a union school originally participated in by Disciples and Free Baptists. The latter body has been merged with the regular Baptists since the uniting of forces in the support of the college.

Austin Hunter on Bewitching People

Taking as his text the question in Galatians, "Who hath bewitched you?" Austin Hunter spoke at Jackson Boulevard Church, Chicago, as follows:

"People may be so bewitched that they will not obey the gospel. The force of evidence, the charm of hope, the sense of need, the spirit of gratitude, all combine to draw one under the leadership of Christ. But many are so bewitched that they do not accept this life. How are they bewitched? Some are deluded by the confusion of voices.

"There were parties in the Galatian churches. The divisions among God's people are always confusing. The lack of unity causes many to feel there is no certain way. Our Lord prayed for the unity of his followers in order 'that the world might believe.' Christian union is prerequisite to the world's evangelization. Almost two hundred denominations lay their claims upon the American people. Our divisions are for the most part over incidental and inconsequential matters, brought about in an age when people were thinking a great deal more about doctrines than about Christ. When the church speaks with a clear, harmonious voice, multitudes, now indifferent, will be drawn into its fellowship."

Receives D.D. From Methodist College.

Edgar DeWitt Jones is rounding out a nine years' ministry with First Church, Bloomington, Ill. At the commencement exercises of Illinois Wesleyan University of Bloomington, on June 9, that institution conferred the degree of D.D. upon him. It is believed that this is the first time any minister other than one of the Methodist faith has received this honor from that institution. A very successful every member canvass was carried out by First Church this spring. Some of the results were remarkable and the entire membership has been greatly strengthened thereby. The canvass was made by one hundred men, and out of their work has come a permanent force of men who will do Sunday visitation and support the pastor in various ways. This church has recently called as financial secretary Mr. W. D. Dewese, for many years office secretary of the Illinois Christian Missionary Society.

Dr. Combs Optimistic on War's Outcome

Speaking in his Independence Boulevard pulpit in Kansas City, Dr. George H. Combs said some optimistic things on the outcome of the present war. He said:

"The hope I see in these events is the enforced consideration of religious questions. Men are asking 'Is there a God?' and 'Shall the dead live again?' And where there is no questioning there can be no religion. You must possess a doubt before you can obtain faith.

"In my opinion this war is furnishing a seed bed for a world-wide revival of religious fervor.

"Mars is rippling up the furrows and moistening the ground with blood and tears, and sowing in fields once rank with pride and arrogance a plenteous crop of humble hearts.

"When the battle clouds dissolve everything will be new. A new Germany, a new England, Russia, France, Austria and Italy. Perhaps a new United States. All will be well spiritually then. Old age is never receptive. Youth is trusting and hopeful. God will become a universal Father when everybody is suffering alike. Hitherto He has been known in Germany as the "God of Germany" and in other nations as their own particular deity. Distress recognizes no treaties between nations and humble men and women never claim to stand higher before heaven than their brothers and sisters.

"Religion is the only agent that can prevent war and unite mankind, and it thrives in poverty better than prosperity. Fullness of the stomach means sleekness and self-satisfaction. It brings drowsiness and spiritual stupor. The man who has never seen sorrow is hardly a good Christian. Hard knocks is the great savior of deteriorating stock.

"So after each of the warring nations has fought to repletion, and the world thereby is made new again, I feel certain God will come again into his own and his religion will be generally accepted as the only insurance against a repetition of such horrors for all time to come."

Iowa Convention Place Changed

The meeting place of the Iowa State convention has been changed from Colfax to Des Moines. The date is June 14-19. It seems that the grounds where the gathering was to be held in Colfax were not likely to be put in readiness in time and the State Fair grounds at Des Moines were chosen instead. The convention date falls on commencement week at Drake University, and it is expected that the two events will draw a great throng of Iowa Disciples to the city.

Peoria Church to Build

Central Church, Peoria, Ill., is carrying out its plan for a new church home. Pledges have recently been given by members of the congregation that justify beginning work in a few weeks. The cost of the building will be about $60,000. Some stir was made in the city recently by the refusal of the mayor to grant a special permit for the erection of a temporary wooden structure within the fire limits for purpose of holding services until the new house was completed. It was charged by a local paper that the animus back of the refusal was resentment toward the pastor, Homer E. Sala, on account of a vigorous attack made by him upon the mayor in his recent campaign for re-election. Public sentiment seemed to regard with disfavor the mayor's attitude.

Commencement at Johnson Bible College

Johnson Bible College at Kimberlin Heights, Tenn., held its graduating exercises May 23-26. The baccalaureate sermon was delivered by Pres. Ashley S. Johnson and the leading address on commencement day was given by George R. Stuart, the southern evangelist, who spoke on "Lop-Sided Folks." All the graduates have already received calls to churches and pass directly from their school work into the ministry.

Elbert Hubbard on a Jones Sermon

The tragic death of Elbert Hubbard on the Lusitania has brought to light a bit of correspondence regarding his opinion of a sermon by Edgar DeWitt Jones, of Bloomington, Ill., on the Divinity of Christ. A synopsis of the sermon was read in a Bloomington paper by Mr. H C. Hawk of Battle Creek, Mich., who sent it on to Mr. Hubbard with this accompanying note:

"Here is a man who believes in preaching up the Deity of Christ. I am told that many of the leading men of Bloomington heard this sermon, and you know there are some thinkers in Bloomington. My reason for sending it to you for your perusal and consideration, is that I happened to have turned from reading the May Fra directly to the Pantagraph containing this report of a sermon which has apparently attracted more than ordinary attention in Bloomington. At any rate, it will do you good to read it."

Mr. Jones shortly received the following letter from the "sage of East Aurora":

"My Dear Friend: I read your sermon with great pleasure, and a good deal of it I can understand and appreciate. You are approaching this subject from one side, I the other.

"It is inconceivable to me that Deity should incorporate itself in any one man, and not in all. God is not a man, He is not a person. But this supreme energy in which we bathe and of which we are a part, we call for lack of a better term, God. That we understand it or comprehend it, I would not for a moment maintain.

"But outside of this Supreme Energy, I cannot imagine of anything. I regard this Energy or First Principle as a whole, and its highest manifestation finds itself in this phenomenon we call Man.

"That this particular man of whom you have so well spoken surpasses perhaps any other man who has ever lived, I am quite willing to admit; and in this sense he certainly was Deity. But if he is my brother, then I, too, am in degree Deity, or represent Deity.

"With all kind wishes, ever, I am, yours sincerely,

"ELBERT HUBBARD."

Have We Drifted?

It looks odd to see in the calendars of Disciples' churches the Christian Endeavor topic of May 9, "Why I am Proud of My Denomination."

Dr. Rauschenbusch Makes a Paraphrase.

Dr. Walter S. Rauschenbusch never fails to score a point for the social interpretation of Christianity, he being an avowed Socialist. A paraphrase of the Ode to Love has been given to the world in his recent book, "Dare We Be Christians," which has attracted wide attention. "The values created by love never fail; but whether there are class privileges, they shall fail; whether there are millions gathered, they shall be scattered; and whether there are vested rights, they shall be abolished. For in the past strong men lorded it in ruthlessness and strove for their own power and pride, but when the perfect social order comes, the strong shall serve the common good. Before the sun of Christ brought in the dawn, men competed and forced tribute from weakness; but when the full day shall come, they will work as mates in love, each for all and all for each. For now we see in the fog of selfishness darkly, but then with social vision; now we see our fragmentary ends, but then we shall see the destinies of the race as God sees them. But now abideth honor, justice, and love, these three, and the greatest of these is love."

Prof. Iden's "Upper Room" Class

A remarkable work is that done by Prof. Thomas M. Iden, of the Bible chair at Ann Arbor, Mich., in his "Upper Room Bible Class," which meets every Saturday evening at the Bible Chair House. The enrollment is about 200 men. The little "Bulletin" of the class, containing news notes and Mr. Iden's exposition of the Bible lessons, is circulated among the University students to the number of 700 weekly. Prof. Iden's influence is most profound and gracious in the lives of the young men. He also conducts a large young mens' class at the Sunday school on Sunday mornings.

—The Missouri State convention will be held at Springfield, June 15 to 17. It is expected that from 600 to 1,000 delegates will be present. George A. Campbell, of Hannibal, is the president.

—Four thousand dollars was pledged by the congregation at McPherson, Kan., recently for reconstruction of their church building.

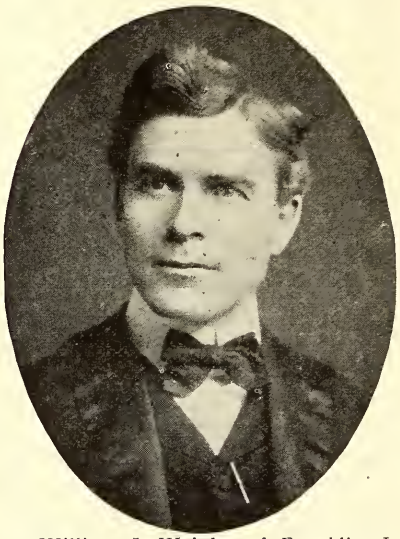
—W. E. Crabtree, pastor Central Church, San Diego, Calif., recently went to Honolulu to lead in the dedication of the new Church of Disciples in that city.

—Robert E. Henry, pastor at Havana, Ill., is holding his Sunday evening services in the local opera house, which has been engaged for the summer months on account of its being a cool place in the hot weather.

—The original "church built in one day" was probably the chapel of the West Bluff congregation of Peoria, Ill. After five years that congregation has now been compelled by its growing Sunday school to enlarge its home. The addition is more substantial than the original building. It was dedicated May 30.

—L. J. Marshall, pastor Wabash Avenue Church, Kansas City, who recently underwent an appendicitis operation, is making a good recovery. His church has received 56 accessions to its membership in the past year at regular services. Mr. Marshall was invited to preach the baccalaureate sermon at Christian College, Columbia, Mo., but was not sufficiently recovered to do so.

—A School of Methods for Bible School workers will be conducted at Lynchburg, June 14-18, under the direction of the Ohio Christian Missionary Society. The faculty will be H. H. Webb,



Rev. William J. Wright, of Franklin, Ind., who has just resigned the pastorate of Tabernacle Church there. Mr. Wright was formerly Secretary of the American Christian Missionary Society and is now President of the Temperance Board of the Disciples.

Covington, Ky.; Miss Lillie Faris, I. J. Cahill, R. J. Bennett and Wilford H. McLain, State Superintendent. S. S. Lapping and S. J. Corey will give addresses.

—W. E. M. Hackleman will be one of the leaders of the singing at the Anti-Saloon League convention, Atlantic City, July 6-9. He will go from Atlantic City to Los Angeles, Calif., to attend the Disciples' General Convention, where he also leads the singing.

—The annual convention of the churches of New Mexico and West Texas was held at First Church, El Paso, Tex., May 24-27. A fine convention it was, writes P. J. Rice, pastor at El Paso, and the work is in a very flourishing condition all over the territory. F. M. Rains, of Cincinnati, was present and spoke several times.

—Oak Cliff Church, Dallas, Tex., has moved its present building to the rear of the lot preparatory to erecting a new $35,000 house of worship on the front. A. E. Ewell is pastor.

—Broadway Church, Lexington, Ky., Mark Collis, pastor, is likely to build a new house of worship. The present structure, erected in 1892, is too small for the congregations and inadequate in its appointments for modern Sunday school work.

—The church at Marceline, Mo., has let the contract for a new building to cost $11,000.

—The church building at Kinross, Ia., was struck by lightning recently and burned to the ground.

—Shreveport, La., church raised $19,000 to pay a debt of $17,500 on their church property. Geo. L. Snively, the evangelist, led in raising the money.

—Joseph L. Garvin, recently resigned from the presidency of William Woods College, Fulton, Mo., has been filling several engagements at Illinois High School Commencements.

—Remarkable success is attending the ministry of R. E. Moss at Crawfordsville, Ind. Several hundred people were in attendance at a recent prayer meeting. A reception given to new members who had come into the church this spring was attended by more than 1,000 people.

—The Sunday school at Lawrence, Kan., First Church celebrated Children's Day with an elaborate program which began with a parade through the business part of the city headed by the State University band. Secretary Bert Wilson spoke at the church in the evening.

—It is announced that the Men and Millions commission received $400,000 in pledges in its recent canvass of Illinois. The total fund pledged to date is $2,400,000, including the first million offered by Mr. R. A. Long.

Russian Christian Mission, Chicago

It is more than four years since the American Christian Missionary Society started missionary work among the Russians in the great commercial and industrial center of Chicago. This worthy Christian, philanthrophic and patriotic enterprise, considering the meager means employed, has been eminently successful. During the said period sixty-two people have been won and are now organized as a church.

The war has greatly crippled the work this year, as many of the members, in order to have access to their fatherland after the war, have gone back; others are intending to go soon. But this seeming loss is really a great gain for the kingdom. This is positively demonstrated by the news being received from the brethern in Russia. Lately a a letter has come that in spite of the war commotion, which is stirring the Czar's empire to the very depths, the returned immigrants have been so successful in their testimony, that now in the two villages of Gelenie and Simonowich, government of Grodno, the Disciples have two small churches of about twenty members each. The Chicago Disciples who went back are scattered all over the vast Slav empire and the Chicago mission hopes to hear similar reports from other points also.

Another incident which shows the far-reaching influence of the work is the spread of the spirit of liberty among the Russian colony here. This has been made clear recently by the fact that 350 members of the Russian Orthodox church separated and formed an organization independent of the Russian hierarchy. This is a most remarkable event, for it is the first one in modern Russian church history, and will doubtless serve as a precedent for similar movements, which will take place hereafter among the numerous colonies of Russians in this land of liberty. Still another event proving the power of the gospel leaven of liberty is the fact that on Saturday night, May 1, a mutual help organization was formed with the cooperation of Basil S. Keusseff, to which members are admitted without regard to their religious or political affiliations. So the missionary activities among the 300,000 former subjects of the Czar are epoch making ones.

On May 10, the Chicago Russian mission is going to take possession of the new quarters on 652 West 14th street, right in the heart of the Russian colony, where they hope to do better work. They will not realize their full efficiency, however, until they get a new plant to house institutional work, which plant was promised the mission and for the past two years has been talked about a great deal.

On April 25, open-air meetings were started at which the gospel is being preached to hundreds of immigrants.

BASIL S. KEUSSEFF.

From India's Mission Field

The India mission of the Disciples of Christ has just closed the sessions of its annual convention in Jubbulpore. There were fifty-two missionaries present. Among these were five representatives from our Australian mission. We are hoping for a closer affiliation of our works.

The convention this year, more strictly speaking, was a business meeting. It had for its task the final drafting of a mission policy. For several years the mission has been working on this policy. We hope now to be able to carry on our work in a more unified manner and by the best approved methods. About five years ago certain standing committees were appointed, representing the various interests of the mission, and ordered, after investigating like work in various other missions and in various parts of India, to formulate a policy for the direction and guidance of the mission whereby our work would be most effective of genuine results.

After these years of careful study, investigation and preparation, these reports were presented to the mission for final ratification. While the mission, by its newly-formed policy, does not wish to limit or discourage individual initiative, yet we believe we have accomplished very much in determining a definite plan of campaign and operation which will co-ordinate and unify our various departments. We purpose that our educational, evangelistic, medical, industrial, and benevolent institutional departments shall contribute primarily to the making of Disciples.

Probably the most interesting feature of the program was the after dinner speeches. Each station had chosen its representative who should report the encouraging experiences of his station for the year. These experiences were exceedingly varied and intensely interesting. The following indicate the nature of some of the addresses: "How Ninety-one New Disciples Were Won from a Life of Sin and Despair," "The Cheerful, Hopeful, and Beautiful Life of a Group of Christian Lepers," "A Narrow Escape from an Enraged Wild Boar," "How One of Our Indian Evangelists Was Killed by a Panther," "The Missionary Consciousness of Being Where the Master Would Have Him, and Where His Life Would Count Most for God," "The Ingratitude of Some Christian Orphan Boys," "Some Mohammedans Who Became Christian Because They Could Not Get Away from the Love and Unselfish Service of a Mission Doctor," "How the Arya Samaj Succeeded in Breaking Up One of Our Schools for Girls," "The Illness and Death of Our Dr. Martha Smith," "The Open Doors and Waiting Harvest." These but indicate a few of the stories and experiences that came from the various stations.

The war is interfering very little with our direct missionary work. Its results are felt most in the marked increase of cost of living and the mission's inability to increase the salaries of Indian co-workers. The average pay of our 300 Indian co-workers is less than fifteen rupees, or $5.50 per month. The mission is already obliged to pay a small additional allowance to its lowest paid workers. Should the war last another six months, increase in salaries will be imperative or the cry for bread will meet us at every turn.

AN EXPLANATORY WORD.

The widespread awakening to the necessity of making our Bible Schools measure up to the standard of efficiency that we expect of the Public Schools, has made necessary an effort in the organization and promotion of religious education commensurate to the need.

The proposed school of Religious Education at Canton will devote itself to this task, and hopes to at least create a conscience in the matter of Bible School efficiency that will make the old query, "When is a school not a school?" and its answer, "When it is a Sunday School," nothing more than an ancient joke that has lost its point.

Look carefully over the course of study that will be followed and make up your mind that you can not afford to stay away from this opportunity to get at the heart of the Religious Education Problem.

A Three Years' Campaign in Tokio.

Miss Mary F. Lediard, of the Girls' School, Tokio, Japan, writes: "School opened with such a great increase in attendance that we are delighted—thirty-nine girls, fifty boys and nine in the kindergarten. Miss Parker sails on May 15th and is beginning to get excited. Mr. Doan is at present in the Akita district and we hear good reports from him. The Three Year Campaign has begun in earnest in Tokio now and the big tent at the Y. M. C. A. is crowded to the doors at every meeting. We attended a dinner the other night at which Count Okuma spoke as well as Baron Sakatani, mayor of Tokio; Baron Goto, the Minister of Education, and others. They all say Christianity is good and push it along, but it isn't quite good enough for them since they do not accept it. I wish one of them would come out and accept it and then get up and say what he knows to be true. One man said, 'It is all right and I want my children to be Christians, but . . .' and the inference was of course that he himself didn't need it."

"The City Institute"

"The City Institute," by Walter S. Athearn of Drake university has been recently issued from the University of Chicago Press. It is a compact and meaty volume of 150 pages dealing with a new idea in religious education. Unlike some volumes in this field, it is a history, and not a book of theories. The story told is one of deep interest to all who are concerned about better religious training for the young.

Mr. Athearn has been for the past three years the head of City Institute in Des Moines, Ia. A City Institute such as he describes is "a night school of religious education." Its purpose is to prepare teachers adequately for the work of Sunday-school teaching.

In describing the beginnings of this movement, the author states that he and his colleagues cut loose at once from all the boosting spirit that has gone with the teacher training movement, and from all certificates and awards. The enterprise was given the dignity of university extension work, and by this means university men in the community were induced to have part in the work as instructors.

Thoroughly competent men are found in Des Moines with adequate training to meet classes in the evening and give them courses in Bible study, Church History, Child Study, Pedagogy and other matters in which a Sunday-school teacher needs to be instructed.

This City Institute operates independently of the existing Sunday-school organizations, though not as a rival, but in close sympathy with their aims. Mr. Athearn favors the existing organizations going on in his community but holds that the City Institute has a unique field which it can better cultivate by being independent of outside control.

The enterprise is interdenominational in character. It unites a whole city, with all the churches willing to co-operate, into one compact organization and school to accomplish the purpose of the institution.

Mr. Athearn has frankly faced the demands of the times in religious education, and a look over the bibliography which he recommends to the prospective teachers shows that he is in favor of accepting the best modern literature in Bible study. The books mentioned are those in favor at the great theological seminaries of the country, and they cannot help making the Bible a far more vital and convincing document than when it has been interpreted through obscurantist literature.

Altogether the book is a most admirable combination of the ideal and the practical. It deals with something which is a living reality and a demonstrated success. At the same time, the book shows how this development in Des Moines is in line with the very best of modern educational theory in the development of the church school. It should have a wide circulation among wide-awake men and women everywhere.

"A Constant Delight."

The Century is a constant delight to me; I have been taking it for many years. I consider your editorial policies abreast of the time and prophetic of what we will rejoice in in the days to come.

Self-Sacrifice and Self-Culture

MAETERLINCK has preserved to us the legend of the keeper of the lighthouse who gave to the poor in the cabins about him the oil of the mighty lanterns that served to illumine the sea.

> In the soul that is noble (he says) altruism must, without doubt, be always the center of gravity; but the weak soul is apt to lose itself in others, whereas it is in others that the strong soul discovers itself. The immaterial force that shines in our heart must shine, first of all, for itself; for in this condition alone shall it shine for others as well. But see that you give not away the oil of your lamp, though your lamp be never so small; let your gift be the flame, its crown.

Sheer selfishness, we know, shrivels the soul and the soul's world. But there is also a kind of self-giving which exhausts the soul and wastes its powers. Often self-sacrifice is hardly more than the helpless raising of the withered arm of resignation. The effectiveness of self-giving depends on there being a self worth giving.

Our spiritual teachers exhort us to give, to do, to spend, to deny ourselves, but fail all too often to make it clear that we must acquire a self, that we must possess and keep a personality whose value we can ourselves appreciate ere it can have value to others. To overlook the development of this self, to fail to organize the means for its constant renewal, is a stupid and often a tragic moral blunder.

In Jesus we have the supreme illustration of self-sacrifice. But in him also we have the supreme illustration of self-appreciation.

That is an extraordinary insight that made John connect the Master's act of washing the disciples' feet with his consciousness of divine dignity. How he knew what Jesus was thinking about just at that moment we know not. But he begins the story of the feet-washing by laying bare the mind of the Master. "Jesus, knowing that the Father had put all things into his hand, that he was come from God, and went to God, riseth from supper . . . and began to wash his disciples' feet."

The inspired artist draws two pictures for us to look upon at once: one of the upper room and the act of self-humiliation, the other of the soul of Jesus and his self-appreciation. In the act of serving his friends the Master was most conscious of himself. He knew himself to be no slave, but the ruler of all. Though doing a slave's work, he was no whit less a king.

John clearly sees that for a slave to wash a guest's feet has no significance; but for a king—that is divine!

A soul so rich, so calmly conscious of a self transcending the specific act of abnegation, so careful ever to preserve its isolation despite its thousand distracting intimacies—when such a soul stoops in service it communicates blessings vast and priceless.

It will be well for us if in following Christ we learn from him that the secret of effectiveness in self-giving lies not just in what is done, but in who does it. Personality gives value to the unselfish gift.

It is of no less importance for the soul to guard its capital than for the financier. The personality must be kept intact. That is what carries life's business on. Self-investment is profitable in the degree in which the self has intrinsic value. The oil must be made to keep the lamp going—not distributed to the poor, however amiable our motives may be.

The best service we can render the weak is to be ourselves strong. The sick need our health and cheer more than medicine.

The world is not so much in need of sympathy as of inspiration. There is often danger that our very sympathy may make distress and illness a sort of luxury. But our strength, our character, our standing erect and meeting our own problems with courage, is contagious, and by having such a respect for our personality as Christ had for his, we help men as he helped them.

The pastor's best gift to his people is himself. Many pastors are like Martha, busy with too many things. They gossip and coax and plead and argue and sympathize. Their days are spent in small and cheap activities. They rob the mighty lantern of its flame by doling out the oil to the needy.

But the needy need something other than these cheap doles. They need to see a man! They need to find in him a soul with depth enough to create in them respect for what is hidden from them.

"In the every-day walk of life," says Ruskin, "the solitary thing we can ever distribute among those who walk by our side, be they joyful or sad, is the confidence, strength, the freedom and peace of our soul."

Mothers need to see this truth, for it is a mother's constant temptation to serve her children in lesser deeds that rob her self of its most important property, to forget her self and waste her soul in the routine demands made by her children.

But let every mother know that the best way to serve her children is to keep alive in her breast the importance of her own personality. Let her know that the time will come when these little ones will need more than the service of her hands, more than the sacrifices of the nursery.

Some day they will need her companionship. They will need her intelligence. They will need her to be large-minded, up-to-date, so that they may share their men's and women's problems with her.

Happy is that mother who grows with her children! Happy she who keeps to herself in their childhood sacred hours for her own self-culture, renewing ever the oil in her lamp that to them her supreme gift may be a constant and increasing light!

Weeding Out the Library

BY W. ROBERTSON NICOLL

In the British Weekly

I HAVE read, and I find it to be true, that a private man who loves books, unless he is exceptionally rich, is always more and more tormented to find room for them. They grow and grow, and the wall space does not grow, and the shelves do not grow; and, unless the owner resorts to the unspeakable, detestable expedient of reduplicating the books on each shelf, there comes a time when he is at his wits' end. The expedient of reduplicating not only destroys the back rows, but imperils the owner's chance of heaven, the book wanted being invariably lost for the time with sad results in evil wishes and language.

I am writing in a library which at the present moment contains from 23,000 to 25,000 volumes. They are everywhere. The shelves are full and the floor is crowded. There is a lane from the door to the fireplace, a length of fifty-one feet, but it is narrow and is narrowing. The library is only a journalist's library. There are no rare books in the number, and if the whole were sold by auction the results would be disappointing. Nevertheless, to me the collection means something. It has been accumulated in the course of years in obedience to various impulses, and at one time or another almost every volume in it has possessed a certain significance. It contains a few special collections made with the view of writing on certain subjects. The years pass, and hopes that were never very bright recede, and plans which never were very firmly founded have to be given up in obedience to the calls and exigencies of the day or of the hour. Plainly something has to be done on rather a large scale. The means of increasing space have already been exhausted. There is only one course possible, and it cannot be postponed for very long. The library has to be weeded, and the weeding must be of a ruthless character. Now there are those who tell us that the opportunity of weeding is almost limitless, that there are not five men in England possessed of 3,000 books apiece who do not know perfectly well that half their volumes are lumber, books which they would never read or consult or open for any purpose whatsoever. They are the books of forgotten periods of life, the books of whim, the books of abandoned study, the books about which their owner's only thought is a wonder how they ever got there, books that can no more be accounted for than the foolishness of early day-dreams or the more or less absolutely useless knowledge packed away in one's memory. It is all true. But at the same time there is a certain impressiveness and dignity about a library.

DUPLICATES.

Suppose we walk through my library together. You will perceive at once that there are many duplicates, especially of valuable books, and persons in my circumstances have no right to duplicates. All they may reasonably claim is the privilege of selecting their favorite copy. Well, let us begin. Here is a vulnerable bookcase, as you may see at once. There are side by side editions of John Evelyn, one by H. B. Wheatley and the other by Austin Dobson. Which is to go? In some respects Mr. Dobson's edition is a finer piece of work than Mr. Wheatley's. On the other hand, Mr. Wheatley's book has things not included by Mr. Dobson. Evelyn is no special favourite of mine, though he whiles away some hours well enough. I must settle on Austin Dobson.

Beside these are my editions of a far greater book—Boswell's Life of Johnson. There are several editions. The best, no doubt, is Dr. Birkbeck Hill's, which is not yet superseded, though it will be, say, in twenty-five years. Then I have the first edition of Croker's Boswell, which drew down the wrath of Macaulay. And I also possess the second edition, but I am not willing to part with either. I have spent much time in comparing the two and in finding out the changes made by Croker under the lash of Macaulay's article. Then I have Napier's edition, which is really a very good and sound and handy piece of work. Also I have the edition published in the English Illustrated Library, which is particularly good in its annotation of the "Tour to the Hebrides." I once had Malone's edition, which is perhaps the most satisfactory in plan and conception of any, but I have given it away. What am I to do with those various editions? Obviously I must select Birkbeck Hill, and be content and thankful and let all the rest go.

NOVELS.

I now turn to fiction, and to some extent I have attained wisdom on that subject. With a very few execptions I have found it a mistake to keep second-rate fiction. Every bookman has his little heresies and is entitled to them with reason. I have a favour for a book called "The Outcasts: Certain Strange Passages in the Life of a Clergyman," and I have a few more equally unappreciated by others, but profitable to me. They may have the room, but, on the whole, the abiding and satisfying fiction is the fiction of the masters. I have a fairly good show in this respect—Richardson, Fielding, Smollett, Scott, Thackeray, Dickens, Balzac, as well as George Eliot, Charlotte Brontë, and the rest. My trouble is that I possess several editions of each master, and it is hard to decide between them. I have one perfectly satisfactory edition of Dickens, the National Edition, published by Messrs. Chapman and Hall, Ltd., in an edition of 750. The books are perfect in every way, and so without a tear or pang I give away my other editions. Yet there are relentings and compunctions. Andrew Lang is nearly at his worst in his Introductions to Dickens. These may go. But Gissing is very good, and his chapters have not been reprinted. Chesterton is excellent, but happily we have him in volumes. I have a kindness for the double column edition in which I read Dickens first. But let it pass.

Scott is a more difficult problem. The only really beautiful edition of Scott is the old Roxburghe edition, in which the novels are divided into two volumes each. But Scott, like all the great novelists, ought to be introduced properly, and there were two men adequate to the task—Robert Louis Stevenson and Andrew Lang. Stevenson's edition was never completed, never even touched. But Lang's was carried through, and Messrs. Macmillan published the Waverly Novels with his prefaces and notes. The prefaces are extraordinarily unequal, but some of them are as good as they could possibly be, and I see very little chance of their being superseded. Otherwise the volumes are not very pleasing. But still, if I am driven to possess one edition of Scott, it will be Andrew Lang's. I have no such strong feeling about Thackeray, although I would not for anything be without him, and I give my vote for the Works of W. M. Thackeray, with Biographical Introduction by his daughter, Lady Ritchie, in twenty-six volumes. The type is very good, and Lady Ritchie writes with unfailing taste and complete knowledge. Of course I should want a good many more novels than those I have named, but what I have said already implies clearances on an extensive scale.

POETRY.

My books of poetry are comparatively numerous, and there are not so many duplicates as might be expected. Some of them I would have a right to retain under almost any circumstances. I have the Aldine edition, not in the original form, not complete, but comparatively complete. The books are well edited, and the text is given with scholarly care. I have also those invaluable stout volumes of Messrs. Macmillan containing such books as Matthew Arnold's Poetical Works, the Works of Tennyson, Lowell's Poetical Works, Christina Rossetti's Poems, and many others. These are very pleasing. They are in double columns, but the type is all that can be desired. The same may be said of the valuable and marvellously cheap editions of the Oxford University Press. But the edition I use most frequently is that of Gilfillan. Dante Rossetti was accustomed to use it because the page was so large and the type so good, and these I may humbly say are my reasons. On the whole I will stand by Gilfillan because I know my way about in his British Poets, and that is a great advantage. I know, for example, in "Paradise Lost" the line with which each page begins and the line with which it ends. I know where to find my favourite passages and have in many cases marked them. But I am not sure that the text is so carefully done as in some other similar works. A few weeks ago I quoted Goldsmith's lines—

"In all my wanderings through this world of care,
In all my griefs—and God has given me my share—"

A courteous critic in the Aberdeen Free Press remonstrated with me for misquotation, and said that the line should read—

"In all my wanderings round this world of care."

Gilfillan, however, gives "through this world of care." But so far as I can find out all the editions published in Goldsmith's lifetime give "round." I have used no edition for many years except Gilfillan's, and followed him into the blunder. It would be interesting to know where and how the blunder originated.

All this is comparatively plain sailing. Every bookman is entitled to at least one copy of Shakespeare, Milton, Chaucer, Browning, Tennyson, and the rest. (Here I pause to say that Messrs. Smith, Elder and Co. would do an immense service to literature if they would produce before it is too late a really well annotated edition of Browning's poems. There are not many who could do the work, but I think there are two or three.)

But my weakness, and I may frankly confess it, is a love for those unfortunate beings known as the minor poets. I think I have as many of the volumes of the minor poets of the Victorian period as any other collector. For this I have no excuse; I have simply satisfied my own tastes and inclinations. Every now and then I have dreams of producing an anthology in which there shall be no piece which has appeared in any other anthology. At other times I think of writing articles about the merits of Alfred Norris, and G. A. Simcox, and J. B. Selkirk, and William Forsyth, and many others. But these are mere excuses. I shall never write the articles, and I shall never compile the anthology. So according to all reasonable rules I should part with the larger number of my poetical collection. I shall do so, however, if I must do so, with great regret.

RELIGIOUS LITERATURE.

We will now, if you please, take a turn with my theological collection. It is very numerous. It contains a very large number of what are called standard books. In particular it is rich in books about the Higher Criticism of the Old Testament and the New. It also contains numerous sermon volumes. I think I could part more easily with most of these volumes than with any others in my library. But there are some I should hold fast. These would not be the clever books or the controversial books or the dogmatic books or the learned books. They would be the mystical books. It is wonderful to look through such a collection as mine and to see how religious books with the property of mysticism continue to be fresh when the scholars and the doctors and the priests have passed into oblivion. Whatever may befall, I shall keep with me some volumes of Spurgeon, some volumes of Neale, all the volumes of Dora Greenwell, and a selection from the English and foreign mystical writers. They will serve my turn, I think, though I hope never to lose interest in the development of scholarship and thought.

BIOGRAPHY.

My biographical collection is tolerably full, numbering at least 5,000 volumes. They are well arranged through the kind care of others, and if I want a book the chances are about five to one that I shall find it. The volumes are in rough alphabetical order, and I think I may say that they have all been read. Many people will think that I have wasted much time, which is no doubt true, but I have found my account in the reading and do not for one moment regret it. At the same time I admit that to some wiser man biography is profitless. There is one advantage of biographical books. It is that one has not to choose between editions of them as a rule. I like first editions and editions in large print. Lockhart's great biography of Scott was published some years ago in a very becoming manner by Messrs. Jack, of Edinburgh. But if I have to choose between the two I will take my own first edition, a very pleasing production in every way. For the journalist who knows how to use them biographies are a rewarding study, and meanwhile I do not propose to part with mine.

PERIODICAL LITERATURE.

Having intended for many years to write a History of Periodical Literature in the Victorian Era, I have collected a good many books for that end, including sets of forgotten Magazines and Reviews. I like this kind of reading, though I am not going to say it is the best or the most profitable. If I can accomplish my book it will be of some use to students, giving information that cannot be got without a great deal of dredging. If I do not write the book I shall have the consolation of spending many hours in preparing for it. But if the book were written, or if I had decided not to write it, I should be bound in honour to expel long rows of Reviews and Magazines from my shelves.

To some extent a man has a right to indulge his personal preferences. On the whole, however, he will find it best to keep and to read the great books. The great books will go into a library of about a thousand volumes. We owe very much to publishers like Messrs. Dent and Messrs. Nelson for putting the masterpieces of literature in forms so cheap, so convenient, so compact. For my own part, however, I hope to see a series where each volume will be well printed, say, at the price of three and sixpence. Such a series would include almost everything that is really worth having in English literature. The new books must, of course, be read—if it were only to understand the old.

Mother Magic

In days of childhood, now long-lapsed and dim,
Often I sit within a holy place
Where mystic word and solemn-rolling hymn
Touched the tranced souls of men to thoughts of Grace.

Too small to comprehend, yet happy there
I lingered, since beside me, close and dear,
Sat the sweet mother with her rippled hair,
Her smile of angels and her color clear.

And she would hold my hand, and so express,
In some deep way, the wonder of the hour;
Our spirits talked, by silent tenderness,
As easily as flower nods to flower.

And to this day, when so I creep alone
Into some sacred corner, list the choir,
Hear some great organ's most melodious moan
And watch the windows flush daylight with fire.

Over me once again those memories steal;
I sit as in a dream, and understand
God's meaning; for, across the years, I feel
The meek, sure magic of that spirit-hand.

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY

EDITORIAL

THE NEW LEADER.

IT is coming to be believed that the regrettable attitude assumed by Mr. W. J. Bryan, while the Prohibition question was being debated in Congress last December, represented the policy of the administration of which he was a part rather than his own personal conviction.

Mr. Bryan, it will be recalled, wrote an article for his "Commoner," in which he contended that the liquor question should not be made a national issue at this time, but should be dealt with by the several states separately.

Under cover of this position of the Secretary of State, who was known as a temperance leader and a prohibitionist in principle, a considerable number of wavering congressmen found courage to vote against the bill to submit the question to the people in the form of a constitutional amendment.

On that account Mr. Bryan was criticised by the prohibition leaders and the religious press. The Christian Century published one of the earliest and most vigorous of these criticisms.

With the announcement of Mr. Bryan's resignation from the Cabinet there begin to leak out rumors which indicate that Mr. Bryan was moved at the time mainly by considerations of loyalty to the President, with whose administration he had been up to that time in accord.

Now that the break between the President and Mr. Bryan has come, we may expect from time to time further data bearing on the differences between the two with reference not to the peace question alone but to the prohibition question also.

The nation believes, and we believe, that Mr. Bryan is personally in favor of the adoption of a Prohibition amendment to the Constitution, and we may expect the next few months to see him at the front of the great movement which Congress will have to reckon with next December, and with reference to which the two political parties will have to define their respective policies in their 1916 conventions.

Stepping out of Mr. Wilson's Cabinet, Mr. Bryan, after the present controversy with Germany is settled, is likely to become the acknowledged leader of the anti-saloon movement.

CHRISTIAN UNITY FOR LATIN AMERICA.

NEXT to the World Missionary Conference at Edinburgh in 1910 the Latin America Missionary Conference, to be held in the city of Panama in February, 1916, bids fair to be the most pivotal and strategic international event in modern Christian progress.

The Conference will draw together the Protestant Christian forces operating in all Latin America to consider the religious situation with united purpose and intelligence, and to project plans for a united advance of the Christian Church upon the vast neglected mission field of Mexico, Central and South America.

This move by the forces of Christian missions is but one of many which betoken a rising tide of Pan-Americanism. While most of the world is at war and nations are daily being driven farther and farther apart, it is cheering to note the drawing together of the national units of these western continents. A few weeks since, in Washington, D. C., an important conference of representatives of the financial interests of Latin American countries was held, and plans set going to unify the disparate systems upon which the various countries now base their money values. Industry in one country is making an approach to industry in another.

This Christian conference will discuss the religious needs of Latin America in a thoroughly scientific and efficient manner. The great missionary leaders from the field will be there. For instance, already all three Protestant Episcopal bishops in Latin America have signified their intention of attendance. Protestant laymen and Latin American statesmen are expected to take part. Every mission board and society is to be represented by both administrators from the home land and missionaries at the Conference. Such leaders as Dr. John R. Mott are active in preparing for it.

It is with great hope, therefore, that the Church may look forward to the reports of the eight commissions now at work on the various aspects of the missionary problem in these Latin American countries. These commission reports will be the basis of the discussion at Panama and, together with that discussion, will embody the consensus of opinion and the collective wisdom of those who know and care most about the Kingdom of Christ in Latin America.

Among the Disciples represented on these commissions we note the name of Mrs. Ida Withers Harrison, Prof. Charles T. Paul, and Rev. A. McLean, with Rev. S. G. Inman in the chief place of responsibiilty for the creation of the Conference, as the Executive Secretary. Mr. Inman's position is analogous to that of Dr. John R. Mott's relation to the Edinburgh Conference.

PASTOR RUSSELL AND THE WAR.

IT ISN'T often that the type of Christians who read The Christian Century have to meet the absurd claims of "Pastor" Russell. But even those farthest removed from this preposterous cult have now and then to state the contrary side to some one who has been misled by it. A keen and defiant article is that which appears in the Central Christian Advocate (Methodist) of Kansas City, which, like most things from the pen of its able editor, Dr. Spencer, goes squarely up to the issue. This is what "The Advocate" says:

A deal has been made of the fact that "Pastor" Russell brought the world, so far as the "Age of the Gentiles" is concerned, to an end in 1914. Armageddon would come then, he prophesied, such wars as not any nation had ever known, when the nations should be broken in pieces as a potter's vessel.

It is perfectly silly to associate his prophecies with this European war. War prophecies are perennial. They are coming out all the while. A man found an old German family Bible in which had been written that a fearful world-war would break out in 1914. Madame DeThebes this time aimed her many prophecies that didn't eventuate, did hit on it when she prognosticated an Austrian war in 1914. Here in America, prophecies as to Russia, China, Japan, Turkey, etc., etc., in their turn have been frequent, but the time card got askew. It didn't happen.

But one had this for 1914. He said that in 1914 "Austria begins a campaign against Russia in which Germany, France and England become involved. The Orient is in flames. In North Africa the Holy War is being preached because the Moslems wish to free themselves from England and France and set up the great Califate. Finally their peril dawns on the understanding of the European powers, and the Turks are driven out of Europe just as were the Mongols. The result is: Europe for the Europeans."

Charles T. Russell sits in the same company. He has prophesied. And, in fact, a terrible war did break out in 1914, as for many a year he has been proclaiming. But wait a minute. His prophecy is not that there would be a general war. That is a mere incident. His prophecy, the real milk in the cocoanut, is that in 1914 and 1915 the end of the Age of the Gentiles will come, that is to say that the powers of this world will not only be at war, but that they will each come to an end. That is the prophecy. It is the end of the world so far as the rule of the Gentiles is concerned. There will be no more Russia, Germany, France, British Empire, China, Japan, United States of America; no, these will all be broken as a potter's vessel. They will pass out of existence.

What will come in their place? "Pastor" Russell and his colleagues actually reigning over the billions of living and dead; "Pastor" Russell and his crowd actually reigning over this planet.

Just watch! If that happens within the next few months, we shall all have to sit up and get up, and own the omniscience of Brother Russell. If that doesn't happen, the prophecy and the whole system of this humbug will—well, it will be a laughing stock.

Get ready to laugh.

UNITY CONFERENCE BROUGHT NEARER.

BEFORE the outbreak of the European war a note of procrastination had become somewhat annoyingly chronic in the talk of those who had in charge the forming of the plans for the world conference on the unity of the Church.

When asked as to the date, or the probable date, or the possible date, or the most general suggestion as to a desirable date, for the holding of such a conference, the question was met by a shrug of the shoulders, indicating that it was all too soon to talk of time and place.

We were told that the churches must be gotten ready for the conference, that there remained yet many bodies that were indifferent, though formally participating, and that there must come a great yearning and passion for unity before it would be worth while to gather representatives of the churches together in a conference for the realization of unity.

Such reticence was, no doubt, wise, even though four full years had passed since the proposal was first formulated. The conference must not be premature. Its method and spirit must be well defined before its representatives convene. There must have grown up beforehand a certain unity of purpose in the whole Church, else the conference might result only in aggravating the division and alienation it was called to heal.

With unexpected suddenness, however, a decision has been reached. In anticipation of the exigencies that the Church will confront at the close of this world-shaking war, it has now been decided to convene the conference as soon after the war ceases as possible.

It is clear that the supreme task of Christian history will rest upon Christ's Church in the reconstruction of civilization after this its barbaric relapse.

And it is believed that the sense of sectarian impotence in the face of this task will make sectarianism's sinfulness apparent even to those denominations of the most restricted outlook.

The Church of Christ was never so humbled as today. It stands with palsied arms in the presence of a vast social wreck which its influence was impotent to avert. Gradually it seems to be growing clear that its sectarian divisions, its denominational self-interest, its lack of the sense of catholic fellowship lie at the basis of its impotence in dealing with vast international and social problems.

Now is the psychological moment, the "fullness of the time," for the divided people of God prayerfully to come together to confess their essential unity and to seek the divine plan by which their unity may be restored in practice.

At the present time the place of the World Conference has not been determined, but New York and the Hague are mentioned, with favorable sentiment increasingly tending toward the American metropolis.

OPINIONS OF BILLY SUNDAY.

OPINIONS of Billy Sunday evidently make popular reading. The Literary Digest has just published a digest of the opinions of the religious press of the country which it classifies under the heads, "Favorable Verdicts," "Qualified Endorsements" and "Opinions Wholly Adverse."

Favoring Mr. Sunday, it finds 58 religious newspapers; qualified, 43; opposed, 28.

The Christian Century is classed with those whose opinion of Mr. Sunday is adverse. This is an error. The Christian Century has no interest in the discussion of Mr. Sunday's personality. The grounds on which others in the symposium base their opposition to him—his slang, his coarseness, his alleged insincerity, his big collections, his crude theology—seem to us to be quite subordinate considerations.

The thing The Christian Century called attention to in the article quoted by the Literary Digest was the fact that altogether too much is made of Mr. Sunday's distinctiveness. We pointed out that he is essentially no different from other modern revivalists.

Billy Sunday is the latest, and, in our opinion, the last conspicuous product of a system of propaganda which is already beginning to break down.

His principle is the common principle upon which all revivalists work—the principle of bringing an artificial mass stimulus to bear upon the individual to induce action.

The day of disillusionment as to the abiding value of the results gained by such methods is already dawning.

Over against this procedure—which is essentially hypnotic—is the rational method of Jesus, who sought to induce action by lodging Truth in the individual soul, awakening insight, and opening up unfailing fountains of perception in the inner life of men.

Mr. Sunday lives in a day when religion has become institutionalized.

Lacking a great Truth to propagate, the Church propagates its Institution.

And it uses excitement and hypnotism and sensation and the confusion of swaying crowds to gather individuals in.

The feeling is deepening that the Church should go back to Jesus again, re-learn his inner secret and quietly practice it and teach it to all men.

Our opinion of Billy Sunday cannot be expressed in terms for or against him personally. He is to be judged at last in terms of the system of religious propaganda, of which he is today the most outstanding exponent.

That system is alien to Christ's kind of Christianity.

The Larger Christian World

A DEPARTMENT OF INTERDENOMINATIONAL ACQUAINTANCE

Episcopalians Join Latin American Conference

High church Episcopalians are making loud protests over a recent action of the Board of Missions of that denomination. This board has voted to participate in a "Latin American Missionary Conference," to be held in Panama in 1916. The matter of joining this conference was laid on the table by a majority of two at the March meeting of the board, out of deference to the high church element, but at the May meeting the matter was reconsidered and the board decided to cooperate with the single proviso "that whatever notice or invitation is sent to any Christian body shall be presented to every communion having work in Latin America," which means inviting the Roman Catholics. This is an easy matter, since the Catholics refuse participation in all such conferences. Though the conference is purely advisory, it is opposed by the high church element because some of the leaders of the conference have criticised Roman Catholic work in South America and have declared that that section of the world is not properly evangelized. The Living Church, the high church organ, declares war on the Board of Missions.

Rabbi Supplies Christian Pulpit

Dr. C. F. Aked, the Baptist minister in the First Congregational church in San Francisco, who caused some commotion among the churches by insisting that the birth of Jesus was natural, has done the unconventional thing of inviting a Jewish rabbi, Rabbi Meyer, to supply the pulpit while he made a trip to Honolulu. A portion of the rabbi's duties was to read a list of new members being received into the church. This same rabbi gave the Congregationalists free use of his synagogue while the First church was building a new edifice.

A Federation of the Federations

The United States has a large number of organizations of interdenominational character that undertake to federate the denominations for specific tasks. Some of these are the Sunday School, the Y. M. and Y. W. C. A., the Laymen's Missionary Movement, the Missionary Education Movement, the Home Missions Council, Council of Women for Home Missions, the Christian Endeavor Society and others. The Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America has believed that all these various federations should be federated. They have appointed a secretary, Rev. Roy B. Guild, whose task it is to bring them all into closer co-ordination. At Atlantic City recently representatives of all these organizations met and deliberated on the task of co-ordinating all Christian work more closely. A hundred leading men spent several days together. The various organizations were explicit in refusing to grant to the Federal Council any measure of control, but were willing that certain forms of unofficial relations should be established that would provide for conference. This satisfies the first great necessity for a closer relation among the great union organizations and, after a lengthy debate over details, the plan was adopted. Thus the dream of a united Protestantism in America has come one more step nearer realization. A delimitation of tasks for the great interdenominational organizations will prevent an overlapping in function and will work for more efficient service.

Dr. Lyman Abbott Tells of Jonah Story

Many years ago the American press started a story on Dr. Lyman Abbott, now editor of the Outlook, charging that he called the Book of Jonah "the Pickwick Papers of the Bible." The origin of the story is given thus by Dr. Abbott: "In my lecture on the Book of Jonah I told the congregation that some scholars regarded it as history, some as a myth, some as an ancient legend, and some as a satire on the narrowness of the Hebrew people, and that one ingenious critic had compared it to the 'Biglow Papers.' A newspaper reporter, who probably had never heard of the 'Biglow Papers,' reported me as saying that the Book of Jonah was the 'Pickwick Papers' of the Bible, and that report was taken up and repeated by the press all over the country. I do not know how many letters I received rebuking me for my irreverence. To the letters I replied, but, pursuing my habitual policy of silence, sent no public correction to the newspapers." The Christian world is less agitated over Jonah than formerly.

Dr. Clifford Has a Successor

Dr. John Clifford is one of the great Baptist leaders of England. He recently resigned his pulpit to become the leader of the nonconformist forces of his country. His church, Westbourne Park, recently extended a call to Rev. S. W. Hughes, one of the recently risen luminaries of the English pulpit, and he has accepted on the condition that Dr. Clifford shall still continue to return occasionally and preach for his old church. Dr. Clifford will allow his name to be used as honorary pastor.

Protestants Weak in San Francisco

The city of San Francisco has been a notoriously hard place for Christian ministers, but the reason is seen when it is reported that only four and one-half per cent of the population have membership in Protestant churches. It is said that twenty-six per cent are Roman Catholic, which leaves two-thirds of the city to be accounted for between the non-Christian religions of the Orient

Presbyterians Active in Social Service

The Presbyterians were the first denomination in America to establish a social service department in connection with the Home Mission society. This statesmanlike enterprise has already brought results of the greatest significance to the denomination and to many other denominations as well. Through the Bureau of Social Service, the churches have been taught to make surveys of the neighborhoods to know the social forces with which the church must be co-ordinated and to understand the tasks that are being neglected. This Bureau has established Labor Sunday, which is now almost universally remembered. A weekly press service has been inaugurated to disseminate religious news through secular papers. The plan of exchanging fraternal delegates between the labor unions and the ministerial associations has been furthered. The Bureau has been especially interested in working out advertising programs for religion and the results of these studies have been given to the churches. A social service library has been established in a central city to gather together the great literature that has sprung up around this subject. It is interesting to note that all this has not been achieved without opposition. Reactionary preachers have been prone to believe that the new social movement was going to side-track the gospel, and have sometimes thought it God's service to fight the whole thing. Capitalistic laymen in the church of a certain type have been opposed to something which they greatly feared was "socialism." Not all the experiments have been successful, as might have been expected of any enterprise that pioneers, and an occasional failure has been held up to ridicule by those who were opposed. In spite of all this, however, the Presbyterian church has discovered great leaders through this enterprise and has established relations with the working people of the country that have made their social service department the most statesmanlike act of a great denomination.

and utter infidelity and materialism. It is said that ministers of the very greatest ability fail to find any adequate response from this city.

Students Volunteer for Boys at Camp Meeting

The bad boy at camp meeting is to be studied and taught and fathered in the Methodist camp meeting to be held at Franklin Grove, Ill., this year. Rev. James M. Phelps and Rev. J. V. Thompson will have charge of the boys, and they will be given a separate camping place where there will be opportunity for the various athletic sports.

Dr. Campbell Morgan Insists On Resignation

Dr. Campbell Morgan, so well known in summer conferences in America, has resigned his work at Westminster Chapel in London on account of the strain of keeping up the financial burden of his downtown church. Dr. Morgan was ill for some time last winter with typhoid fever and has not recovered his strength so as to warrant the continuance of his work in London. He will visit America this summer.

United Presbyterians Assemble

While the other Presbyterians were in assembly, the United Presbyterian denomination gathered at Loveland, Colo. This denomination is distinguished from other Presbyterians by their practice of singing psalms instead of hymns. They are also distinguished by being the most missionary denomination in the country, furnishing such great leaders as Mr. Campbell White. Dr. T. H. McMichael, president of Monmouth college, was elected moderator. No progress was made in the Assembly toward the reunion of Presbyterianism.

Home Missions

A student volunteer movement to consecrate theological students to the difficult places in the home field as they have been devoted to the work abroad, is one of the new and significant phases of our life in the theological seminaries. The men sign a declaration: "It is my desire to enter the service of Christ in a neglected field under the American flag." Then the student indicates whether he would like to work among immigrants, in a rural church, or on the frontier.

Bible Conference at Winona

Winona Lake, Ind., is a great Presbyterian Chautauqua at which conferences are held which have interdenominational significance. The Bible conference this year will be held August 20-29. Dr. Campbell Morgan will be present, as well as Rev. A. C. Dixon, formerly of Moody church, Chicago, but now of London in the pulpit of Charles H. Spurgeon. There will be well-known evangelists, evangelistic pastors, and rescue mission workers on the program.

Here and There

Where Extremes Meet

I have just returned from an interview with a good brother of a different persuasion, who declined to join in a union meeting because a "full gospel" could not be preached. Where have I heard something like that before? What he meant, of course, was the peculiarities of his denomination. But when others use the phrase we are left to assume that it includes the marrow and fatness of the gospel. Every denomination has a sectarian element in it which means to identify particulars with universals. The language is always the same. They would not be at home among men of tolerant and liberal minds, nor would they be at home among themselves—unless home is where the fur flies.

Reverence in the Churches

Do we know what it is? I ask, because many people who demand reverence do some irreverent things. For instance, they will talk during the sermon, and before the sermon begins, yet they seem unaware that they violate any proprieties. Rural churches need much training on the subject. Reverence is a matter of centuries, and does not come in a day. It might be well for us to appoint a day on which to study the subject from all sides. What is it, and what does it include?

Let Us Have Peace!

This is what I read in the journal of one of the great denominations of this country. It had a familiar ring. I have heard it on divers and sundry occasions. It seems that an effort is being made by the aforesaid denomination to admit the Unitarians to its fold, and a tempest in a teapot has been the result. So, as is usual in such cases, peace is desired. There was a time when we actually sighed for peace; we sigh no more. We crave no peace whatever, not even the peace of death. Let us continue to fight and show our brotherly regard for those who differ, and our zeal for the truth by saying all the mean things we can think of about each other. It's a fine compensation after delivering homilies of one kind or another on peace on earth, good will among men. To preach one thing and practice another keeps the balance true. Then this practice is said to help the revenues, and these are not to be despised.

Wise Words Concerning the "Weak" Brother

Prof. Borden Parker Bowne, always wise and discriminating, has this to say: "The matter of the 'weak brother' has been very much misunderstood. In deciding what is right or wrong in itself, the weak brother cannot be considered at all. This is purely a question of truth and right reason. To declare obligatory, out of regard for the weak brother, something which is not obligatory, is false and dangerous. It makes ignorance and prejudice and weakness, rather than the truth of things, the ground of legislation. It produces an artificial and fictitious code which is sure to produce revolt when it is seen through. It obscures the eternal obligations of justice and righteousness by petty fussiness about the tithing of mint, anise, and cummin. Now this is undue deference to the weak brother, and must never be allowed. St. Paul would not admit that an idol was anything, or that meats offered to idols were damaged thereby, or that there was anything unclean in itself. He would not needlessly offend, but he would not conceal the truth. And this is as far as Christian wisdom allows us to go. In the confusion of this human world it must needs be that offenses come, but in the long run the truth is the line of least resistance and of fewest offenses. Weak brethren abound on all sides of every question. If one is offended by the enlargement of liberty, another is offended by its limitation. Defect is as dangerous as excess. Only the truth is safe, and only the truth makes free. The weak brother, then, is not to be considered at all in deciding the question of essential right and wrong; but he is to be taken into account in the use of our freedom. We must not walk uncharitably, but in Christian wisdom and love. But the weak brother himself may never prescribe the measure of consideration to be given to his notions. That would encourage him in his whims and make him a still greater nuisance. He needs to be told the truth about himself now and then, lest he remain in error; and the truth is that he has mistaken his own ignorant notions for universal principles; and the probability is that he has confounded his native conceit and pugnacity with zeal for the kingdom of God."

Of Course You Have Noticed

That the weak brother, as a rule, is an ass.

That the man who thinks he knows it all never thinks at all.

That the man who wants his way all the time doesn't deserve to have it any time.

That the Pharisees are still discussing the issues of mint, anise, and cummin, for revenue only.

ABSALOM'S FAILURE.

LESSON XIV—JUNE 20.

II Samuel 18:1-15.

Verse by Verse.

By Asa McDaniel.

1. David numbered. He mustered, and reviewed his troops. The number he had in his army is not stated.—Captains of thousands and captains of hundreds. This is the usual military division. We have no means of knowing the number of divisions.

2. Under the hand of. Under the leadership, of command of Joab.—Ittai the Gittite. A native of Gath.—I will surely go forth with you myself also. David proposed to take the chief command in the engagement, by going to the front in person.

3. Thou shalt not go forth. So much depended upon the life of the king that his followers protested against his going to the front. They protested on another occasion. II Samuel 21:17.—Thou art worth ten thousand of us. Their estimate of their leader. The Hebrew text has, "for now are there ten thousand such as us," Rvm.—Be ready to succor us out of the city. If David remained at Mahanaim he could send reinforcements, and the reserve force could protect them in case of defeat.—The city. Mahanaim situated in Eastern Palestine, between the Yarmuk and the Yabbok rivers.

4. What seems to you the best I will do? The king submits to the wishes of his people, and remains in the city awaiting the issue of the battle.—By the gateside. The gate of a city was a very important place in David's time. It was here traders met, and judges dealt out justice. Here the king transacted business, and upon this occasion awaited the issue of the battle.—By hundreds and thousands. These numbers are used indefinitely, just as modern "company" may vary largely in number.

5. Deal gently for my sake with the young man, even Absalom. A father's love prevails over his desire for victory. In contrast to this we find Absalom's conduct in no way affected by filial affection. See II Sam. 15:18. All the people heard. The entire army knew the feeling of the king for Absalom.

8. The people went out into the field against Israel. David's army made the attack upon Absalom's force. It was in reality one faction of Israel against the other.—The forest of Ephraim. The exact place is not known. The battle was not far from Mahanaim in Gilead.

7. The people of Israel. Absalom's army was utterly defeated. The numbers are not intended to be accurate, only suggestive of the great slaughter.

8. The battle was there spread over the face of all the country. The country was such as to prevent the whole army being together, and David's army was in Divisions.—The forest devoured more people than the sword devoured. The woods were unfavorable to the large force. Kirkpatrick suggests that owing to the nature of the ground more were slain in the pursuit through the forest than in the actual battle.

9. His mule. Perhaps David's own mule, on which only royalty could ride.—A great oak. Or. Terebinth, Rvm. Some of these terebinths have such low branches that one cannot stand beneath them.—His head caught hold of the oak. His head became wedged in the branches of the tree. Josephus says that he hanged by the hair of his head.—The mule that was under him went on. The mule ran from under him, leaving him suspended from the tree. In the skirmish he was separated from the main body of his army, and in flight was entangled in the low branches of the forest.

10. A certain man . . . . told Joab. The man would not disregard the king's command by killing Absalom, hence took the news direct to Joab.—Hanging in an oak. Absalom was at the mercy of the king's soldiers and his army badly demoralized.

11. And, behold thou sawest it. The reprimand was severe, and gave the man clearly to understand that he had not done his full duty.—Ten pieces of silver. The equivalent of about an hundred dollars in purchasing power.

12. Though I should receive a thousand pieces of silver in my hand. "If I were to feel the weight of the money paid into my hand" (Driver).—Against the king's son. The man was loyal to the king.—Beware. Heb. Have a care, whosoever ye be, of, etc.

A Spoiled Son

The Lesson in Today's Life.

BY JOHN R. EWERS.

"When I was a boy I had to please my parents and now, that I am a father, I have to please my boys, so I am getting the worst of it, coming and going," said a man to me recently.

DISCIPLINE.

The most unruly children are found in the worst and in the best homes. In the most aristocratic suburb of one of our Ohio cities is to be found a group of boys and girls from elegant homes. These royal youngsters drive their teachers mad. You would have to go to the slums and into a mission school to duplicate their behavior. Even in the middle class it is not much better. "Children, obey your parents," seems to have an ancient ring about it. It may have been in force in the good old days, but surely it is obsolete now! The crying need of the present hour is discipline. The rod has been spared and the child has been spoiled. Stern obedience has passed. We are developing a race of whimpering mollycoddles. Children of the present day want everything—but work. They want Montessori methods in the kindergarten, kindergarten methods in the grades and play in the high school. Life is one long, sweet game of "Do-as-you-please." Modern young people can do anything which requires no discipline. They can look at "movies" and listen to "canned music." Their achievements are quite marvelous. One would like to see the modern high school lad hoe a long row of corn or saw a cord of wood! Let us not be too hard on the children; we dearly love them. In fact, we love them too much for their own good. We love them too much to discipline them. We spare them every effort. There is no charm in doing things the hardest way, I know, neither is there any virtue in softness. We need a revival of Puritanism. We need a tonic of "Beef, iron and blood."

OVER THE GATE.

Outside Getheseme there is no sadder picture than that of the old king weeping in his chamber over the gate. His heart is broken by his wayward boy. Absalom was one of these pretty boys. He was handsome, with hair that made the women gaze. He dressed well, even in the height of fashion, and carried a cane. He was the best tango artist on Broadway. He was a free spender and had a crowd of hangers-on who helped him politically. He was smooth and sharp. He was not troubled by scruples, for he had none. He called his father, "the old man," and joked about the mix-ups in the royal harem. His heathen mother did not help the situation any. She sought the advancement of her son as against the other princes who had other mothers. When the clever Absalom, by his flatteries in the gate, sought political preferment, David's chickens came home to roost. The king had had his fling, now he must pay for it. He had murdered Uriah and stolen his wife. He filled his household with scheming, quarrelsome women. Now he must suffer for it. The bitter tears over the gate: the agony because of a worthless son; the heart-rending report of the runner—compound interest on the debt of sin.

CAUSE AND EFFECT.

Absalom's career was logical. It was to have been expected. The cause is there. Given a heathen mother and an easy father and you have the equation. The answer is so simple that you do not have to peek in the back of the book to find it. Foolish mothers have much to do with it. Let us not spare Adam and lay it all upon Eve. Hand it to David as hard as you please. He deserves all you feel like giving him. But all the blame is not his, unless you blame him for marrying that heathen mother of Absalom. Her god, her ethics, her customs were different. Many modern mothers by scoffing at the Sunday school, by neglecting the church, by purposely keeping their children from associations with the young people of the church, by social aspirations, by false character standards, by insincere habits themselves are doing all that is possible to damn their sons and daughters. Heathen mothers—that is the place to put it. Careless, indifferent toward the church. Bibleless, prayerless and at the same time social climbers—miserable heathens, mothers of Absaloms. Blame David? Yes, and also Maacah.

Disciples Table Talk

Church to Bond Its Property.

An unusual plan for financing a church building enterprise is that adopted by First Church, Galesburg, Ill. The trustees have authorized the issuance of twenty thousand dollars of bonds. Pastor H. A. Denton describes the plan as follows: "The bonds will be in denominations ranging from one hundred to five hundred dollars, and will be offered to any person who desires to invest any amount from one hundred dollars up. A local bank will act as trustee for the bond issue. The interest will be 6 percent, payable semi-annually. The bonds will have a two-year redemption clause at 2 percent premium. The issue will be secured by a first mortgage on the new lot and building. The present subscription list, and what will be added to it this summer, and the money raised on dedication add a further guarantee of the safety of the investment. We will offer these bonds to our own members, to our people around Galesburg, to private investors, and to the banks. The amount of the issue is small and the rate of interest good. We do not anticipate any long effort in disposing of the bonds. If you have some money to invest where you will be relieved of worry, and so you can clip a coupon every six months and send to the bank and get your interest, here is an opportunity. The building committee guarantees the bank that it will keep an average balance sufficient to take care of the interest."

Loses Efficient Assistant Pastor.

Central Church, Terre Haute, Ind., is reluctantly parting with Miss Leah McCune, who has for several years been the efficient secretary of the church and the pastor's assistant. She goes to Portland, Ore., to assume similar duties with George Dorsie, her former pastor at Terre Haute. Under the leadership of J. Boyd Jones the Sunday school at Terre Haute has been leaping forward in its attendance—on June 6 there were 977 persons present.

Sunday School Growing Beyond Its Own Record.

In March of 1914 the church at Ft. Madison, Ia., established a new record for the city in the matter of attendance at Sunday school, with an attendance of 256. Since that time the making of new records, says the pastor, E. E. Davidson, has been entirely in their own hands. On children's day they had 531 present. The average Sunday school attendance is larger than the church membership. The church is also growing in membership.

Dr. and Mrs. Dye in B. F. Coulter's Church.

A visit of Dr. and Mrs. Royal J. Dye to the Broadway Church, Los Angeles, resulted in a remarkable manifestation among the young people of the church, fourteen of whom consecrated themselves to missionary service in response to Dr. Dye's direct appeal for workers in foreign lands. The pastor, Charles F. Hutslar, rejoices in this event as a partial fulfillment of the desire of the late B. F. Coulter, the Los Angeles merchant, who founded the church and ministered to it until the time of his death.

Young University Getting Well Established.

Out of a graduating class of twelve at Phillips University, Oklahoma, nine will enter the Christian ministry. There has been an enrollment of 400 students in the university during the year that closed June 3. The personnel of the student body has ranked high. An intercollegiate debate and the state oratorical contest were won by Phillips students while the prize of $500 offered by the Carnegie Peace Foundation for the best essay written by a college student, was awarded to R. W. Nelson of Phillips. The university is closing its ninth year. Its support from the churches is increasing. Chancellor Roth says that over fifty churches in the vicinity of Enid have each pledged $100 a year for five years to make up the deficit on running expenses. Endowment promotion work is being pushed also.

Sunday School Breaks All City Records.

All known records for Sunday school attendance in Indianapolis were broken at the Central Christian Church June 6 when 1,209 persons were present at the Children's Day exercises of the Sunday school. The previous record was established by the school on the first Sunday in May of this year, when the Mother's Day attendance was 1,126.

The annual contribution of the school toward foreign missions was $350. Dr. Allan B. Philputt, the pastor, preached at the morning service of worship on "The Conquering Christ" and left in the afternoon for Oxford, O., where he delivered the baccalaureate sermon for Oxford College for Women.

Jabez Hall on the Life Worth While.

Preaching the baccalaureate sermon at Butler College, Indianapolis, on Sunday, June 6, Dr. Jabez Hall told of the opportunities that await the college graduate who is about to become a part of the rush and roar of the world today. He cautioned the young men and women against a neglect of these opportunities. He declared that a person can be labeled as sinful if he stands idly by and does not assume a fair share of the responsibilities that are awaiting him as a citizen of a great nation. The speaker emphasized the value of service and declared that the man who serves others to his best ability will find that he had not neglected himself. The baccalaureate service was the opening event in commencement week. There were forty-six graduates.

Graduation of Missionaries.

The College of Missions at Indianapolis held commencement exercises on Friday, June 4. President A. McLean of the Foreign Society delivered the address. Nineteen missionaries participated in a dedication service conducted by President T. C. Howe and Professors W. C. Morro, Jabez Hall and C. E. Underwood of Butler College and Rev. Charles H. Winders, pastor of the Irvington Church. President Charles T. Paul of the College of Missions, and Mrs. Josephine M. Stearns, secretary of the Christian Woman's Board of Missions, also made addresses. The graduating missionaries have received appointments to Oriental, African, Latin American countries and to the mountain countries of the United States.

R. A. Doan Visits Oakland.

Returning from his long trip to the mission fields of the Orient, Mr. R. A. Doan, of Nelsonville, O., spent a day with First Church, Oakland, Calif., where he spoke to the congregation. Vaughan Dabney, the pastor, says that Mr. Doan made a great impression on all who heard him, especially upon the men, who listened eagerly to a fellow business man's interpretation of the work of foreign missions. Mrs. Doan and Austin left Oakland for Claremont, in Southern California, where they will remain until the Los Angeles convention when Mr. Doan, who is now in Nelsonville, will join them. Mr. Dabney adds a postscript to this news item saying that the Oakland church freely extends its services to all prospective visitors to the exposition. He will be glad to assist in securing rooms or other accommodations for Disciple visitors who write him.

Cut of Missionaries' Salaries Quickens Liberality.

The announcement of the Foreign Missionary Society that a cut of ten percent would have to be made in the salaries of the missionaries to make up for the deficit of $28,000 under which the Society is compelled by reduced offerings to operate, has gone to the quick of many a heart.

Dr. Peter Ainslie, of Baltimore, has sent to the treasurer of the Society his check for an amount equal to his expenses to the Los Angeles convention, advising the Society that he cannot be comfortable in going to Los Angeles in the knowledge that missionaries are compelled to give from $60 to $120 apiece to make up for the delinquency of the churches at home.

The Hannibal, Mo., church has written its living link missionary that the church will see to it the salary is maintained at the regular figure. A special call was made by the pastor, George A. Campbell, for a larger offering than usual for this purpose.

In many of the Children's Day exercises a statement of the stressful situation was made by pastors or superintendents, and always the response of the children and the church people was made more generous by knowing the facts.

Easter Offering Encouraging But Inadequate.

The Easter offering of the National Benevolent Association to date (June 10) amounts to $25,437.30, which is $176.96 more than the total Easter offering of last year. This offering though encouraging under the circumstances is not adequate to the urgent and growing needs of the twelve great institutions of the Association. The $40,000 asked for is not one dollar more than is needed. The Easter offering constitutes the bread and butter fund of our hundreds of homeless, friendless wards. If it fails or is seriously curtailed, they will be the innocent sufferers.

Yale Graduates Nine Disciple Ministers.

Out of thirty-three graduates of the Yale School of Religion this year nine are Disciples of Christ. Of these the one receiving the highest honor is Clarence Reidenbach after whose B. D. are attached the words, "magna cum laude." Mr. Reidenbach is a Butler man of the class of 1912. On the graduating program with him are three other graduates, one of whom is Harry C. Burkhardt, another Butler man of the class of 1913. The other seven graduates are Henry G. Burgess, Eureka; Ernest W. Corn, Bethany; Clifton S. Ehlers, Transylvania; Alexander C. Gray, Hiram; John Leslie Lobingier, New York University; Clyde E. Pickett, Hiram; Walter C. Prewitt, Bethany and Hiram.

Fifth Summer Conference, Laymen's Missionary Movement.

The Fifth Summer Conference of the Laymen's Missionary Movement to be held at Lake Geneva, Wis., July 28-August 1, promises to eclipse in strength of program and the number attending all previous conferences. The Bible study and devotions of the conference will be under the leadership of Dr. Cleland B. McAfee, of McCormick Theological Seminary, Chicago. His theme is "Some Missionary Crises of the Bible." Thursday, July 29, "Abraham: The Beginning of the World-Movement;" Friday, July 30, "Jonah: The Recall of Israel to the World-Movement;" Saturday, July 31, "Pentecost: Power for the World-Movement; Sunday, August 1: "Paul: The Human Leader in the World-Movement." The principal missionary discussion groups will be conducted by Bishop Theodore S. Henderson and Mr. W. E. Doughty. The former will lead a group in the discussion of Mr. Weatherford's "Introducing Men to Christ" and Mr.

Doughty will lead a group in the discussion of his new book on "Efficiency Points in the King's Business." The daily meetings by communions will be an important factor in carrying the message of the conference to the local churches. Platform meetings and round tables will be addressed by the strongest leaders of the various communions. Special care is being taken in the selection of the missionaries now on furlough who will be given opportunities to tell their story of achievement and need.

Each communion is enlisting a strong delegation. Disciple delegates are being enrolled by a committee of leaders of which Secretary S. J. Corey, Cincinnati, is the chairman. Mr. Corey is prepared to forward announcements and registration blanks with all necessary information to any who are interested.

An Exemplary Christian Business Man.

Mr. George A. Jewett is a Des Moines lumber merchant, a member of Central Church, treasurer of Drake University, and connected with every good cause in his city, giving thereto his means and himself. He is also the associate editor of The Christian Worker, Central Church's parish paper. For twenty-eight years he has been associated with his pastor in this capacity. For the first half of this period the pastor was Dr. H. O. Breeden, and for the latter half it has been Dr. Finis Idleman. In recognition of Mr. Jewett's great and fruitful service to the church through the "Worker" a recent issue was turned over to words of appreciation of him. Many from Des Moines and elsewhere wrote warmly in expression of their esteen for this broad minded citizen whose personality seems to embody every idealistic interest of his community.

Euclid Avenue Loses Gracious Woman Leader.

Euclid Avenue Church, Cleveland, is stricken throughout its membership with grief at the death of Mrs. W. H. Cowdery last week. Mrs. Cowdery held a place of rare distinction in the church on account of the labor she voluntarily undertook in its behalf. It is said of her that she made nearly as many church calls in the course of a year as did that prince of pastors, her own minister, J. H. Goldner. With her electric car she was constantly at some work of love, carrying gifts and good cheer to the poor and bringing comfort to the sick. In a multitude of ways her gracious personality touched the life of the church and the city helpfully.

A Christian Business Man's Yearning.

No sentence has been quoted among Disciples of Christ in recent days so widely and repeatedly as the opening words of a remarkable article by Mr. R. A. Doan, the Ohio brick manufacturer, who went to the Orient to study the mission field and was drawn into active missionary service himself. Mr. Doan's article appeared in The Christian Century. It has reappeared in short extracts in fully one-half the parish papers that come to this office. The sentence that appears most frequently is this: "Sitting tonight in the midst of heathenism, darker than anything ever painted for me by those who knew, I have nothing so precious that I would not give it if I could be assured that by that means my brethren in America who have it in their power to minister to these in the name of Christ, could be made to see the hopeless millions marching on without hope or joy or rest."

Pastor to Use Boys and Girls in Errands of Kindness.

T. J. Dean, Jr., pastor at Jacksonville, Tex., issues a unique weekly under the title of "The Perspective." The following is taken from the issue of May 27: "For more than a year we have been planning to open up a channel that will enable our boys and girls to do the things that we teach in Sunday school. We believe that to urge the child to "be good," and neglect to make it possible for him to do those things that will develop the habit of "doing good" is to do it a gross injustice; what we need, what every church and Sunday school needs, is to open up avenues through which their boys and girls, and their older people, too, can express themselves in helpful ways to the members of the community. Next Sunday morning we shall begin a plan that will carry out the ideal that we have just outlined. Our boys and girls will be sent with bouquets of flowers to those who are sick, or to aged persons who are unable to get out. The child will have the joy of making the day brighter for someone, and someone's life will be made brighter because they have been remembered. We shall ask each member of the church to help the committee locate those to whom we may send flowers."

Three High Schools Choose Same Preacher.

An unprecedented distinction was conferred upon Dr. Charles S. Medbury, of University Church, Des Moines, Ia., when it was found that the three high schools of that city had independently invited him to deliver their baccalaureate sermons. In the morning Dr. Medbury addressed the members of the senior class of West High School and in the evening the seniors of North High at his church. In the afternoon he addressed the seniors of East High School in the auditorium of the school building. His themes for the day were, "The Way to Mastery," "The Vision of Life," and "The Power of a Great Life Programme." In his morning address Dr. Medbury said in part: "The sacrifices of those who have come to eminence we know, but the sacrifices of those unknown to fame, who through travail of soul have brought forth leaders, are not recorded in the books of men. And long is the list of loyal helpers back of every name acclaimed by men. Here are parents, teachers, friends, whose joy has been in the joy of one they love and who have stood back through the years, saying in utmost nobility of spirit all the while 'He must increase.' And such life is truly masterful. It is the reserve of righteousness, the constituency of power. Faithfulness never wholly fails of its rewards. He leads and is masterful who inspires another."

Graham Frank Declines Call to William Woods College.

Graham Frank will remain with his church in Liberty, Mo., where he has been for the past twelve years. The call to the presidency of William Woods College for Young Women, located at Fulton, Mo., strongly attracted him. After giving it consideration for three weeks he announced to his congregation last Sunday that he had decided to decline it. Mr. Frank has wielded a wide and helpful influence in his home city, where his church is the leading religious institution of the place. The churches and ministers of Kansas City, of which city Liberty is a suburb, will find unusual satisfaction in learning that Mr. Frank is to continue to reside and labor among them.

The Unpardonable Sin.

Bruce Brown of California is holding evangelistic meetings in Duluth, Minn. Speaking on the unpardonable sin one evening, he said: "The age-long mysterious subject is not mysterious at all. There is an unpardonable sin against the arm. Bind it up for seven years and you can never move it again. Against the eye: Bandage them for five years and you can never see again. Nature takes away what we do not use. In plain language, the unpardonable sin is to kill the conscience. Heaven always is ready to forgive, but when conscience is dead repentance forever is impossible. I ask no one in this church to endure what I am saying. Call me a heretic if you will, but I believe so much in the love and mercy of Christ that I think he would go to the lowest depths of hell to die for any devil who would repent." Dr. Brown will spend the summer on the Chautauqua platform.

Atchison Four Years' Pastorate Shows Gains.

At the fourth anniversary of the pastorate of Jesse Bader in First Church, Atchison, Kan., the following facts were brought out: During his pastorate 1,143 have been added to the membership. Of these 539 have been added by revivals with outside help. The total resident membership is now 1,306. Mr. Bader has conducted 157 funerals, and 112 weddings. The new $47,000 church has been built. There are three hundred married men members of the church. During the time Mr. Bader has been pastor of the church the Christian Women's Board of Missions has grown from 40 members to 200. It supports a living link, Miss Bertha Lohr, in India. The Sunday school enrollment has grown in four years from 150 to 1,000.

Bethany Summer School Plans.

Garry L. Cook, state Sunday school superintendent of Indiana, has announced that the sixth annual session of the Summer School of Methods for Sunday School and Missionary Workers will be held at Bethany Park, near Brooklyn, Ind., August 17 to 27. Courses in Christian Endeavor work and advanced Sunday school pedagogy will be added to the usual work of the school during the coming session. Mr. Cook will be dean of the school and he will also be head of the department of Sunday school education. He will teach the first and second year classes in pedagogy. Miss Hazel A. Lewis of Cincinnati will be elementary superintendent; Miss Cynthia Pearl Maus of Cincinnati will have charge of the secondary superintendent, and W. J. Clarke of Cincinnati will be adult superintendent and director of departmental work. Prof. Alva W. Taylor of Columbia, Mo., will give a series of lectures on social service subjects.

College Pastor at Home and Away From Home.

Claude E. Hill, pastor of the great college church at Valparaiso, Ind., has delivered eleven commencement addresses for high schools in Northern Indiana this season, five of them in his own county. At one school he was invited for the fourth time in five years. Valparaiso Church is in unusually good condition as indicated by many recent accessions, increasing congregations, and the doubling of the Sunday school apportionment to foreign missions, receiving the largest offering in the history of the church.

Cotner Bestows LL. D. on Eureka President.

President H. O. Pritchard of Eureka College, Ill., who formerly was pastor of the Cotner University Church in Bethany, Nebr., was given the degree of LL. D. at the Cotner commencement last week. Dr. Charles S. Medbury of Des Moines, Ia., delivered the commencement address. Twenty graduates received their A. B. degrees and two were awarded A. M. Chancellor Oeschger's report showed the school in a fair condition financially, with the outlook hopeful for increasing the endowment.

Appeal for Attendance at Los Angeles Convention.

At a meeting of the convention committee in Los Angeles last week, Russell F. Thrapp, E. H. Keller and Jesse P. McKnight were appointed a committee to urge the churches everywhere to make a special effort to be present at the international convention to be held in Los Angeles, July 18 to 25. The committee says: "On account of close times and the distance away from the center of the brotherhood, we feel that this word is necessary in order to secure an attendance that will be creditable to our people. Los Angeles is making great preparations for this convention. There is no better time to see the coast than this year when one can also enjoy the expositions at Dan Diego and San Francisco. We urge upon the churches everywhere to send their ministers to this convention. May we have a great outpouring of our people at the time of this great gathering."

Final Series of County Conferences.

The final series of county conferences for the Eastern District Indiana Christian Churches for the year 1915 will be held at Brookfield, Franklin county, June 21-22, and at Lyons Station, Fayette county, on June 22-23. The churches of Union county will join in this conference. Each congregation in these counties is asked to send the most representative delegation possible. State and county workers will be present. G. I. Hoover is the State evangelist for the Eastern District.

—Charles O. Lee, pastor at West Pullman, Chicago, has been doing some special studying at the University of Chicago. He recently won the Milo P. Jewett prize of $50, and will receive the degree B. D. this week.

—Children's day was observed at Monroe Street Church, Chicago, with a program of exercises by the Sunday School, concluding with an impressive dedication service in which ten infants were consecrated to God's service by their parents. Dr. C. M. Sharpe, acting pastor of Monroe Street Church, conducted the service.

—The Baltimore Conference of the Methodist Church, holding its sessions at Shepherdstown, W. Va., June 16-18, announces Rev. George A. Miller of Ninth Street Disciples' Church, Washington, D. C., as one of three specialists who will address the Conference on Sunday school work. Mr. Miller's theme is "Adult Bible Class Work."

—George B. Taubman, pastor. First Church, Long Beach, Calif., made the memorial address at the public auditorium in that city, supplying at short notice, for the mayor of the city who was called away.

—J. L. Darsie, of Cleveland, O., is filling the Taylorville, Ill., pulpit while the pastor, Walter S. Rounds, is in Arkansas for his health.

—While Dr. H. H. Guy of Pacific Theological Seminary, Berkeley, Calif., was sitting in his study on the afternoon of a Sunday or two ago, in came the firemen carrying a line of hose. "What's the trouble now?" demanded the professor. "Nothing much," yelled a fireman. "Your house is on fire; that's all. Don't worry!" The damage amounted to about $800.

—The church at Anderson, Ind., has received more than forty applications for the pulpit made vacant by the departure of J. Boyd Jones to Terre Haute. Z. T. Sweeney is supplying the pulpit ad interim.

—In the month of May, the receipts from the churches amounted to $1,454.06 less than for May of the previous year. There was a falling off in the total receipts for May of $6,081.55.

—Central Church, Des Moines, Ia., through its Sunday school raised $1,000 on Children's Day. Dr. Ada McNeil Gordon of India was present and filled Dr. Idleman's pulpit in the evening.

—First Church, Indiana, Pa., has had a series of record breaking congregations on three recent Sunday evenings. For the first the pastor, J. C. Clarke, preached for the county organization of Woman Suffragists, for the second the pastor addressed the G. A. R. and the third evening was devoted to the Children's Day exercise when the attendance was so great that many were unable to gain admittance.

—A very pretty and apparently adequate hour of worship will be dedicated this month for the county congregation at Walnut Grove in Cooper County, Mo. Nelson H. Trimble, of Columbia, Mo., is the minister, and has led in securing funds for the new house.

—George L. Snively reports the successful raising of $21,000 at the dedication of a new forty thousand dollar house of worship for First Church, Findlay, O. L. O. Newcomer, the pastor, undertook a difficult work there some years ago but has carried it to a remarkable success.

—Walter M. White's great church at Cedar Rapids, Ia., had an attendance of nearly 900 at the Children's Day Sunday school exercises. The offering for missions amounted to $640.

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY
CHARLES CLAYTON MORRISON, EDITOR HERBERT L. WILLETT, CONTRIBUTING EDITOR

Are We Cheapening the Church?

OUR MODERN CHRISTIANITY is emphasing the active, pragmatic, institutional side of the Christian life. We are asked by our leaders to do many things. Our churches are the scene of much bustle and noise. The "bee hive" ideal possesses us. We are exhorted to get up "boosters' clubs." The committee on securing a new pastor says he must be a "hustler" and a "live wire." There is much strife for the "front rank" standard. To supply the dearth of candidates for the ministry short-cut training schools for ministers encourage the delusion that education is a negligible quantity in Christian leadership.

Evangelism waxes more and more hypnotic and unspiritual. Its methods often leave the church cheapened in the eyes of the community. A passion for numbers obsesses us. "Personal work" is organized on an unnatural and mechanical plan. The divine shyness of the soul with respect to its deeper spiritual experiences and purposes is scoffed at and broken down. Vulgar words and phrases have coarsened the vocabulary of grace.

Our ministers have given up trying to teach us anything and have taken to exhorting us.

"Church work" does not connote to the average mind a very high and attractive kind of labor. It consists mainly in cooking, sewing and begging. The restaurant side of our church life is conspicuous. Our ladies have a great reputation for their dinners.

We were never so busy. There never was more bustle and motion and organization than today. A pastor was complaining the other day that it required the best part of two days each week to prepare the "copy" for his four-page parish paper. On looking over the paper it was found to be filled with small gossip.

Take for an additional and luminous example the familiar trick played upon the community in the matter of dedicating a new church building. The structure has been completed on faith. Perhaps not more than one-half the money has been provided for in advance.

A great "dedication" service is widely announced. The noble impulse of the people to worthily present the new house to God moves them to come into the divine presence with reverential and joyous emotions. The first portion of the service is arranged with an eye for dignity and devotion. The choir sings a Te Deum Laudamus. A great hymn is voiced by the congregation. Solomon's noble dedicatory prayer is read by the minister. The organ lifts the people's feelings up in paeans of praise. All feel that this is indeed the house of God, the very gate of heaven.

Then the "sermon" is begun. The preacher for the day is not the pastor, but a professional "dedicator." He has prepared an address which, though it begins on the high plane of worship, gradually descends to the level of the cheaper emotions, so that the pocketbook can be shaken loose. By turns he induces tears and laughter.

The "solicitors" are then commanded to move up and down the aisles, to receive and announce pledges so the house may be "dedicated" free of debt. Cheap puns and coarse wit are the order of the hour. The "dedicator" talks like an auctioneer. Confusion reigns in the congregation.

The uplift of the day has ended in anti-climax.

But the money has been secured!

Has such a house been truly dedicated? Has this unique opportunity to invest these stones with the idealism of religion been adequately improved?

No sensitive soul will so affirm.

The house has been cheapened. The congregation has been cheapened. The memory of that day that might have been rich and fragrant for all the years has been coarsened. And a flippant attitude toward the house of God has been cultivated by the procedure of that day.

The good intentions of the Church cannot be called in question. It is thoroughly in earnest. Its passion to serve mankind was never so urgent as today. The Church is washing more feet than ever in its history. Its back is bent in the attitude of service. We yearn to help people, to bring them to Christ, and we literally beg for converts and recruits, yes, for mere auditors. Why, then, are the Church's services so often spurned?

May it not be just because we beg so hard?

Might not our appeal be stronger if we kept it more in reserve?

Are we cheapening the Church and the gospel?

Is not our evangelism degrading the character of the Church? Where we gain one recruit by the prevailing evangelistic procedure who will say that we do not lose two? In the meeting which reports one thousand conversions there is no way to count the losses by alienation, by disgust, by disillusionment, by a weakening of respect for the Church.

Are our cheap music and our tinsel attractions and our hortatory preaching lowering the dignity, the inward self-respect, of the Church which Christ bought with his blood? Is the Church conscious of its royalty when it takes the world's feet in its hands to wash them?

No profounder or more timely question can be put to the Church's intelligence than this. Doing counts for little without being. Self-sacrifice is futile without self-appreciation.

The need of the Church of today is not more organization or action, but more quiet reverence and self-appreciation. To self-denial we should add self-affirmation. The frenzied, feverish Church needs the calmness, the self-reserve of her Lord. His self-respect should reappear in her consciousness also. He was not a beggar nor a servant. He was a King serving.

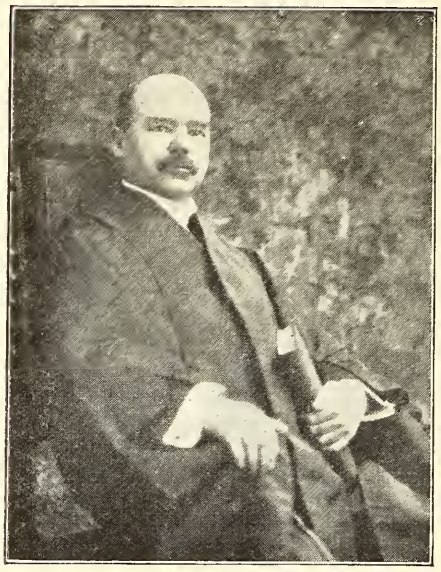
The Church, his bride, must be his Queen.

America's Memorial Day in China

Address on the Occasion of Its Observance at Shanghai, China, May 30, 1915

BY CHARLES SUMNER LOBINGIER

THIS is a year of anniversaries. Disregarding more remote events like the granting of Magna Charta in 1215, the pronounced, though fleeting English victory at Agincourt in 1415, and the Jacobite rising of 1715—the present year marks at once the centenary of the world's mightiest single conflict (until this year)—Waterloo—and the last instance of armed strife between America and her mother country. The centennial observance of the Treaty of Ghent, which inaugurated that fortunate situation was planned as one of the memorable occasions of the past winter. But the frightful cataclysm of war which has engulfed three continents and all "the seven seas" has rendered so incongruous the idea of celebrating peace between one of its participants and another, though neutral, nation, that the plan was abandoned and the auspicious event allowed to pass almost unnoticed.



Judge Charles S. Lobingier, of the United States Court for China.

AT APPOMATTOX.

In our own national history, which is happily not yet affected by such considerations, the present year likewise marks an epoch which has witnessed nothing less than the rebirth of our nation. Fifty years ago under the apple tree of Appomattox, the spirit of disunion met its death wound and amid the ruin wrought by fratricidal strife a new and greater Union arose knowing neither Northerners nor Southerners but only Americans. Among all the momentous events of this memorable year nothing can be more significant to our people than that it marks the jubilee of a reunited country.

Memorial Day came in soon after Appomattox. But for a long time it contributed little toward the process of conciliation. Observed on a separate date in each section it was at first largely devoted in both to remorse and lamentation.

> "Love and tears for the Blue,
> Tears and love for the Gray."

Naturally, too, the orators in each section seized the occasion to eulogize those who had fallen and the cause for which they had fought. A typical oration of the time was that of Col. Ingersoll, himself a veteran of the Civil War, delivered at St. Louis on Memorial Day in 1882, which began:

> "This day is sacred to our heroes dead. On their tombs we have lovingly laid the wealth of spring. This is a day for memory and tears. A mighty nation bends above its honored graves and pays to noble dust the tribute of its love."

And he ended by asking:

> "But what of those who fell? There is no language to express the debt we owe—the love we bear—to all the dead who died for us. Words are but barren sounds. We can but stand beside their graves and in the hush and silence feel what speech has never told. They fought—they died—and for the first time since man has kept a record of events the heavens bent above and domed a land without a serf, a servant or a slave."

But as the swift years passed and a new generation came upon the scene "Decoration Day," as it had come to be known in popular parlance, lost something of its funereal character. The procession to the cemetery included fewer of those to whom the Civil War heroes who slept there were personally known. To those of us who were born after its close the titanic struggle of a half century ago is history—recent history, it is true, but pure history nevertheless. It is not a personal experience as it was to those who lived and suffered through it. And historical events, no matter how momentous, can never stir the feelings like a personal experience.

NO NORTH, NO SOUTH.

And so there has come about a gradual change in the significance of Memoria Day. Its annual observance must necessarily reflect the mellowed views of the mighty conflict out of which it grew. In each section there has been a steadily growing sentiment of respect for the motives of the other. The participants of the North are no longer viewed solely as tyrants nor those of the South as mere traitors. Each group, it is recognized, was for the most part profoundly, and even pathetically, sincere, and believed that it was acting the part of the highest patriotism.

As a consequence it is no longer deemed necessary to limit eulogies to the heroes of one's own section. The Southern people have long since come to share the national veneration for President Lincoln—himself Southern born—and to recognize in him the South's truest friend. So into the nation's pantheon of Civil War heroes the North now admits, along with the illustrious trio of Union Generals—Grant, Sherman and Sheridan—that trio of Southern leaders, Lee, Jackson and Albert Sidney Johnston. For were they not also Americans? And do not their military achievements, even tho in a mistaken cause, add lustre to the fame of our common country?

STONEWALL JACKSON A CROMWELL.

One of the most illuminating contributions to the voluminous literature of the Civil War is the series of papers in the Atlantic Monthly on General Lee by Gamaliel Bradford, Jr., a scion of New England abolitionists. And is it not a source of just national pride that a British military historian, Colonel Henderson, selected as the hero of his leading work on a typical strategist of the late nineteenth century, not Von Moltke, nor even Lord Roberts or Earl Kitchener, but our American Stonewall Jackson who, he says, more than any other modern chieftain resembles Cromwell?

Thus at the end of a half century Memorial Day appears amid greatly changed conditions and modified sentiments. It can no longer remain merely "a day for memory and tears." Yet it can hardly be divorced from the great conflict of which it was originally an echo. Shall it then fall into disuse and eventually pass away, like the veterans' organizations themselves, with those who participated in the Civil War? By no means. That mighty struggle may still and always afford lessons of the highest value to our people and Memorial Day should be the fittest of all occasions to impress them.

LESSONS OF THE CIVIL WAR.

Now that the glamor of the Civil War has fled, now that its wounds are healed and its passions dead, we may on that day which is itself the aftermath of the War look back across the vista of years and calmly and dispassionately inquire what it has to teach us.

Foremost among its lessons that war points a moral in the importance of toleration and mutual forbearance among our people. These, as ex-President Eliot of Harvard has well pointed out, are among the prime objects of education in a democracy. It is not so in a monarchy; there the goal is obedience. The people must be taught to obey while the ruler commands. But where the people are themselves the rulers the minority must learn to yield to the majority and the majority must learn to respect the rights of the minority. This involves mutual consideration and a conciliatory spirit which history shows to have been conspicuously absent on the eve of the Civil War.

James Lane Allen, born and reared on the border between the two sections, and thus enabled to grasp the viewpoint of each, has thus epitomized the situation which dominated our country in 1861:

> A little group of four ideas—how should they have power of life and death over millions of human beings! But say that one is the idea of the right of self-government—much loved and fought for all round the earth by the Anglo-Saxon race. Say that a second is the idea that with his own property a man has a right to do as he pleases: another notion that has been warred over, world without end. Let these two ideas run in the blood and passions of the Southern people. Say that a third idea is that of national greatness (the preservation of the Union), another idol of this nation-building race. Say that the fourth idea is that of evolving humanity, or, at least, that slave-holding societies must be made non-slave-holding—if not peaceably, then by force of arms. Let these two ideas be running in the blood and passions of the Northern people. Bring the first set of ideas and the second set together in a struggle for supremacy.

But there are very few questions which can be settled only by war and among them were neither of the fundamental ones to which the foregoing summary may be reduced. There was first the question of slavery—an institution which had existed in the country for more than a century and a half, had spread to all of the colonies, but had gradually been abandoned in the North as its economic unprofitableness became recognized. In the South, statesmen like Jefferson had early pointed out its evils and advised its gradual abolition. But the process was necessarily slower there because the system was more workable, had become a part of the industrial organization and was profitable to individuals though not to the community. This, however, was not peculiar to the South; all other countries have at some time sanctioned slavery and all other Christian countries have abolished it peacefully, Russia and Brazil within the memory of many now living. It is an insult to the intelligence of Americans to say that they alone had to resort to war for that purpose.

"A MORE PERFECT UNION."

The other fundamental question involved the nature and powers of the Federal government; but these were challenged at that time only because of the slavery dispute. The South was not the exclusive seat of disunion sentiment. Not only did the first movement for "a more perfect union" find its ablest supporters among Southerners like Washington, Madison and Marshall (who aspired to be Americans rather than mere Virginians) but the attachment for the union grew steadily stronger in the South as elsewhere with the years. The supremacy of the Federal government was challenged, indeed, by the Virginia and Kentucky Resolutions of 1792 and by South Carolina's attempted nullification in 1832; but the latter was frustrated by a Southern President, Andrew Jackson, and midway between those two instances was the Hartford Convention of 1812 which voiced the spirit of disunion in New England. That the Union sentiment of the South continued to grow even down to the outbreak of the war is shown by the reluctance with which most of the Southern states entered the conflict. It was not until hostilities were actually begun that the die was cast. Surely the course of wisdom for both sections was to strive to the utmost to conserve that Union sentiment. The longer an open rupture could be deferred the stronger were the prospects of successful solution. Besides, the question was purely a constitutional one and the framers of our government had provided a national tribunal, already of world-wide fame, with a special view to the settlement of such questions. The need of that time was patience, forbearance, readiness to grant concessions. With such a spirit the situation might have been saved; for want of it our nation was plunged into strife that nearly wrought its destruction. If the observance of Memorial Day can cause our people to reflect on this awful example so as to apply its warnings in their future conduct of affairs the recurrence of the day will prove a perennial blessing.

THE PEOPLE SOVEREIGN.

Another lesson of the war is the importance in such a crisis of consulting the people—not a few self-constituted leaders, but the whole people. It seems highly improbable that a majority of Americans actually desired the war at any time. But the majority was not allowed to decide the question. Extremists grasped the helm and the ship of state was plunged into the whirlpool of war before the people could be heard.

In the North a considerable party still adhered to Jefferson's plan of gradual abolition. Even so late as the Hampton Roads Conference, barely nine weeks before Appomattox, President Lincoln is reported to have said that he "favored emancipation but not immediate" and to have suggested such ratification of the then pending constitutional amendment prohibiting slavery as would prevent its taking effect for some years. But the extremists of the North would have none of this. They demanded abilition at once. "Better no union than one tainted with slavery" they said.

A FATAL ERROR.

And this uncompromising attitude was echoed by the extremists of the South who were likewise willing to disrupt the Union rather than jeopardize their cherished institution. Here was the opportunity for the moderates of both sections and nothing would have met the situation like an appeal to the whole people. On the very eve of the war, January 3, 1861, a resolution providing for such an appeal on the slavery question was introduced in the Federal Senate; but it failed by a majority of one! Of the seceding states only three—Virginia, Tennessee and Texas—referred the question to their voters. In the remaining eight, conventions "enacted" ordinances of secession and these great commonwealths were suddenly swept into the vortex of war; just as the demons of destruction were loosed in the chancelleries of Europe last summer before the peaceful inhabitants of the now belligerent countries suspected what was happening. Yet it is the people—the great common people—who suffer most, have most at stake, and therefore have the strongest claims to be consulted as regards war. For the citizen soldier who goes forth to meet certain suffering and, at least, possible death, leaving behind his means of livelihood and his helpless family, sacrifices far more than the war minister or even the monarch—for it is the former's all.

THE FUTURE OF MEMORIAL DAY.

Such are some of the lessons which our War teaches and they are peculiarly significant in this year of world strife. Doubtless the history of our Civil War, like that of the American Revolution, will be subjected to increasingly intensive study in the future, so that other lessons and new viewpoints will steadily appear, and provide a perennial supply for Memorial Day. It ought to be an occasion for national heart searching and introspection in the light of the great war and its lessons. Instead of being observed on separate days and by distinct groups in different sections, there should be one day for the entire Union whose preservation it commemorates. Instead of reopening the wounds of long ago the manner of its observance ought to be such as to strengthen the ties of our common nationality. Such a day has a distinct and permanent place in the calendar of American holidays. As July 4 commemorates the nation's birth and February 22 perpetuates the fame of the nation's principal founder, so May 30, should recall the period of greatest national peril and happiest deliverance. Thus an occasion designed as one of sorrow for the dead becomes one of joy and inspiration for the living; and an observance which tended to divide our fathers affords a stimulus to national solidarity and patriotic endeavor for generations yet unborn.

AFTER SCHOOL

By Bliss Carman.

When all my lessons have been learned
And the last year at school is done,
I shall put by my books and games;
"Good-by, my fellows, every one."

The dusty road will not seem long,
Nor twilight lonely, nor forlorn
The everlasting whip-poor-wills
That lead me back where I was born.

And there beside the open door,
In a large country dim and cool,
With childish joy my lips shall say:
"Mother, I have come home from school."

HINDERING THE GENERAL CONVENTION.

IT is regrettable that two or three officials representing the American and Foreign Missionary Societies have chosen to hinder the working out of the plans of the General Convention of Churches of Christ.

The churches had a right to assume that the unequivocal approval given the General Convention by these societies at Atlanta last fall, as well as at previous annual meetings, would command the fullest co-operation of all the servants of these societies.

But it has not done so.

It is gradually becoming known that every step forward taken by the executive officers of the General Convention in carrying out the will of the brotherhood has met only grudging co-operation and at times stubborn opposition at the hands of a small minority of the society officials.

The opposition of the Christian Standard is not significant, compared with the indifference and open hostility of these officials.

Indeed, had it not been for the resistance to the new order of convention existing in certain official circles, it is improbable that the newspaper opposition would have taken itself seriously at all or would have been so persistently continued.

The brotherhood should be apprised of the nature of the difficulty under which the General Convention is compelled to make headway.

"THE BEAUTIFUL ADVENTURE"

CHARLES FROHMAN, the most conspicuous theatrical manager in the English-speaking world, who went to his death on the Lusitania, left behind him a saying that shows not alone the rare quality of his own soul, but interprets to mankind with fresh insight the meaning of life's climacteric experience.

"Why fear death?" he exclaimed just before the great ship went down. "Death is the most beautiful adventure in life."

An adventure! And beautiful! With all our Christian centuries of instruction and discipline, how far are we all from achieving an inner mastery of our instinctive fear of death!

We are still haunted with age-old superstitions about this "monster." Our traditional theology makes of death a sort of personality, sinister and grewsome, whom we must meet for a decisive reckoning. We find it even more difficult to shake ourselves free of this notion of death than to shake ourselves free of the similar notion of a personal devil as the embodiment of evil.

But neither superstition has any Christian warrant. Death is not anything in itself; it is not an entity. We do not meet "him" face to face.

Death is only a name for life's supreme adventure! It is the soul's embarkation on a far voyage for which all the years have been a happy preparation.

Toward it our heart should look with an eager wistfulness like that with which the mother awaits the birth of her child, and with even more eagerness, since it has to do not with the birth of another soul, but of oneself.

An adventure, and a beautiful adventure! What a revolution would be wrought in our whole human world if the forbidding and sinister austerity with which we have robed death should once fall away and we should let ourselves see with Walt Whitman the beauty of death's approach!

O sane and sacred Death!
The sights of the open landscape and the high-spread sky are fitting,
And life, and the fields, and the huge and thoughtful night;
The night in silence under many a star,

The ocean shore, and the husky whispering wave whose voice I know,
And the soul turning to thee, O vast and well-veiled Death,
And the body gratefully nestling close to thee.

Come lovely and soothing death:
Undulate round the world, serenely arriving; arriving
In the day, in the night, to all, to each,
Sooner or later: delicate Death!

Dark Mother, always gliding near with soft feet,
Have none chanted for thee a song of fullest welcome?
Then I chant it for thee: I glorify thee above all:
I bring thee a song, that, when thou indeed come, come unfalteringly.

Can we Christians ever learn to think of death thus and to make all our days glad with the anticipation of so supremely beautiful an adventure?

MISS ADDAMS IN EUROPE

THE mission of Miss Jane Addams to the rulers and statesmen of the belligerent nations of Europe would be set down frankly as quixotic by the press of our country were it not for the esteem in which Miss Addams is universally held.

Ever since the convention of the Woman's Peace Movement at the Hague, Miss Addams, who was its president, has been going from nation to nation proposing and urging a simple and sensible plan for bringing about the ending of the war.

Her proposal is that each of the neutral states of the world should spontaneously form a committee of prominent citizens, not necessarily government officials. This committee she would have consult with each of the belligerent governments separately, seeking to learn what each desired as an outcome of the war. The replies she would have compared by the committee and communicated to the other belligerents in the hope that an understanding might be reached among all the warring nations.

The practical-minded press characterizes Miss Addams' efforts in terms that discount the statesmanship and discretion for which she has generally been given credit hitherto.

This, say the hard-headed wiseacres, is not the time to talk about peace; the war must be fought to a finish; it is unthinkable that any belligerent power will at this stage of the conflict take seriously any proposal to put an end to the war; something decisive must happen on the battlefield before any nation's ear will be open to any such suggestion.

But Miss Addams reports that her proposals were welcomed by each government except Italy and France. The Italian authorities, she says, told her that they would welcome the proposal had they not just gone to war, which made peace parleys impossible at the moment. The French authorities told her that the proposal was entirely impossible, as it was too soon to countenance such an idea.

Whatever the immediate result of her mission may prove to be, it certainly is not in vain for Miss Addams to present her plea, a plea which, if it is not heeded now, will surely be heeded some day when the womanhood of the warring world wakes up to its irreparable loss.

There is something inspiring in the picture of this one woman, alone, with no title, representing only herself, going from capital to capital with a message of peace to the passion-inflamed peoples of Europe.

The God of pity and of truth will see to it that her words will not return void.

AN ADMIRABLE SYSTEM

CHRISTIAN SCIENCE uses admirable shrewdness in guarding and practically controlling its reputation. In the commanding city of each state in the union it locates a press bureau, with an official representative whose function it is to keep in touch with the newspapers of that state to correct any misstatements and reply to any aspersions reflecting upon the doctrines or practices of Christian Science.

Through clipping bureaus this publicity man is kept advised of every printed reference to Christian Science that appears in any newspaper of his state. If the reply sent in by him to the newspaper is not published the editor usually receives further communications, courteous but insistent, and often times a personal call.

The effect of it all has been to cultivate an editorial considerateness toward Christian Science which is not manifested in the same degree toward any other religious body.

The possibilities of this system are interesting.

Suppose that from the beginning of the Disciples' movement they too had had the sagacity to make use of it.

Suppose, for example, that whenever a paper represented the Disciples as teaching that immersion in water is a saving act a properly commissioned representative had been promptly on the spot to deny it.

Or suppose that every editor who let the name "Campbellite" slip off his pen had received a courteous but insistent protest from one who had both authority and grace for the performance of such an office.

Suppose, moreover, that this publicity bureau had been conceived not only as a device for replying to misrepresentations, but as a means of constructive propaganda of the Disciples' principle of Christian unity.

The world would have understood the Disciples better and the Disciples, left in peace to work out their ideals, would, no doubt, have developed along somewhat different lines than those they were driven into by the exigencies of controversy.

B. FAY MILLS

TWENTY years ago Rev. B. Fay Mills was, next to Mr. Moody, the most prominent evangelist in the American evangelical churches. He held great mass meetings in the largest auditoriums of the larger cities of the land. The meetings bore the fruits usually expected of such meetings held on so large a scale. Thousands of "converts" or penitents made profession.

Suddenly Mr. Mills dropped out of sight and when he re-emerged he classified himself as a Unitarian, first preaching for a while in Boston and later becoming pastor of the First Unitarian Church of Oakland, Cal. In 1904 he founded the Los Angeles Fellowship, and three years ago became the founder and leader of a short-lived organization on similar lines in Chicago.

Last week Mr. Mills asked the Chicago Presbytery to receive him back into the evangelical fold.

His disillusionment as to Unitarian liberalism, according to his confession before the presbytery, seems to be quite as complete as was his disillusionment twenty years ago with respect to his evangelical beliefs. He now declares his hearty acceptance of all the fundamental doctrines of Protestantism.

A man who has passed through Mr. Mills' experience ought to come back to the evangelical fold with no reduction of his power, but, on the contrary, with a positive increase of power. In what direction he will turn his energies and talents is not yet indicated, but with the intellectual chastening of the past years there is no doubt that the work of an evangelist would be richly rewarding to the Church should he choose to take it up again.

The time was never more opportune than right now for the projection of an evangelism upon an entirely new level.

Mr. Mills has the insight and the talent to pioneer the way. It remains to be seen whether he will do so.

MAKE THE FOURTH OF JULY SIGNIFICANT!

OUR national birthday has lost its significance. The meaning of it is swallowed up in the noise of bursting firecrackers, or, where the "sane" fourth obtains, no adequate provision is made for an observance in any sense appropriate to the high idealism that belongs to the day.

Dr. Sidney L. Gulick, repesenting the international relations committee of the Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America, has come forward with a proposal that should commend itself to the intelligence of every community. He suggests that the Fourth of July be the one day in the year on which to give citizenship to aliens and that all American-born young men (and also young women in states that have established woman suffrage) be formally admitted to citizenship on the Fourth of July nearest to their twenty-first birthday.

Dr. Gulick would have the community provide a solemn and splendid patriotic ceremony with processions, banners, bands, badges and with orations of welcome and responses thereto.

The implications of this plan are, of course, that no alien and no native-born American could vote at an election until having been formally received into the rights, privileges and responsibilities of citizenship.

Dr. Gulick goes further and proposes that no candidate be thus initiated until he has qualified for citizenship by passing an examination. He would have our Commissioner of Education prepare three text-books to be used by all applicants for citizenship throughout the country; one on the history of the American people, one on the ideals of Democracy, and a third on methods of government, local, state and national. Each book should, of course, be brief and very simple.

It should be the duty of the state or county school superintendents to provide for holding examinations at suitable times during the months of April and May for all who wish to participate in the Citizen's Birthday ceremony.

This is a highly important reform, but a President who would veto a simple literacy test could hardly be expected to approve a limitation upon the suffrage so radical as that involved in the examination proposed by Dr. Gulick.

The Larger Christian World

A DEPARTMENT OF INTERDENOMINATIONAL ACQUAINTANCE

Methodist Book Concern Makes Money

Though losing much money on its weekly papers, which are sold at a dollar a year, the Methodist Book Concern is able to overcome this deficit through its other publications. The past year a dividend of three hundred thousand dollars was given to the aged and disabled ministers of the denomination out of the profits. The total sales of the concern in 1914 were $2,787,070.42. Sixty-seven new books were published during the year and found a market both within the Methodist circles and beyond them in the wider Christian world.

Congregation in New York Raises Sixty Thousand

The Grace Methodist church of New York, of which Rev. Christian F. Reisner is pastor, has just closed a whirlwind campaign in which they have succeeded in raising sixty thousand dollars in the face of the present financial conditions. Twenty-three thousand dollars was used in paying off an old debt, and twenty thousand will be used to endow a work among the immigrants of the city. This church has 1,400 members.

Unitarian Church From Billy Sunday Preaching

A Unitarian journal recounts how Billy Sunday's meetings in Huntington, W. Va., led to the organization of a Unitarian church there. There were only three Unitarians before the revival was held, but the Unitarians were so liberally advertised through the work of the evangelist that they sent a preacher to the town who found a lot of people interested in this hitherto unknown sect. Within less than a year a Unitarian church of seventy members was organized and a thousand dollars subscribed towards the salary of a minister.

One Day in Seven

A Christian organization, the Lord's Day League, sets itself to the task of guarding the Christian rest day against encroachments of business and pleasure. The New York Court of Appeals recently handed down a decision that must have been gratifying to that organization. The court said: "Can we say that the provision for a full day of rest in seven for such employes is so extravagant and unreasonable, so disconnected with the probable promotion of health and welfare, that its enactment is beyond the jurisdiction of the legislature? "We have no power of decision of the question whether it is the wisest and best way to offset these conditions and to give employes the protection which they need, even if we had any doubt on that subject. Our only inquiry must be whether the provision on its face seems unreasonable, fair, and appropriate, and whether it can fairly be believed that its natural consequences will be in the direction of the betterment of public health and welfare and therefore that it is one which the state for its protection and advantage may enact and enforce."

Columbia Will Have Religious Summer School

Summer schools for the study of religious subjects have sprung up in various parts of the country, inspired by the success of the University of Chicago, which carries on regular work in the summer. Columbia University will inaugurate a summer school of religion this year.

Chicago Churches Organizing for Dry Fight.

The air is already full of talk about the great dry fight in Chicago which will reach its climax in the spring election in 1916. Ward organizations are being formed all over the city and churches are taking an active part in the work of organization.

Free-Thinkers Honor John Huss.

The Free-Thinkers of Chicago are organized among the Bohemians of Chicago and have built great halls where singing societies and turnvereins hold forth. The Free-Thinkers of Chicago have rented the Auditorium Theater, the largest in the city, for a celebration of the five hundredth anniversary of the martyrdom of John Huss, July 6. They will use the martyr as an example for their attitude of defiance to religious institutions. The Federation Council of Churches in Chicago are urging all pulpits to sound out with a strong Protestant message on that day.

Presbyterians Start Russian Church.

The Slavic nationalities have been but little touched by the Home mission work of the country, relatively speaking, and the Russians have been especially neglected. The Presbyterians announce the organization of a Russian church at Elizabeth, N. J., as a result of the work of some students of Bloomfield Seminary. There are mid-week meetings for the holding of religious services and for instruction in the English language.

New York Churches Have Child Welfare Day.

The churches of New York city have been asked to observe June 20 as Child Welfare Sunday. Preachers are to preach upon themes that relate to the welfare of the children, whether physical or moral.

Protestant and Catholic Strength.

The rather absurd fear of a Catholic movement against Protestants in this country makes interesting any statement about the relative strength of the two groups of religionists in various parts of the country. Some sections that were once almost entirely Catholic are now less so, and others that were once the very center of Protestant influence are now quite changed. Thus, Boston is now a great center of Roman Catholic influence, while Baltimore is a great center of Protestant influence, inverting the facts of the colonial days. There are twenty-five states in the Union in which the Protestant Church mem-

Catholic Editor Flays the Vatican

The Fortnightly Review is edited by a Catholic, and a well-known English Roman Catholic of liberal views, Richard Bagot, writes an article in a recent issue charging the Vatican with apathy in the presence of outrages against the church in Belgium. A Belgian Monsignore was sent by the Belgian Government to Rome, with a list of the names of fifty priests who had been shot by the order of German officers under particularly brutal circumstances. He also had a list of nuns who had been subjected to a fate for them worse than death. He was instructed to obtain, through the Belgian Legation, an audience of the Cardinal Secretary of State, and to urge that representation should be made to the German Government on the subject. All the reply that he was able to obtain at the Vatican was a shrug of the shoulders, and the remark: "What's the trouble? These are the episodes of war." Mr. Bagot's explanation of this cynical attitude is that the Vatican desires the admission of a papal representative to the Congress of the sovereign states, which will meet at the close of the war. The plea of the pope for peace was disregarded, and it is persistently rumored that he considers the possibility of removing his throne to Spain during the war. The "black pope," the head of the Jesuit order, though a Pole, has removed his residence to Switzerland. These evidences of weakness are noted by the editor of the Fortnightly Review. He also criticises the church for its attitude toward socialism. This free handling of ecclesiastical dignitaries is a token of a changed attitude among the intelligent Roman Catholic laymen.

bers outnumber the Roman Catholics. The states having the largest Protestant membership are Pennsylvania, with 1,700,000; New York, 1,230,000; Ohio, 1,170,000; Illinois, 1,100,000; Georgia, 1,007,000. The states having more than a million Roman Catholics within their borders are New York, with 2,800,000; Pennsylvania, 1,200,000; Massachusetts, 1,080,000. Georgia has the strongest preponderance of Protestants, there being 1,000,000 of them to 19,000 Catholics. New Mexico has 121,000 Catholics and only 14,000 Protestants.

Advertising Men Help the Preachers.

The Chicago Advertising Men's Association has an education committee that is co-operating with the preachers in giving publicity to religion. The association gave a luncheon to the preachers recently. Rev. G. K. Flack of the Wooley Memorial Methodist Church reported that an advertising campaign, begun under the direction of advertising men, had been wonderfully successful. Mr. Joerns, chairman of the Educational Committee of the Advertising Men's Association, said: "We are anxious for pastors, Catholic and Protestant, to know what we are doing. We believe that a city thrives as its churches thrive. We are hard-headed business men who are offering free of charge to the clergymen our ability to interest the public in their work through the paper for the purpose of giving ministers and advertising men a chance to confer." The Lakeview Presbyterian Church has a publicity committee, all of whose members are advertising men. The men of this committee will go out as speakers in the fall before men's clubs, telling the church how to promote religion by publicity methods. They will not make any charge for their services.

Epworth Herald Twenty-five Years Old.

The Epworth Herald is the organ of the Epworth League, the young people's organization of the Methodist Church in the United States. This paper continued a previous publication which had 12,000 subscribers when it was taken over. The Epworth Herald now has almost a hundred thousand subscribers. The paper was edited for many years by J. F. Berry. The journal has just celebrated its twenty-fifth anniversary.

More Geography for the Sunday School.

Among the Methodists there is a tendency to emphasize the teaching of Biblical geography. At North Yakima, Wash., an expert geographer visits the various departments and takes part of the hour for the purpose of instruction in this discipline. It is argued that no one knows a country and its people without knowing the geography.

Here and There

Send the Pastor to California.

Brethren, why not? The returns will bring you more than your investment in money. Many secular orders are sending representatives to their conventions and paying all expenses. Why should the Church seem less interested in the work of its convention? Many individual members could send the pastor and be richer for the deed. There is no dearth of money in the churches. Men and women are buying motor cars every week, planning expensive trips, and spending money freely. A gift of this sort to a pastor lengthens his days, drives away dull care, and cements the affections of all concerned for each other.

The churches must be helped to understand that such a work is not charity; it is a good investment for the Lord's cause. In many of the great business houses there is no thought of charity when it sends representatives across the seas, sparing no expense, to learn new methods, or to buy at a smaller cost than can be done at home. This all passes for good business. What would we think if the books of such firms showed these expenses as "charity"? They gain more than they put in, ten-fold over.

Every church would be blessed in beginning now to arrange to send the pastor to the convention at Los Angeles in July.

Selah!

My friend, and the friend of all humorists, we know nothing of you, nothing of your ancestry, of your advent into this world and your exit therefrom. Your name alone remains. The nature of the cavortings that marked your humble career are shrouded in mystery like the ways of the Nicolaitans and the Nickelodians. You are like the ancient prophet who seemed to have neither beginning of days nor end of life. Whether you died of inflammatory rheumatism, of acute indigestion, or of incipient ecclesiasticism, we know not. Your fate moves us to tears, especially if you have been gnawed by the pains of the aforesaid ecclesiasticism. It's terrible.

The wise men tell us that you put the soft pedal on while the temple choir sang, and likewise removed the same upon occasion. At other times you not only put the soft pedal on at the proper time, but also the muzzle at the proper time, to the consternation of the singers. You it was who told them when to make a joyful noise and when to desist. You told that choir where to get off and where to get on. Selah, best beloved, we would give worlds if you had left a successor armed with muzzles for the musically inclined, but who never deliver. Why did you not make that provision in your will? Speak, O speak, Selah, if you have a tongue.

But you seemed to fill such a valued place in the Book of Psalms and in the affairs of the choir, that men have used your name for other purposes, though long since you have been removed far from the madding crowd's ignoble strife. You adorn the page of writers who think they have said something of importance. They add your name to their communications as if nothing more could be said. In other instances, your name is used to tell us when to laugh at this discomfiture of an opponent. Your solemnity has been degraded to merry uses. Thus have the mighty fallen from the eminence of music to the levels of the mirthful.

You always bring up the rear of the procession in every controversy or newspaper parade like the steam calliope in the circus parade. But no sound escapes those Sphinx-like lips of yours, no gleam of mirth beams from your eye, no tear trickles down your cheek. All is silent. And today, as from the beginning, that silence, O Selah, has split the ears of generations as they have come and gone.

The Open Sesame.

If you want to get high up in the councils of those who think they must dictate affairs among Disciples, learn to sing "The sweet buy and buy," and send the cash with the order, and then from the hills and the valleys will come the mighty chorus, "Blest be the tie that binds." The brethren will please stand and sing!

The Shame of Retrenching.

It ought not to be thought of. We are better able to enlarge than to retrench. A week's self-denial by all the churches with season of prayer and praise, if heartily entered into, would relieve the depression. If the Disciples are really in earnest about the salvation of the world they will take steps at once to do something to change the announcement of reductions in the salaries of the missionaries.

The real question of the hour is, Do we need cash or consecration the more?

Of Course You Have Noticed.

That there will be no peace in any denomination as long as controversy makes a path to the bank.

That orthodoxy is coming to be a mere matter of buying supplies at the proper place.

SOLOMON ANOINTED KING.

LESSON FOR JULY 11, 1915.

I Kings 1:28-40.

Verse by Verse.

By Asa McDaniel.

28. Call to me Bath-sheba. She had withdrawn from the king's presence when Nathan, the prophet, entered.—Stood before the king. Bath-sheba returned to the king's presence, and stood in the attitude of reverence.

29. As Jehovah liveth. This is the usual form of oath or strong affirmation.—Redeemed my soul. David remembered that God had delivered him out of many and grave dangers, and at this time he was determined to remain true to Jehovah.

30. Assuredly Solomon shall reign after me. Solomon was now eighteen years old, and gave promise of fitness for the kingdom.—So will I do this day. He did not delay. Though feeble, he determined that his promise should be made good.

31. With her face to the earth. This was an attitude of reverence and supplication.—Let my lord king David live for ever. It was a common Eastern expression. In Bath-sheba's anxiety to have Solomon king, she showed by the expression that she did not desire the death of David.

32. Zadok the priest, and Nathan the prophet. This is a clear indication of the two classes of men which had been growing in the life of the people of Israel, the priest and the prophet.—Benaiah. He was a military leader and in command of the Cherethites and the Pelethites, see verse 38.—They came before the king. The men went before the king to receive their directions for the anointing of Solomon.

33. The servants of your lord. The mighty men mentioned in verses 8 and 38.—Cause Solomon my son to ride upon my own mule. No one except the king could lawfully ride the king's own mule, hence this act was a declaration that Solomon was king.—Gihon. The word Gihon is derived from a word meaning, "to burst or bubble forth." The Virgin's fountain bubbles forth intermittently, hence the majority of scholars believe this to have been Gihon, where Solomon was anointed king.

34. Anoint him their king over Israel. The anointing was an important part of the ceremony by which one was made king. It was a sign that the person anointed was made king.—Blow ye the trumpet. To call the attention of the people to the anointing.—Long live king Solomon. This was the public proclamation of the fact that Solomon was made king. The blast of the trumpets may have been a signal for the shouting of the people.

35. Come up after him. Come up with him as his bodyguard. They had to come from Gihon to Zion.—He shall be king in my stead. David did not live long after the anointing of Solomon as the king of Israel.—Prince. Or. "Leader" RVm.—And over Judah. After the attempt of Adonijah to seize the government, and especially Judah, see verse 9, David expressly declared that Solomon should be king over both Judah and Israel.

36. Amen. An expression of assent, so let it be.—Jehovah, the God of my lord the king, say so too. The Septuagint Version translates the expression freely "May Jehovah confirm the words of my lord the king."—The words call attention to the favors of Jehovah to the king.

37. Even so be he with Solomon. Jehovah can promise no higher blessing than his presence.—Make his throne great. Benaiah prayed that Solomon's power should be greater than that of his father.

38. The Cherethites and Pelethites. The soldiers formed the nucleus of David's army, see II Samuel 8:18. Some of these soldiers constituted the king's bodyguard.

39. Took the horn. The horn was probably a ram's horn fitted to carry the anointing oil.—Of oil. This oil was especially prepared, see Ex. 30:22-33.—The tent. Probably the one constructed by David on Mount Zion for the Ark of the Covenant, see II Samuel 6:17.

40. All the people. There was a generous response on the part of the people and they quickly rallied to the support of the new king.—Piped with pipes. See I Samuel 10:5. They were the first instruments used, and very simple. They were wind instruments very much like our flute, and used by the prophets.—The earth rent. We should use rent in connection with the air rather than the earth, and it may be that a corruption of the Hebrew text used the verb "rent" rather than the word "resound" which would be more natural.

Kingly Men

The Lesson in Today's Life.

BY JOHN R. EWERS.

The eventful career of David was nearing its end. Cooled were the hot tempers; subdued the violent passions; quieted the fierce ambitions. The days had arrived when he should have enjoyed the peace and joy of well earned reward but instead he knows only the pain of a divided household.

Scheming mothers plot to put their sons upon the throne. Already Absalom has rebelled and has been slain by the King's soldiers. Already Adonijah, another favored and flattered son, has carefully laid his plans, aided and abetted by disloyal courtiers, to take, by violence, the throne. The question of the succession must now be settled with a firm hand and David is equal to the task. Solomon, the son of Bath-sheba, has for long been David's wise choice. He possessed in marked degree the kingly traits. While yet the trumpets told of the crowning of Adonijah, from farther down the valley arose the mighty shouts of those who hailed Solomon as monarch. Nathan poured the holy oil, Benaiah represented the royal arms, Bathsheba asserted her strong influence, David wrote the decree and Solomon was anointed.

MADE KING.

There is much jealousy in modern society over the crowned men. Why should that man wear the crown? Why was he preferred over me? Why was he chosen president? Let due allowance be made for accident, for wire-pulling, for luck, for mistake, and when all the evidence is in, you will see that Solomon ought to have been crowned, that the man succeeds because he deserves it. The men who sit in bank offices, who head up the big corporations, who dictate the policies of the mills, who manage the affairs of great stores—the presidents deserve to be presidents. The cream rises to the top. The fittest survive. The brave win. The man with the stuff in him gets there. We have allowed for the variations and now we are noticing the rule. The king is the man who can.

KINGLY MEN.

Men who succeed have high voltage. Their energy is marvelous. Their sacrifice is superb. Their endurance is staggering. Their labor is Herculean. It is my privilege to know a few men who sit at the mahogany desks and I know that they earn all that they get. When their brains throb the earth rocks. Many of them pay a fearful price in nervous coin. Many of them stagger under colossal loads of responsibility. A man said to me once, "I would not accept the responsibility for twice my present salary." He preferred the comfortable middle ground. Most men do. Only a few men are capable of the sustained labor and strain incident upon managing huge affairs. The element of daring, the spirit of adventure must be marked. Talking to a business man recently who had just closed a deal so vast that to my poor ministerial outlook it seemed beyond belief, he said, "Yes, the reward seems large, but I risked everything I am worth to put this across." When I see the spirit, the toil, the nervous expenditure, the long hours, the tense struggle, the clever plans, the co-operation, the employment of other strong men which modern business men use in order to win, I ask myself about these same elements in the church: when we get Sunday school superintendents, when we get ministers, when we get church officers to combine these methods with the unlimited power which God freely offers, we shall win the entire world.

KINGLY MEN IN THE CHURCH.

Thank God, there are men of this stamp. Jesus himself advises churchmen to be as sharp as the men of this world. Moreover it is my experience that when you give a big business man a task in the church equal to his abilities that he will rise magnificently to meet it. The more I know of business men of large interests the better I like them. Most of them are morally right. Business could not succeed were the opposite true. It is fine business to reach old drunkards, to save the poor and weak. That is the task of the strong. Gladly will the strong bear the burden of the weak. May I add that it is also good business for the Church to capture a few kings.

Little Rock Church Adopts Resolutions on Delegate Convention.

The congregation of First Church, at Little Rock, Arkansas, has evidently been noting the discussion on the General Convention and has formed clear cut convictions on the subject. The attitude of the church is made known in the following resolutions adopted unanimously on June 6:

"Whereas, there is to be held at Los Angeles, California, in July 18 to 25 inclusive, the 1915 General Convention of the Churches of Christ;

"Whereas, the First Christian Church of Little Rock, Arkansas, is entitled to ten delegates in said convention;

"Whereas, there has been some discussion in our church papers and in our general conventions heretofore as to the desirability of the "Delegate Plan of Convention" and also the attitude of the Churches of our organized mission boards; and as probably this matter will come up for discussion and disposition in the next general convention at Los Angeles,

"Now, therefore, be it resolved, that the chairman of our official board shall appoint ten delegates from the First Christian Church of Little Rock, Arkansas, to the General Convention of the Churches of Christ at Los Angeles, and that said delegates in attending said convention do so without expense to this church.

"Be it further resolved, that this church is in favor of the delegate plan of church conventions; and also that this church is wholly committed to our missionary interests as now represented by our National Mission Boards; and that the delegates of this church are instructed to so represent it.

"And, whereas our pastor, Dr. J. H. O. Smith, has been granted leave of absence from our church to attend this convention,

"Now, therefore, be it resolved, that our pastor be and is hereby appointed one of the delegates to represent the First Christian Church of Little Rock, Arkansas, in the aforesaid convention."

Besides the pastor, six others were appointed as delegates, and the rest of the quota will be made up later.

George B. Van Arsdall's Service to Denver and Colorado.

Charles W. Dean, state superintendent of Sunday school work in Colorado, sends an appreciative interpretation of the far-reaching work of George B. Van Arsdall, who has recently resigned the pastorate of Central Church, Denver. Mr. Dean says: "The resignation of Geo. B. Van Arsdall from the pulpit of Central Church brings to a close a ministry of unusual usefulness —to the Central Church, to the city of Denver, and most of all, to the Christian churches of Colorado. It is not often the privilege of one man to make a ministry of five years reach out into so many lives —influence so many institutions—and be a power for the uplift of so many churches as has been the work of these five years in the life of our great leader. Dr. Van Arsdall has been a real pastor. He has had the joy of leading Central Church into many lines of real success. Seven hundred and ninety persons have been added to the fellowship, an average of 158 for each year of this pastorate. A financial system has been developed in church and school that provides adequate income to meet all the regular current expense budget of both church and Bible school—and then enables this great church to give to missions $12,396.58 in these five years and three months, or an average of $196.77 for each month of this great pastorate. But this only tells in part the story of a church's work. Members added and monies given may mean much, but the church's life means more. A few sentences from Dr. Van Arsdall's sixth annual report shows us the real spirit of the man and his attitude toward his task. 'I have given my most careful and prayerful attention to the worship on the Lord's day. I have endeavored to learn and speak Christ's mind for you and me. I have tried to be true to the will of God as revealed in the Holy Scriptures—seeking always to interpret it in terms of the living and not dead issues. Every sermon has been a heart and life experience to me. The guiding principle of my ministry has been to make God and the spiritual order real and usable for men.' These are words that give meaning to a ministry, and Central Church has come to know that they are true. Dr. Van Arsdall has been a conspicuous leader in the religious life of the city of Denver. For one year he was president of the ministerial alliance and for two years he held the position of General Chairman of the Denver Training School for Religious Workers. But we, in Colorado, will always feel that his greatest work has been as Chairman of the Board of Managers of the Colorado Christian Missionary Society. For four years he has served the churches of the state as one who felt that no labor was too great—no time too precious—no cause too small to call from him at all times his very best. Dr. Van Arsdall is a natural born leader, a man of wide vision, sound judgment, unselfish counsel, and an unlimited capacity for work. To those of us who know him best he is a kind, unselfish, big-hearted friend. We in Colorado hope that he will stay in Denver and that the coming days will find him one with us in doing the kingdom work, and that his strong, guiding hand will continue to be one of the greatest assets of the cause of righteousness and redemption in Colorado."

A Capacity Campaign for the Summer.

An interesting experiment is being tried at Payne Avenue Church, North Tonawanda, N. Y., for avoiding the "summer slump" in the Sunday School. We will let the pastor, I. E. Reid, tell it in his own words: "Beginning July 4 and running through the summer months we propose conducting a Capacity Campaign for our morning service. It might be called an Anti-Summer Slump Campaign, but we like the other idea better. We have fixed upon the number that each class can conveniently and intelligently care for, and we mean to charge that class in each case with the responsibility for reaching and holding that number throughout the period. During the Sundays preceding, it will be well for each class to get as near the figure as possible. And when the period closes we certainly have no intention of surrendering the proportions attained. We do not mean to overreach ourselves, but we do mean to reach the limit of our effectiveness. This will bring our Sunday School to an attendance of about 300 scholars. In attaining this, the work will be done through the department organizations. We have in hand the names of those for whom we intend to work and upon whom we expect to draw for our material. Into each department superintendent's hands will be placed sufficient names to leave some margin above the number fixed for the department. These will be divided properly among the classes, and thus the labor divided and the responsibility distributed so as not to fall too heavily upon any one."

Inquiries on Union of Baptist and Disciples Congregations.

Dr. Willett receives many communications from both Baptist and Disciples' congregations in various places respecting the basis of unity, on which Memorial Church, Chicago, rests, and inquiring for counsel in the matter of effecting similar unions in other places. An example of these inquiries is this from Crafton, Pa., where the writer says there is a Baptist Church of 150 members and a chapel, which pays its minister $1,200 per year, and a church of Disciples, also with a chapel and a pastor, who receives $1,000 per year. The two congregations could together pay $1,800 a year to a minister, and spend more money for other Christian work. Wherever there is a disposition for Baptists and Disciples to come together, there is no good reason why they should not do so.

Transylvania Changes Title From University to College.

At the annual meeting of the Board of Curators of Transylvania University, held June 9, a resolution was unanimously adopted, changing the title of the institution from that of University to College. Hereafter, the first institution of higher learning, founded west of the Alleghanies, and which has just closed its 117th session, will be known as Transylvania College. President R. H. Crossfield, who communicates this news, writes additionally as follows: "For a number of years, Transylvania has been confining her work to the field of college education, having abandoned the Law School, the Medical Department, and the Preparatory Department in order to devote all of her resources to the development of a college in the south of the type of Amherst and Dartmouth. Measured by every standard, the session which closed June 10, was the most satisfactory in the history of the college. Two hundred and fifty students were enrolled. Ewing Hall, a residential hall accommodating 129 men, was dedicated, a new heating and lighting plant erected, and other substantial improvements made. For a greater period than almost any college in the south, Transylvania has given a full four-year college course based on four years of high school preparation. From the enthusiasm manifested by the alumni at the recent home-coming, Transylvania will doubtless render a far greater service to the cause of higher education during the second century of her life than during the first one hundred years."

Heresy Hunting in Iowa.

One of the most humorous bits of heresy hunting that has developed among us of late, is now going on in the state of Iowa. Dr. Peter Ainslie, who recently delivered some addresses in Des Moines, is the object of attack this time, and incidentally Dr. J. H. Gornion. We printed in this department a week or two ago an estimate of Peter Ainslie, found in the Christian News of Des Moines, which called Dr. Ainslie the Isaac Errett of our generation. This was too much for certain readers of that bright paper and two of them, Rev. M. P. Hayden and Rev. Arthur O. Wright, have taken serious exception. The former thinks Dr. Ainslie is far from being the equal of Isaac Errett in "mental grasp." Mr. Wright says: "When I speak of Peter Ainslie, I do not speak of the man, his character, his education or his gentlemanly manner—these are undisputed—but I speak of Peter Ainslie doctrinally. You state that he stands for 'a catholic name.' Here is what he says in the Christian Union Library: 'We have had to take the name Christian or Disciples of Christ because there were no other names to take.' I stated that he was doctrinally elusive. In his book he states one thing and then confuses and disputes it later in other writings. This brings our people to derision and we cannot be represented by men who are seeking denominational favor, rather than the approbation of God. Mr. Garrison, though an estimable gentleman, stands just about where Mr. Ainslie does and should not be quoted along with Alexander Campbell. . . . I do not want it understood that I am criticizing Mr. Ainslie's character or attainments in any sense. (I make the same criticism of Jenkins, Van Arsdall, Morrison, Willett and others who are reeds shaken in the wind. The time has come when these men must be pointed out as 'Thou art the man.') The sentiments I express are my own and yet I am not alone in that opinion. Dozens of men of the state are with me. If you could read letters I have you would be amazed. The Christian News must stand on the Word of God. If it doesn't it will lose its power and support. You have Ainslie's quotations on our name as a church. Will you publish it, that his elusiveness may be proven? Must we go on having such side-stepping? The name is an imperative thing! How long will our societies and many of our people flaunt Disciples of Christ as the name of our church or of the Restoration Movement? Will you publish letters which I have from brethren regarding Peter Ainslie?" The editor handles his correspondents with discretion and patience, but with decision also.

Dr. Breeden on the Perils of Greed.

Speaking at the graduating exercises of the State Normal College at Fresno, Cal., Dr. H. O. Breeden contrasted the life of moderate means with that of riches. He pointed out the temptations peculiar to wealth. A strong paragraph of his sermon was the following: "Take note also of the temptation to moral cowardice which attends the desire for riches. It is no slander upon the rich to say that they are seldom the leaders in any great moral reform. The pocket never is too sensitive. Wealth makes men timid. It makes them shy of the unpopular side. It puts a cold worldly wisdom in the place of Christian enthusiasm. But wealth is also a peril to happiness. The ghastliest skeletons grin in the richest man's closet. The high places of the earth are too bleak and bare and sterile and stony, while in the lowlier walks of life there is more of sweet content and beautiful domestic joy. I am no prophet but I venture the prediction that if the angels of God's wrath ever smite the pillars of our national life, the Muse of History will declare that these avengers sprang from the ashes of outraged homes and broken law—outraged and broken by the blind god of gold. If this nation leaves righteousness at the foot of the gleaming mountain of prosperity it will stagger and fall from its lofty eminence and its ruin will be pitiful and appalling.

"At the Bat," a Sermon Theme.

Austin Hunter, pastor Jackson Boulevard Church, Chicago, preached on a recent Sunday evening on the subject, "At the Bat." Mr. Hunter is said to have proved himself a real fan. He said: "As St. Paul made the race courses and the athletic activities of his time the basis of spiritual instruction, so may we find many helpful lessons from our national pastime, baseball. We shall consider tonight the man at the bat. The man at the bat must recognize first of all the team work of the game. It is required that he shall be self-possessed and alert. He is interested in advancing the man on the bases as well as himself. To this end he frequently makes a little sacrifice hit when he might cover himself with glory by driving the ball to the fence. In our Christian course we must consider others as well as ourselves. We, too, are called upon to make sacrifices that others may be advanced. In so doing we thereby promote the cause with which our lives are identified. Have you ever noticed the 'one anothers' of the Bible? We are to love one another, prefer one another, care for one another, exhort one another, forgive one another. As individual playing will not win a ball game, so selfish living spells defeat for us in our Christian course. The opposing pitcher always studies the weaknesses of the batter and pitches to him accordingly. It is well for each of us to take into account the fact that the great enemy of our souls knows our weaknesses, and so we should guard our weak points. Every successful ball player seeks to keep himself in thorough form. By continual practice and self-discipline he goes to the bat to give forth the best there is in him. Our lives must be lived according to the highest standards if we are to win and help others win."

Worthily Bestowed.

An editorial in the Bloomington (Ill.) Pantagraph, referring to the bestowal of the D. D. degree upon Edgar De Witt Jones, by Wesleyan University of that city, says: "The title could not have been more worthily bestowed, and the fact that Dr. Jones is of a denomination other than the university makes it the more unusual and notable. A man of the fine mind and scholarly attainments of the pastor of the First Christian will wear the title with honor to the university and incidentally this sort of recognition is gratifying to a large number of Bloomington admirers, both in and out of church circles."

Broadway Church Organization Covers City.

Broadway Church, of Los Angeles, Cal., has now in operation a very effective way of keeping in touch with the membership, which is very much scattered over the city and suburbs of Los Angeles. The city is districted, and an official of the church put over each district, to keep in touch with all members in his particular district. This is accomplishing three things. It is helping the pastor, Charles F. Hutslar, to keep the membership interested; it is giving the members of the official board some active work to do, thus increasing their efficiency: and the indifferent members are deriving benefit in the fact that the church has a vital interest in them. Rev. John C. Hay, who was for many years very closely associated with B. F. Coulter, in Broadway Church, and who is an efficient instructor, is to begin a school for the Eldership of the church, that they may more thoroughly understand their qualifications, and meet their responsibility toward the church.

Hiram's Best Year.

Several outstanding facts justify Hiram College in claiming the past year as the most important one in her history: One hundred thousand dollars added to the endowment—the largest amount ever received in one year, making the total endowment now $400,000 and enabling the board to make a substantial increase in salaries; the largest increase in the library—nearly 1,000 volumes; all five of the inter-collegiate literary contests won by Hiram; a majority of athletic contests won, and an exceptionally large Freshman class, numbering over 80. Commencement week opened with a stirring baccalaureate sermon by President Bates. In the afternoon seven were ordained to mission work and the ministry. Monday afternoon the outgoing class presented on the college campus a unique and picturesque entertainment, consisting of a historical pageant, representing scenes in the life of the school from its genesis in 1849 to the present. The graduating exercises occurred Tuesday morning. Thirty-five received Bachelor's degrees and two Master's degrees. The graduating address was delivered by Professor E. E. Snoddy, of Transylvania University, Ky. His twenty-three years at Hiram as student and teacher had so endeared him to Hiram students and citizens that he received a great ovation. His address on "The College and the World Call" was a masterful plea for the broadening and enrichment of the college studies and life, not for the college's sake but for the world's sake.

Commencement at Transylvania

Transylvania and the College of the Bible celebrated their annual commencement, June 10. Beginning with the sermon by Rev. J. N. Jessup, of Hopkinsville, and concluding with the formal opening of Ewing Hall, commencement week was the most interesting and successful held within the recent past, if not within the entire history of these institutions.

A union service, attended by the eight Christian churches of the city, was conducted on Sunday evening, June 6, at the auditorium. After a musical program by the Hamilton and Transylvania chorus, Mr. Jessup delivered a scholarly and finished commencement sermon on "The Gospel of Poetry."

The programs rendered Monday and Tuesday evenings were of a high order, consisting of plays and recitals. On Wednesday afternoon, class day exercises were given, the attendance being large and the program unusually good.

Hamilton College commencement came on Wednesday evening, the audience filling the Ben Ali theater. Hamilton, the Junior College of Transylvania, confers no degrees, but certificates were awarded on this occasion to nineteen young women, many of whom will now enter Transylvania College and complete the A. B. course. It is safe to say that in point of attendance, quality of work done, and good spirit on the part of all connected with Hamilton, the present session may be set down as without a superior. President McDiarmid has won the high esteem and confidence of all, and it is believed that under his leadership the institution will enjoy unprecedented prosperity.

The commencement of Transylvania and the College of the Bible, on the 10th, begun with an academic procession from the gymnasium to Morrison chapel, lead by the candidates for graduation, the representatives of the classes from 1868 to 1914 following in order. An audience that crowded the chapel heard the class addresses delivered by Mr. Ivan Kelly and Mr. O. G. Gilbert, their subjects being "The Practical Idealist" and "The Minister's Task."

Rev. F. W. Allen, of Springfield, Ill., delivered both commencement addresses, and probably no better messages have been heard in Lexington. "The Contagion of the Golden Rule" was particularly helpful, being an application of the high principles of the gospel to the present social order.

President Crossfield conferred the A. B. degree on sixteen candidates and the M. A. degree on two candidates, and presented certificates of graduation to eleven ministerial students in the English course, and to two students in the Classical course. The Classical graduates had previously made their A. B. degree, and the graduates in the English course had done four years of college work. Announcement was made that beginning with next session students who formerly had pursued the English course would be offered a new course of practically the same length, but superior in the grouping of subjects studied, leading to the degree of Bachelor of Practical Theology.

The home-coming feature of commencement week was full of significance. More than one hundred and fifty alumni returned for the occasion, representing many states, and most of the classes from 1868 to the present time. One hundred and fifty-two sat down to the alumni dinner which was served in the William Sale Commons of Ewing Hall. Dr. R. Julian Estill, president of the Association, had arranged a program of toasts that were responded to in the happiest vein, which with the songs, cheers, and the spontaneous humor rendered the occasion the high water mark of college enthusiasm.

Ewing Hall, accommodating one hundred and twenty-nine men, was formally opened immediately after the commencement exercises, and was inspected by the visitors, after which the donors to the building were guests at a luncheon served by the college.

President Crossfield announced that the attendance in Transylvania was larger than it had been in years, and that the session, by and large, was most satisfactory.

CHARLES CLAYTON MORRISON, EDITOR HERBERT L. WILLETT, CONTRIBUTING EDITOR

"Our Plea"

MINISTERS in representative churches of Disciples have gotten over preaching union through bitterness and strife. They share in that increasing spirit of group courtesy which is dominating all inter-church relationships today. The consciousness of their Ishmaelitism is fast fading out.

But with the passing of the belligerent type of preaching it is becoming plain that we have failed to develop a positive appeal for unity. The enormous success attending our evangelistic propaganda has given us strong churches comparable to those of the denominations round about us. But this kind of success may, conceivably, involve our failure in the more important task of preaching Christian unity.

In the consciousness of our independent strength, and with the displacement of our erstwhile polemical spirit by the new feeling of fraternal courtesy toward other Christians, our essential mission is in danger of being lost.

Our numbers, our wealth and our urbanity are likely to betray us into acquiescence with the sectarian order because of the comfortable and fruitful circumstances in which our own "denomination" finds itself.

Nothing but the recovery of the original plea for unity can save the Disciples themselves to their historic mission and make them a factor in the accomplishment of that mission.

We say "plea." The pleading note dropped out of our preaching in the polemical period. The belligerent note was dominant. The plaintive call of Thomas Campbell in the Declaration and Address was smothered in our era of debates over the Holy Spirit, baptism and Church order. We spoke much of our "plea," but what we meant was our argument.

The earlier plea for the immediate practice of unity despite diversity of creed, had taken on the form of an argument for a particular basis of unity without which no unity was deemed possible. The effect of this was to eclipse the great ideal which first called the Disciples into being. The wooing tenderness with which Thomas Campbell had given the "plea" its initial and classic statement gave place to a harsh legalism or an unimaginative literalism entirely foreign to the great founder's temper.

No paradox exists in modern history more striking than that which overtook the Disciples. That Thomas Campbell's attempt to get away from the jangling and jarring of religious controversy and to establish the unity and peace of the Church should have eventuated in three quarter's of a century of bitter strife is little else than a trick in historical evolution.

That the originally tentative basis of fellowship and union should have crystallized into a hard and fast creed, unwritten but none the less definite and exclusive, is an unmistakable defeat of the deeper purposes of the author of the Declaration and Address.

The great need of the Christian union ideal is that some prophetic people shall plead for it. The churches are not kept apart because they cannot find a basis of union. They are kept apart because they do not seriously take to heart the duty of union or see the advantage to the kingdom of God of a united Church.

It is an unfruitful exercise to debate the ultimate basis of union. No man can dream what that basis will be. All bodies will contribute their wisdom and Christian experience to the making of it. When it is finally determined it will probably be an elastic, progressive, tentative basis, subject to still further change, not fixed, static and mechanical.

A communion renders itself ridiculous and pathetic if it hugs to itself the conceit that its understanding of the Bible will be the ultimate basis of union. For it is inevitable that the coming together of the people of God from many denominations will in itself greatly modify and enrich each communion's understanding of the Bible.

And this means a new point of view, a rearrangement of values, a discovery of new truth, an exaltation of hitherto neglected truth and the passing of much that has been held for truth. No man can forecast to what point of view the holy spirit of unity will lead the people of God when they come to look into one another's eyes as full brothers in the one faith. It is premature, therefore, and idle to debate now the final basis of union.

The extent of the responsibility of the Disciples of Christ is to see to it that they are practicing Christian unity here and now, in their actual relations with Christian people. The burden of finding the ultimate basis for a united church has not been laid upon the Disciples.

As a people we have wasted too much time arguing our basis of unity. It is a simpler task that is committed to us. We Disciples of Christ who first discovered our Lord praying for a united Church—have we preached unity as he prayed for it, as if we had prayed with him for it?

Have the denominations around us caught the plaintive note in our speech? With which have we impressed them most—our intense desire for unity or our intense desire for the acceptance of our basis of unity?

The words "Our Plea" are almost a trade-mark of the Disciples of Christ. But do we possess the vocabulary of a plea? Has not the task of persuading the divided Church to turn from its schisms been left to adventitious causes, such as the economic, the missionary, the social, the spirit of the age and such like, instead of being prophetically advocated with tears and prayers by a people who had knelt with their Lord in prayer for it?

Preachers of the Disciples! If the belligerent note in your preaching has been silenced give the plaintive note its place! Urge the plea—not a platform, nor a basis, but a plea! Woo the children of God back home; leave to the Father the making of the house to hold us all!

A Spirit in Prison

What Life's Confinements Do for the Soul

BY L. O. BRICKER

THE prison experiences of John the Baptist and Paul are symbols of human life. Most of us are prisoners of one kind or another. Our liberty is restricted, we are not free to go where we would or do as we wish. We meet with restraining limitations on every hand. Our lifework is fettered and narrowed by restricting circumstances. Our soaring ambitions beat their wings against hard conditions, opposing elements, impassable barriers. Our life is not what we would wish it to be. We know very well what we want but we cannot reach it, and we know why we cannot. There are prison walls around us.

In one direction the wall may be poverty; in another the wall may be ill health; in another insufficient education and poor equipment; in the other direction the wall is builded of nameless handicaps, obstacles, hindrances. Time and again we have tried to scale these walls, only to find that there are chains to our feet, duties, obligations, family ties, necessities, responsibilities, that hold us down to where we are. We have meditated many a dash for freedom, but on second thought found that we could not gain freedom except at the cost of dishonor and the loss of self-respect.

So here we are still, in the same old place, behind the same old walls—prisoners, narrowed, restricted, limited, confined, conditioned, constrained.

HUMAN LIFE IS IN FETTERS.

This is life as we all know it. We talk about freedom and liberty, but we know that we are not free and that beyond certain well-known barriers, there is no liberty. It seems to be the fixed and unalterable condition that human life on earth shall be fettered and fretted and bound, cribbed, cabined and confined. I do not now say whether this is fortunate or unfortunate, good or bad—I am only saying that this is life as we know it. The question of the moment is how shall we take it? What spirit shall live in us behind the walls?

For answer let us look upon John and Paul in prison and learn a lesson in contrasts. When John the Baptist was arrested in the midst of his great career, and thrown into prison, he took it hardly; it was an unmixed calamity; it was the end of everything for him. He had no power to see through those prison walls and no philosophy to sustain and comfort him behind them, and no outlook beyond them. That was the best his religion could do for him. His body being in prison, his spirit was in prison also. He was all there, and he was all n. The days were days of brooding misery; the nights were nights of hopeless gloom.

Despair settled down over his soul. He suffered a complete spiritual collapse. He utterly lost his faith. Though he had been the forerunner and herald of Jesus, in an ecstasy of faith, crying, "Behold the Lamb of God, who taketh away the sin of the world," prison walls had killed all that. He had believed that he was announcing the Messiah, the glorious One, foretold by the prophets, waited for and prayed for by the saints of Israel, the One who would baptize men with the Holy Spirit, and restore the throne of David, and bring in the kingdom of God. But experience with prison walls had dashed his faith to the ground and his hope was dead within him.

> "Now when John heard, in prison, the works of Christ, he sent two of his disciples to say unto him: Art thou he that should come, or do we look for another?"
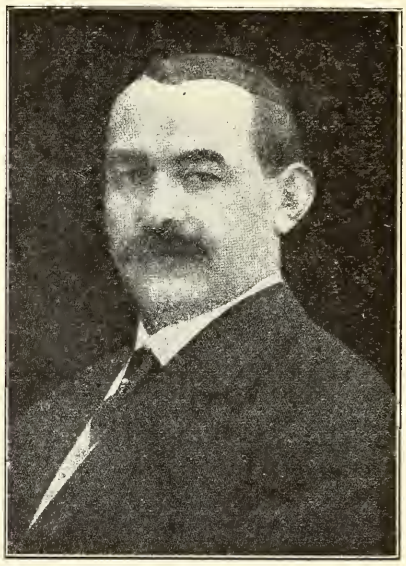
> "For this cause, I Paul, the prisoner of the Lord, rejoice now in my sufferings for you and fill up that which is behind of the sufferings of Christ."



Rev. L. O. Bricker, Pastor, First Church, Atlanta, Ga.

WHAT PRISON DID FOR THE BAPTIST.

Having heard in prison the wonderful works of Christ, and wondering if there might possibly be anything in these reports to build hope and faith on again, he sent two of his disciples to ask Jesus plainly, "Art thou he that should come, or do we look for another?" The old theologians used to say in defense of John that John did this merely to convince his disciples that Jesus was the Messiah. But this would make John a practicer of deception for the sake of the orthodoxy. The plain fact is that John had lost his faith. Prison was too much for him. There was nothing in his religion to help a man in such a place. Body, mind, soul and spirit, John was in prison and he could not see out of it, or through it, or beyond it.

But, when Paul was thrown into prison, we behold a totally different attitude of spirit and mind and disposition: and herein we see the difference that Christianity makes in men's lives. All of Paul's fourteen epistles were written in prison, and remembering this fact, and reading them in the light of this fact, they become the most luminous and encouragingly beautiful things in this world. In all these epistles there is no word of doubt, no single note of pessimism, gloom or dispair. They are all great trumpet blasts of optimism, singing the music of untroubled, triumphant faith. He speaks of himself as the "prisoner of the Lord," calls himself an "ambassador in bonds."

He tells his friends that all hard things that have happened to him have fallen out for the furtherance of the gospel. In the midst of his tribulations he rejoices and thanks God that there are things left behind of the sufferings of Christ which he is permitted to fulfil in his own body. He writes to the Corinthians: "We are troubled on every side yet not distressed. We are perplexed, but not in despair; persecuted but not forsaken; cast down but not destroyed; our light afflictions are working in us an exceeding and eternal weight of glory; though the outward man is perishing the inward man is being renewed day by day."

PAUL COULD NOT SEE PRISON WALLS.

Paul seems never to have seen the prison walls. He says: "We look not at the things which are seen, but the things which are not seen, for the things which are seen are temporal, but the things which are not seen are eternal." He never refers to his dungeon, nor speaks of himself being in prison. He writes to his friends that while he is absent from them in the body, he is present with them in the spirit. In other words, it made no great difference to Paul where his body was, his spirit was never in prison; never could the soul of him be confined in a dungeon. Nothing that happened could interrupt his spiritual relationship.

This is his great cry of faith: "Who shall separate us from the love of Christ? Shall tribulation, or anguish, or persecution, or famine, or nakedness, or peril, or sword? Nay, in all these things we are more than conquerors through Him that loved us. For I am persuaded, that neither death, nor life, nor angels, nor principalities, nor things present, nor things to come, nor powers, nor height, nor depth, nor any other creature, shall be able to separate us from the love of God, which is in Christ Jesus our Lord." He is convinced that "all things work together for good of them that love God."

SINGING IN PRISON.

While Paul would never write anything about the details of his prison experiences, in the Acts Luke gives one luminous narrative to show how little prisons could do to Paul. It was at Philippi. Paul and Silas were arrested and cruelly beaten and scourged and cast into a dungeon and had their feet and hands made fast in the stocks. Cold, supperless, suffering, there they sit together. There seemed to be nothing that they could do, and a little pessimism and complaint might well have been pardoned in them. But we read that at midnight Paul and Silas prayed and sang praises unto God, and what was the result? The prisoners heard and the jailer heard and God heard, and when the jail rocked, the town council heard, and the whole world has heard the song of the triumphant soul of the man whose spirit could not and would not be daunted by any restrictions that were put upon his body.

Why this tremendous difference between John and Paul? Why could prison break the one and do nothing with the other? It was not a matter of different temperament, or race, it was a difference in religion. Paul was a Christian and John was a Jew. Paul was in full possession of the glorious gospel of the Son of God and John was not. Paul was in the kingdom and John was not. John was a great man, of kingly presence, and prophetic mien. He had a royal soul and a princely heart. He was a great, strong, majestic, masterful man—the very highest type of a man that the Jewish race and religion could produce.

WHERE JOHN THE BAPTIST FAILED.

Jesus, himself, gloried in John's magnificent manhood, and said, "that of all those that were born of women, none was greater than John. Nevertheless, he that is least in the kingdom of heaven is greater than John." Greater, why? Because the least in the kingdom of heaven have received the full revelation of God in Christ Jesus, and have entered into the glorious liberty of the sons of God and have attained unto that glorious freedom of the spirit that cannot be shut up behind prison walls; that is able to see over, through and beyond all the restricting limitations of human life. Wherever John's body was, there he was, mind and soul and spirit. If outward things were ill, with him, inward things were ill also. All things with John depended upon his body, where it was and the state it was in. That was the best his religion could do for him.

But, with the Christian in the kingdom of God, all things depend upon the spirit in him, which is the spirit of Christ. The Christian may be sick and bed-ridden, but the soul need not be sick nor bound; it may be kept in perfect health and rejoice in the fullest freedom and liberty. How full is the history of Christianity of this fact! Time would fail me should I try to tell of the great souls and fine free spirits that have dwelt within pain-racked, tortured bodies, and of the marvelous things wrought by them for the blessing of mankind.

THE RICHES OF THE CHRISTIAN.

The Christian may be poor in this world's goods. He may be shut up behind a wall of restricted income and pinching poverty, but his soul need not be poor. He can be rich within. All the wealth of his Father is his. He may have the riches of love, and peace and faith, and hope and joy; and no matter about his outer condition, nor his bodily state, Jesus says to him as He said to the saints in Smyrna, "I know thy poverty, but thou art rich." The Christian may be limited in educational advantages and hindered by poor equipment, but he need not be ignorant. There is a wisdom from above that is easy to be entreated, a wisdom that is hidden from the wise and prudent and is revealed unto babes; and the children of God may rejoice in a mental and intellectual treasure that is beyond the wisdom of men.

Need I be poor because I have but little money and live in an humble home? Need I be weak and sick of soul because my body fails me? Need I lose heart and hope and courage because I am hindered, restricted, opposed and my way is hard and dark? I suppose that ministers meet with as many discouraging and disheartening experiences as any class of men; and on every hand I find my brother ministers clean out of heart at times on account of their discouraging experiences.

But I have reached the place in my Christian experiences where no human being can discourage me, and where no circumstances can take the heart out of me. Men may do as they will and things may happen as they must, but I remember always that I am the servant of Him, who is never weary, who never fails, nor is discouraged.

If I Were a Preacher

BY WELLINGTON M. LOGAN

IT IS very easy to suggest what you would do if you were in the other man's place. The question is, would you do it?

If I were a preacher I would first make sure I was called to the ministry, then trusting in strength other than my own I would go to it.

I would be happy if I were conscious I was doing His will in the place where He wanted me to be.

I would study the field, become personally acquainted as quickly as possible with every last person in my congregation, for friendship is a large factor in the life of the church.

I would pick out the Key Men and organize and seek to train them for definite lines of service.

I would not attempt to do all the work myself, but would place responsibility on men who are admirably fitted for special lines of work and willing and anxious to tender service, but having placed responsibility I would let it rest upon the men who accepted it, of course assuming the right to suggest and holding these men responsible for results.

I would gradually make a visualized record of every member and his needs and seek to serve each member at his place of greatest need, remembering that Christ came not only to save all men but the whole of every man.

I would keep accurate records.

I would systematize my work and use such methods as have been discovered by expert executives in business to be most effective.

I would try to be natural, avoid cant and holy tone in both dress and voice, and seek to use such language as would be intelligible to the hearers. Some sermons might just as well be preached in Latin.

I would cut out saying brother and be a brother.

I would endeavor to be conscientious and honest with myself and hearers and endeavor to be the truth that I would preach, being tactfully brave enough to risk being misunderstood rather than sacrifice principles, of course, using common sense mixed with patience.

I would speak out from the very depths of my heart.

I would recognize that men are different and would not worry because I couldn't make all men alike.

I would rejoice on the other hand that I could have a congregation where I had men of profound thought as well as men who are deeply stirred by sentiment, but I would also want men of action upon whom I must largely depend for the various activities.

I would be careful to verify facts before making statements, for congregations discount much else that I say unless I am accurate in the statements that I make. This is also true of illustrations used.

I would seek to emphasize the positive rather than the negative.

I would insist that the members of my board act like business men in the conducting of the affairs of the church.

I would seek to intelligently cooperate with every kind of work in the city which would further the interest of the Kingdom in my city.

I would try to have as many points of contact with all the interests of the city as possible, in order that I might become known not for my sake but in order that I might make my influence count in as many ways as possible.

WOULD USE PUBLICITY CHANNELS.

I would make use of the recognized principles of publicity.

I would have office hours at such a time as would make me most accessible to the men and women of my constituency. That would largely depend upon the location of my church, but I am convinced that one hour per week, Sunday afternoon, after it had become known would be of tremendous value and many, I believe, would come to me for advice and counsel at that time.

I would make a special study of the Sunday, midweek and special services of the church. I would not allow myself to believe that the preaching service of the church, though important, was the only factor in the church's life.

I would not forget that the resident forces are the redemptive forces of the community and I would stay on my job long enough to demonstrate that fact.

I would give the Sunday school its proper recognition, appreciating that the age of conversion is sixteen plus, and that 85 per cent or thereabouts of those who come into the church come through the avenue of the Sunday school.

I would pay special attention to the teen age.

I would give proper attention to the organizing of the Adult Department, which has made such phenomenal growth in the last ten years.

When holding funerals I would preach to the living and not to the dead, and be as honest here as at any other time.

Of course I would have regular study hours. I would seek to spend much time with the source of power, for I believe that the average minister would accomplish more if he worked less and prayed more. "As the branch cannot bear fruit of itself, except it abide in the vine, so neither can ye, except ye abide in me." "He that keeps on drinking shall never thirst."

I know of no calling which admits of greater possibilities than that of the ministry as the minister seeks to guide the affairs of that one institution which is best fitted to care for the permanent religious life.

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY

EDITORIAL

THE FOREIGN OFFICE AND THE GENERAL CONVENTION.

WHAT is the reason, we are asked in several communications received since the editorial in last week's Christian Century was read, that officials of the Foreign Missionary Society have not given, and are not now giving, their ardent co-operation to the establishment of the General Convention?

"One would think," says one correspondent, "that men of the type of our Foreign Missionary leaders, would be on the very front seat, helping forward the plans for attaining such ends as the General Convention is intended to attain."

That, we fancy, is the supposition on which most of our readers have gone.

The Foreign Society itself has heartily committed itself and its servants to the General Convention by a succession of favorable votes on the matter. There is no disposition on the part of the Foreign Society to do otherwise than take its place in the system of missionary and benevolent activities of which the General Convention is the common denominator.

It is certain officials of the Society, not the Society itself, that have given grudging support to the Convention, and have at times made its work difficult.

The question which our correspondents are putting to The Christian Century was passed on in a casual conversation to the secretary of one of our other national societies, who replied in substance as follows:

> The work of the Foreign Society has, by virtue of its pre-eminent management, attained a degree of success out of proportion to the success of the other societies and out of proportion to the education of our churches in missions. The principle upon which the General Convention is organized and the end which it is intended to attain is the coördination and unification of all these national societies under the direct control of the churches. Naturally the managers of the Foreign Society feel that their freedom of action will be somewhat curtailed by the new order, and the attempt to level up the offerings for the other interests will, they fear, result in at least temporarily leveling down the offerings for foreign missions.

Until some better explanation is given of the attitude of the Foreign office we give this as a probably true interpretation. We do so, not in any spirit of criticism, but in the belief that before the General Convention can get under way as a substantial and significant enterprise of the churches, instead of a mere toy-like accessory of our annual gatherings, the attitude of the Foreign office will have to be radically changed.

No one believes that the Foreign office is heedful for a moment of the perennial hue and cry, raised by the Christian Standard against the General Convention. On the contrary there is, no doubt, no little embarrassment in the Foreign office when the "Standard" suggests editorially that it is now sharing the same bed with the officials of the Foreign Society.

The trouble is not that these officials are acting in fear of the "Standard," or of its influence upon the receipts of the Society—a fear which recent history has proved to be quite unnecessary—but that they are, in good conscience, unwilling to face the possible temporary consequences following upon the introduction of the new order.

If this is true, then the Foreign Society itself must take the matter up at this point and deal with it.

It is not right that so grave a responsibility should rest upon the shoulders of two or three officials, or even of the executive committee.

The Foreign Society in session at Los Angeles, this month, should let its officers unmistakably know that it entrusts itself and the cause of foreign missions implicitly to the churches through the General Convention which the churches have established.

We believe the long-run benefits accruing to the work of foreign missions from the direct relation of the Foreign Society to the churches would far outweigh any momentary slackening in support, due to making the adjustment to the new order.

ADVERTISING AND RELIGION.

ADVERTISING men, hustling laymen all of them, filled many scores of pulpits in Chicago churches on the Sunday of their convention in this city.

There are many aspects of this fact that have significance. It is significant, first of all, that they should want to use the pulpit as a natural and congenial place from which to speak their message. It indicates the respect in which the church is held by men who, more than any other class of their fellows, are in a position to mould public opinion on the side of business standards and ideals. It is a direct and unescapable reply to those who dismally mourn the decay of the Church's influence.

It also suggests the quite unsuspected relation between advertising and religion. One speaker on that Sunday pointed out that the first newspaper advertisement that ever appeared, the aboriginal ancestor of all the countless advertisements now appearing, was a religious advertisement printed in 1647, in "Every Daie Journall in Parliament and other Moderate Intelligence." It ran thus:

> A book applauded by the Clergy of England called the Divine Right of Church Government, collected by Sundry Eminent Ministers in the Citie of London: Corrected and Augmented in many places, with a briefe Reply to certain Queries against the ministry of England: Is printed and published for Joseph Hunscot and George Calvert, and are to be sold at the Stationer's Hall, and at the Golden Fleece in the Old Change.

Next to this ancient publicity notice is one found in the Mercurius Elencticus, dated October 4, 1648:

> The reader is desired to peruse a Sermon, Entitled A Looking Glass for Levellers, Preached at St. Peter's, Paules Wharf, on Sunday, September 24, 1648, by Paul Knell, Mr. of Arts. Another Tract called a Reflex upon our Reformers, with a prayer for the Parliament.

Deeper, probably, than this historical accident connecting religion and advertising is the fact that the substance and essential principle of both is faith. Like religion, advertising is creative; its genius is to bring into being that which is not, to bring to public attention an article or a piece of goods that the public wants and doesn't know it wants, indeed to actually create the demand for that article or piece of goods.

This, after all, is the psychology of religion. Every Christian preacher and teacher, and indeed every Christian, is a publisher, an advertiser, of the goods of the gospel. His business is to get people to want his goods, the goods that he first received from Christ.

The affinity is thus very close between religion and advertising.

And when to such theoretical considerations is added the concrete human fact that many of the leaders of the ten thousand vigorous advertising men who assembled in Chicago are themselves vigorous and consecrated leaders in the Church, it is self-evidently appropriate that their voices should be heard in the pulpits of any city where they may assemble.

To Chicago they spoke a strong and sound message of right-dealing and truth-telling in business, and that kind of message belongs in the Christian pulpit, whether it be spoken by one who carries an ordination parchment in his frock coat or by one who wears the clothes of business and speaks with no authority save the inherent weight of his earnest words.

UNION IN OVER-CHURCHED FIELDS.

A BRAVE, fine word it is that Dr. Peter Ainslie speaks in his opening editorial in the Christian Union Quarterly for July. He tells of two churches, one of Disciples, the other Congregational, in a small town in the state of Washington. The first had its building and a debt, with its minister's salary supplemented by five hundred dollars from his home missionary board; the second had a lot and funds sufficient to start building, with its minister's salary supplemented by five hundred dollars from his home missionary board.

The two congregations united.

The funds of the Congregationalists were sufficient to pay off the debt on the church of the Disciples. Both preachers resigned. One was called to the ministry of the united church without any further aid from either home missionary board, and the other was called to a self-supporting church with an increased salary. This thing Dr. Ainslie heartily and fearlessly approves. He says:

> Not only can this be done in a thousand towns in America, but it ought to be done without delay in order both to wipe out the wrong of the past and to reach the unsaved of the community. To accomplish it, sectarianism would get some hard knocks, almost death blows, for any step towards union is hurtful to sectarianism, but Christianity will be advanced and that is our interest in these days.

"The differences," continues Dr. Ainslie, "of nine-tenths of the Protestant communions are fictitious, not being known by the members very much beyond the ministers. Is it profitable to keep alive their useless and sinful barriers?

No sane mind uncorrupted by the technical fictions of theology regards it as profitable to keep up the useless divisions.

HELPING THE PASTOR ON HIS FEET.

A HEARTENING illustration of a church measuring up to an extraordinarily trying situation is afforded by the Wabash Avenue congregation in Kansas City. Its pastor, Rev. L. J. Marshall, had been ill for over a year, able to do but a part of his work during most of the season, and finally had to submit, last spring, to an operation for appendicitis.

Mr. Marshall is the kind of pastor who goes forward confidently and gets things done, consequently his people lean on his captaincy, consequently when his hand is not at the helm the ship doesn't do so well. It is not surprising, therefore, that when he was taken to the hospital for operation, after a year's ups and downs, both he and his congregation were not a little concerned over a considerable deficit that had accrued in the church finances.

But the church officers met and determined that it was up to them to relieve their pastor's mind of that deficit. They saw that it would help to get him on his feet again to know that the financial knot at the church was nicely untangled.

To their reinforcement came Mr. J. W. Perry, President of the National Bank of Commerce, and a Christian man with a heart like his Master. Mr. Perry is a member of another congregation, but he went to Mr. Marshall before his operation and spoke with authority, somewhat like this:

"Now see here, we insist that you put away this anxiety about your church affairs. Your people are going to get along, they are going to raise that money, and I am going to help them do it."

So the next Sunday, Mr. Perry attended Wabash Avenue Church, and found them about to take pledges on their deficit. He made a talk himself, led off in the pledging, and that day they raised enough money to pay the pastor's back salary and wipe the slate absolutely clean of all current obligations.

It put the pastor on his feet. It helped as much as the doctors or the nurses. It bound the church to the heart of the pastor with chains of loyalty. Mr. Marshall is at last well and taking the helm for a great voyage in the coming year.

GEORGIA AND HER GOVERNOR.

RETIRING GOVERNOR SLATON, of Georgia, deserves to be written down as one of the nation's heroes. On behalf of a fellowman's life he took his own life in his hands, laying aside the armour of his office to meet the passion and hate of the frenzied populace of his state with the naked breast of private citizenship.

The outside world is baffled in attempting to explain the situation that has arisen in the state of Georgia. That anti-Jewish feeling could have been worked up in any American community to the insane degree it has reached in Georgia would have been set down as unthinkable until the day the governor signed the commutation of Leo Frank's death sentence.

The violent uprising of the people against that act of Gov. Slaton made Georgia seem more like a Russian province than an American state.

And yet all the governor did was to order the execution of Frank to be temporarily held in abeyance until further light could be shed upon his relation to the crime of killing Mary Phagan. Leo Frank is still in confinement and will continue so until proved innocent of the crime.

One of the gravest considerations affecting the judgment of the unbiased outside world is the fact that a large number of the citizens of Georgia assume so irrational an attitude toward the governor's mild clemency.

As outsiders we can hardly imagine a simple, rational conviction as to the guiltiness of the prisoner leading a people into such frenzy, not, at any rate, when the channels of legal procedure are still open for his ultimate extreme punishment should he be proved guilty.

Georgia's state of mind does not answer to the description of rational indignation over outraged justice. It answers more nearly to the description of a violent hysteria due to defeated and helpless race prejudice.

That at any rate is the way her neighbors are going to interpret her actions until facts prove otherwise.

The Larger Christian World

A DEPARTMENT OF INTERDENOMINATIONAL ACQUAINTANCE

Old Church Building to Disappear.

The "Christian denomination" has had a congregation in Boston, organized in 1804, which has worshiped in the same building for fifty years. With all the changes of the city, the congregation has refused to move into the more fashionable districts of the city. Rev. Edward Edmunds was pastor of this church for over fifty years. He was a noted temperance exponent and instituted the five-cent savings bank for children in Boston. The old building was sold the other day for a large sum and the congregation has recently disbanded. This epitomizes the history of many a city church.

War Interferes with Scholarship.

Even the scholars of Europe have left their appointed tasks for the more stirring duties of war. At the Vatican in Rome are secret archives containing records that are available to privileged scholars. Usually there are a hundred German scholars alone working there. Now there are only three. There remain three Austrians, one Finn, and none of any other nation.

Cleveland Starts Evangelistic Movement.

After failing to extend an invitation to Billy Sunday to hold revival services in Cleveland, the ministers of that city have adopted a plan to do their own evangelistic work. Their slogan is "Every pastor his own evangelist; every church a recruiting station; and every service a call for decision."

Minister Becomes a Red Cross Leader.

One of the ministers at Washington, D. C., has left his pulpit to assume the duties of a leader in the Red Cross work, in Europe. He is Rev. John Van Schaik, Jr., D. D., pastor of the Church of Our Father, Universalist. He offered his resignation to the church, but they refused to accept it, and have arranged to carry on the work of the church while he is away at the front. Clergymen of the city are volunteering to supply his pulpit, even the Jewish rabbi near by offering his services.

Secretary of Navy Preaches.

Josephus Daniels, Secretary of the Navy, is also a Methodist. He was recently invited to speak before a Methodist conference with two hundred preachers present. He proceeded to preach a sermon to the sermon-makers on some of the failures in their work. He said in part: "I regret that the Methodists haven't the vision to see that they must mobilize. They have not been able to take the ramparts of sin because of their divisions. Now when I see in Seattle Southern Methodists building a church where they have no business to build, and when I see in Atlanta your church building where you have no business to build, I say it is wrong. Methodists should mobilize. What we need is unity."

The Finances of Mormonism.

The advantages of centralized authority, and of a well developed financial system, are well illustrated in the achievements of Mormonism. The hierarchy has just issued a report which accounts for nearly two billion dollars received in tithes the past year. With this money the various church enterprises were in considerable measure financed. The church also controls the beet sugar trust, the salt trust, and other community enterprises, and is said to have a controlling interest in one of the great transcontinental lines of railway. By means of the golden stream that flows in from this system, a theology that would seem to be impossible to the modern mind, and a social system that is abhorrent, are both made to go forward and to win converts.

Missionary Gets Into Mexico City.

The unsettled conditions in Mexico have driven most of the missionaries out of that land of revolution. Archdeacon Mellen, an Episcopal missionary who has been stationed at Mexico City, came to the United States last summer. He was unable to return and tarried at Vera Cruz for four weeks. Finally he took an Irish friend and set out across the country "hobo" style, disguised so he would not be recognized. After many adventures, he finally got through the lines and arrived safely at Mexico City.

Episcopalian Girls Do Work at San Francisco.

The Girls' Friendly Society of the Episcopal Church is an organization of young women whose aim is "to promote purity of life, dutifulness to parents, faithfulness in work, and thrift." The members of this society have established a lodge at San Francisco to take care of their members who may visit the exposition. The Bishop of California and wife gave a tea there on May 6 and opened the work for the season.

Church Severs Relation With Saloon.

Trinity Church of New York, which has fifteen million dollars' worth of property in that city, and which in days gone by rented property for saloon purposes, has been able to cancel the last lease and go out of any business relation with the liquor business forever. It is no longer possible for institutions that value their reputation to have any further unholy alliance with a traffic which has been doomed by the conscience of the world.

Christian Endeavorers to Meet in Celebrated Hall.

The Christian Endeavor hosts who are coming to Chicago for the world convention beginning July 7 will meet in the hall where several presidents have been nominated. The Republican national convention is usually held in the Coliseum, and here McKinley, Roosevelt and Taft were nominated. Perhaps a year hence the building may be the scene of another great political gathering.

Bible Society Has Greatest Year.

The American Bible Society has just closed the ninety-ninth year of its service. The last year has been its greatest, for the war has meant very greatly increased demands upon its resources to meet the need. The total circulation of Bibles last year through this society was 6,370,000 volumes. About two-thirds of these books were printed abroad and the remainder on the presses of the society in New York. One means of stimulating the circulation of Bibles among the soldiers has been the distribution of the books by means of the nickels given by the Sunday school pupils.

Death of Noted Theological Leader.

The Very Rev. William Mansfield Groton died in Philadelphia recently of heart failure. He was able to attend his classes in the Philadelphia Dvinity School, where he was Dean, until within two days of his death. He served his institution as teacher of systematic theology before he became Dean. His ripe scholarship has made itself felt in several fields and two of his books came into considerable attention. They were "The Christian Eucharist and Pagan Cults" and "The Mysteries of Religion." The latter became incorporated in Hasting's Dictionary of the Apostolic Age. The institution under his administration was brought into close affiliation with the University of Pennsylvania, with which it exchanged courses.

Preacher-Mayor Tells His Woes.

A United Brethren preacher of Rittman, O., the Rev. H. A. Schaefer, was elected mayor. The advances made to him by the sporting element for privileges of evasions of law were sometimes ludicrous. The baseball element promised to bring all the "fans" into his Sunday school Sunday morning if they might have the privilege of playing in the afternoon of the Lord's day. He declares that liquor dealers are the most persistent and able of all the violators of law. The problem of law enforcement he found difficult because good people refused to give evidence that would convict. The mayor found life burdensome while he tried to live with the sports and the pious busybodies in a way to uphold the majesty of the law.

Theological Training for the Slavs.

The great Slavic population of America is receiving attention by the Protestant divinity schools of the country. The Nast Theological Seminary, the religious department of Baldwin-Wallace College at Berea, O. (Methodist), opened a Slavic department in 1913. There were eighteen students this year, eleven of them preparing for the ministry.

Plans Going Forward for Great Missionary Movement.

The Laymen's Missionary Movement is going forward with plans for the great nation-wide demonstration which will be made next winter. Eighty cities will be centers which will be reached by speakers of national reputation. Missions will be interpreted in the largest way, and an effort will be made to introduce methods which will strengthen the local churches. The local churches will be encouraged to inaugurate in their own communities social service activities that will adequately express the ideals of the Christian religion.

New Missionaries Will Go Out.

The conditions affecting all missionary work have not prevented the American Board of the Congregational Church from sending out sixty-six new missionaries this spring. A conference was held in Boston recently which was attended by over forty of these new apostles in the Christian faith.

Preacher Author Goes to War.

The author of "Black Rock" and "Sky Pilot" is going to the war. He has been in times of peace chaplain to a Highland regiment of Canada and will not shirk his duty now that his regiment is called into action. Dr. Charles W. Gordon, as his church people know him, has been the leading interpreter of life in the Northwest.

Here and There

The Policy of Silence.

Does it pay? We think not. It is advocated because we are dealing with a frenzy, a state of mind which does not propose to be changed, or to allow itself to be induced to think of change; or an interest of some sort that would come to an end if any changes were adopted; or a profitable concern that is more concerned with spoils than with truth. Those who advocate the above policy say it is better to suffer in silence than to be further maligned, better to preserve one's integrity by paying no attention to assault, than to pay the sure penalty exacted of all who lie down with the dogs.

The difficulty with the theory is that the party of frenzy is emboldened in its brazen malevolence, knowing that it may say anything without fear of rebuke or exposure, and go to unheard of extremes in its reckless disregard of truth or fact, thriving upon the burglar's satisfaction of walking off with the "swag." In process of time the silence is construed as a confession of guilt, and the accuser salves his conscience with the reflection that, after all, he was moderate in his assertions when he might have been severe. The stolen goods of manly character and unsullied reputation become in his sight the rewards of virtue, the fruits of that righteousness which only those can enjoy who do their duty despite the remonstrance of friends and the maledictions of foes. He poses as a hero, as a martyr, lacking only the penal fires to make his canonization complete. A crowd of dependents crawl within his shadow to praise his virtues in the hope of preferment. And when the time comes for him to lay aside his bludgeon he challenges the world to prove that he ever said an uncharitable word, except in the interest of the faith, or that he ever struck an undeserved blow. Charity, so he would have us believe, has ever been the guiding star in his life.

Silence would be all right under these conditions if we were always dealing with intelligent people. But there is still a large class in every community who believe that when charges are made they are true unless refuted, that the courageous man is he who speaks out, not he who holds his peace; that the cause that does not defend itself must have no defense; that silence denotes the courage of the coward, not of the brave. If men could distinguish between bravery and bullying, between zeal and fanaticism, between fidelity and pugnacity, between sectarianism and apostolic simplicity, a good case could be made out for silence in the face of malevolence. But the masses do not distinguish; they take everything at its apparent value. They believe that honest men do not tell lies, and in that they are right; it is only men who pretend to be honest who will lie to carry a point now and then. The masses are never concerned to go back of what seems to be; it is the outward that appeals to them. And it is the masses with which most of us have to do.

The party of frenzy gains by the policy of silence in making the impression that those whom it maligns have been beaten to a standstill.

It is really a question whether a man is not in duty bound to resent an injustice as truly as he is bound not to inflict one.

But when we think of the policy of aggression, we are bound to ask, If this is the way to serve the cause of truth and justice, how should one proceed to serve the cause of falsehood and injustice? Silence may have its faults, but the day of doom will have a terrible reckoning for those who took advantage of it for the basest designs.

Unexpected Eloquence

Not long since I attended a meeting of our colored brethren and enjoyed as fine an hour's natural eloquence as I ever heard. The preacher was educated, and had not lost the fire of youth. He asked for better treatment of his race; and in fervent appeals, climaxes, and declamation, he made us "white brethren" sit up and take notice. He had the tricks of the elocutionist which, added to his natural fire, made him a most effective speaker. Occasionally, one hears a negro orator who makes a profound impression on his audience, but, for the most part, the negro preacher is so poorly prepared, and so meanly appreciated, and so wretchedly supported that the wonder is that any man among them enters the ministry. The soil on which orators are grown in the Dark Continent of America is exceedingly sterile.

Of Course You Have Noticed.

That every fanatic does all that nature intended him to do when he rants.

That some men are determined to rule or ruin under the pretext of saving the brotherhood.

That a few men think they are saving the world when they are calling their brethren evil names.

That some who profess to deplore the European war, delight to maintain one at their own door.

ELLIS B. BARNES.

Disciples Table Talk

Dean Willett Opens Summer Quarter as Chaplain.

Professor H. L. Willett, Dean of Disciples' Divinity House, preaching at the University of Chicago last Sunday morning, on the occasion of the first religious service of the new quarter, interpreted common life as a thing inherently religious and bade the student of the university to find religion in his pursuit of knowledge and to regard the university itself as a radically religious institution. Dr. Willett is now acting chaplain of the university, succeeding the late Charles Richmond Henderson, to whom, as also to the late President Harper, he referred as typical religious men who found their religion in the common life of culture and human service. Dr. Willett's sermon was profoundly impressive, commanding a congregation that packed Mandel Hall and overflowed into the churches of the community. He left Sunday night for a two months' engagement on the Chautauqua platform in the East.

Summer School for Sunday School Leaders Successful.

One hundred and seventy-seven Sunday school leaders attended the nine days' session of the Summer School of Methods and Principles at Lexington, Ky., in June. The classes met in Transylvania College buildings. The women attending were entertained in the dormitory of Hamilton College. The faculty included, besides the state and national Sunday school secretaries, Prof. E. F. Farquhar of Kentucky State University and Prof. W. S. Athearn of Drake University.

Tells How He Wrote Famous Song and How Much He Got for It.

Charles M. Fillmore, pastor of the Hillsdale Christian Church in Indianapolis, and composer of the famous song, "Tell Mother I'll Be There," tells how he came to write the song. He said he was trying to organize a church in Peru, Ind., and was writing hymns which sold for $3 each. While waiting for breakfast one morning, he read that the mother of President McKinley was dying and had noticed the Presidents' telegram, "Tell mother I'll be there," Before ten minutes had passed he had composed the chorus and before breakfast was ready he had the entire song completed. Ten million copies of the song have been sold and at the customary royalty of 1 cent a copy the minister should have received $100.000. But $3 is all he ever got for it.

Over Half the Church at Prayer Meeting.

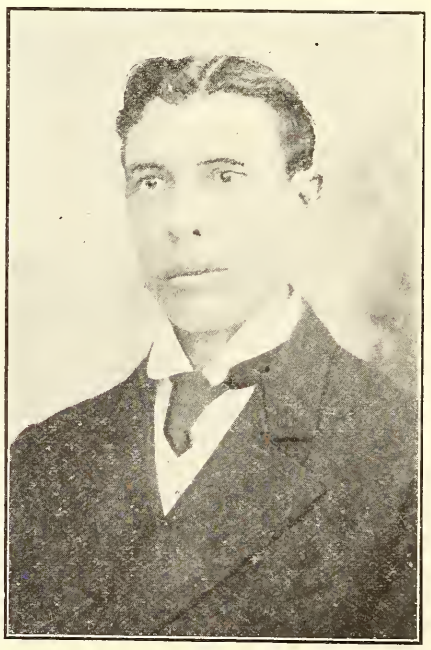
Ernest C. Mobley, pastor at Amarillo, Tex., has introduced a roll call meeting as a monthly feature of the mid-week service on Wednesday evening. Out of 450 members, 250 were present on the occasion of the first roll-call. The pastor believes it possible to enlist the attendance of the entire membership in this way.

Des Moines Wants Next Year's General Convention.

Des Moines churches are making an effort to secure the 1916 General Convention for their city. Dr. Finis Idleman has been appointed "head" and spokesman of the Iowa delegation to Los Angeles. He will present the case for Des Moines. It is likely Des Moines will win, inasmuch as it was practically decided to take last year's convention there, but the invitation had to be withdrawn on account of the convention coming at the time the city was preparing for a Billy Sunday visitation. Des Moines is not so central for our people as Indianapolis, for example, but it is in a location capable of drawing a representative gathering.

Ministers Should Not Advertise Their Failures.

Ministers admit they are failures when they constantly complain from their pulpits of the world's indifference to the church, according to the consensus of opinion of a ministers' conference in connection with the Iowa state convention. The conference was led by C. S. Earley, pastor at Oskaloosa, Ia. "Never preach on the subject, 'Why Do Not Men Go to Church?'" advised one minister in the conference. "It is a frank admission of failure to get men into your church. Why advertise yourself as a failure? You will never see a groceryman put up a sign to the effect that patrons do not come to his store. Be at least business-like in your church advertising.." The discussion of the subject of church attendance, methods of drawing crowds and holding their attention occupied the session. The opinion of the ministers was that the people were eager to hear straight gospel sermons, and not socialistic or philosophic addresses.



Rev. Frank E. Boren, of Berkeley, Cal., who has succeeded in uniting a Congregational and a Disciples Church and has become their pastor.

Building Plans Growing at Broadway, Lexington.

The official board of Broadway Church, Lexington, Ky., met recently to continue the discussion of the proposal to erect a new edifice to occupy the same location as the present house, but with much greater proportions, allowing plenty of room for the increased membership and the various activities of the congregation. However, no definite action was taken. Mark Collis, pastor of the church, said that they would proceed slowly with the work and would not rush into any half-baked plans. At a later meeting committees will be appointed and an architect will be chosen to submit plans.

Mr. Harmon's Nine Years in Lincoln.

The Chairman of the Board of Elders of First Church, Lincoln, Neb., contributes an appreciative article to the local parish paper, on the services rendered to the congregation and the community by H. H. Harmon, the pastor, during his nine years of leadership there. "Nine years ago there was a work to be done in this city which Mr. Harmon assumed, and he has proved himself well fitted to do it. It is now apparent to every close observer of the growth of religious sentiment in this city during the last nine years that no one has contributed more to that growth than our beloved pastor. In what he has accomplished we see the proof of his keen intellect and his insight into the needs of this church and the people of this city and state. He loves the people he has been serving, and they love him. Let every member of this congregation pray daily for our good pastor. He has labored long and faithfully for this congregation. Let us demonstrate to him our appreciation of his services by our own efforts to aid him in the great work he is doing. Whilst he has probably labored more abundantly than any of us, 'it was not he, but the grace of God that was in him.'"

Another Community Church in California.

Frank E. Boren, recently of Berkeley, Cal., is now pastor of a Union Church at Hydesville, Cal., embracing Congregationalists and Disciples. Writing of his new work Mr. Boren says: "The Disciples and Congregationalists here, weary with the hopeless struggle of keeping up a separate work, decided to federate their forces and work together as one body for the common good, inviting those of other communions to work with them in this common fellowship. Having reached this decision, they called in W. C. Crider, who is engaged in a union work at Scotia, and who is greatly beloved here on account of labors here while pastor at Fortuna, to counsel with them. He encouraged them in their enterprise and upon his recommendation I was called to the pastorate." Mr. Boren also consulted with the state officials of the Congregationalists and found that they would still continue their missionary appropriation and give the federated work their approval. The church is called "The Community Church."

Vesper Service for Southerners.

First Church, Oakland, Cal., is undertaking to reach the people from the different sections of the country, now in that city, by holding Vesper Services which call attention to the special locality. For instance, on Sunday afternoon, June 20, a Southerner Vesper Service was held with an attendance of representatives from the Southerners Club and Daughters of the Confederacy. The church was decorated with magnolias, and the Confederate flag was displayed. The old southern melodies were sung by a large chorus and the congregation. The pastor, Vaughan Dabney, spoke on "The Lost Cause." In point of attendance, the number present was just double the ordinary evening congregation, and many people who were members of the Christian church in some of our southern states were brought in contact with this congregation, and are expected to place their membership there soon.

No Cloistered Ministry This.

G. W. Morton, pastor at Beardstown, Ill., identifies himself intimately and responsibly with community affairs. At a mass meeting of business men and citizens, he was appointed chairman of a committee to investigate a factory proposition and raise the funds to take it up if found desirable. He acted as spokesman for the business men, and led the fight in a meeting which, by a vote of two to one, decided to have no more street carnivals. In this fight he was supported by the Catholic priest, whose services he enlisted.

while the opposition was led by a Catholic saloon keeper. The result of the decision will mean a higher order of popular amusements in the town than heretofore. Mr. Morton was also elected secretary of the local Chautauqua association, and made a number of trips to the capital at Springfield, as the representative of the working men to help forward the enactment of laws in which labor was interested.

President Crossfield's Activities.

President R. H. Crossfield, of Transylvania College, Kentucky, dedicated the new $10,000 church building at Barboursville, Ky., on June 13, and the new Sunday school house at Hagerstown, Md., on June 20. On June 25 he preached the Commencement sermon for the Earlington, (Ky.) School of Methods, and gave the Education address at the New York State Convention, at Keuka Park, on June 30. He will dedicate the Bethlehem Church, Nicholas Co., Ky., on July 4.

Ministerial Retreat at Canton, Mo.

Canton, Mo., extends a cordial invitation to all ministers of the Sixth District of Missouri and adjacent territory, to attend the fourth annual Retreat, July 5-7. Madison A. Hart, of Columbia, is president and says that the program is an unusually fine one. The social features will be prominent. The School of Religious Education is now in session at Canton and lasts two weeks. It has a very ambitious teacher-training program, and it is surprising to the six members of the faculty that genuinely scientific instruction can be so well grouped and so well received as this work. It will revolutionize Sunday school teaching. H. B. Robison, dean of the Bible College says it is a genuine teaching of religion.

William Woods College Gets New Gymnasium.

Through the generosity of Dr. W. S. Woods, of Los Angeles, whose name the school bears, William Woods College, Fulton, Mo., is to build, during the summer season, a new $30,000 gymnasium. This building will be complete in every particular. Everything will be of the most modern and approved type. In addition to the apparatus for regular gymnastic classes, the building will be planned for indoor tennis and basket ball games. A large swimming pool will be constructed for aquatic exercises. This, as well as the floor space surrounding the pool, will be lined with white tiling. There will be ample locker accommodations and a number of marble lined shower baths. It will be one of the finest and most complete college gymnasiums in the country. Dr. Woods has named the new structure "The McBride Gymnasium," in honor of his wife, whose maiden name was Albina McBride.

Eureka to Develop in Musical Art.

Eureka College is entering upon a new era in the development of musical culture among her students. During the past year Prof. Elias A. Bredin, of Chicago, has been making a trip once a week to the college town, to give vocal instructions, but he has become so well impressed with the musical possibilities of the community and the college, that he has decided to move his family there and accept the leadership of a School of Music. Mr. Bredin is a well equipped artist, trained under the best American and foreign teachers, and an instructor in music for ten years in the University of Wisconsin, and for five years in Garrett Biblical Institute, of Northwestern University. The field open in one of our colleges to a musical leader of Mr. Bredin's intelligence and talent is unlimited. There is a pathetic need among ministerial students for training in musical knowledge and taste. Our church life will never rise to its true level until our ministers know and love the hymns that are worshipful and teach their congregations to know and to prefer them.

God a Good Vacation Companion.

Counselling his young people to guard their spiritual life while on their vacation, Charles H. Swift, pastor at Centralia, Mo., says: "Don't forget God while taking a vacation. Some seem to think that a vacation necessitates a spiritual rest. God is usually left behind for the home folks to take care of until they return. Bless your heart, you are the one who needs God. Take God with you. Let Him share in your pleasures. Let Him be the silent companion in all your travels. It will add a hundredfold to the happiness of your trip. Place a Testament in your grip and read it. Don't be ashamed of being seen with the world's greatest book. Pray occasionally. You need protection in many instances. Summer resorts and tourist spots reek with divers temptations. Allurements are everywhere. You need to be made strong if you come back as good a person as when you left. Be as conscientious as when at home. Watch and pray, for the devil gets more folks during vacation than at any other period of the year. Make your vacation exceptionally enjoyable and especially unique by maintaining a strong religious feeling and conduct throughout."

With Missourians in Convention

Two addresses stand out in the recollection of those who attended the Missouri state convention at Springfield in June, as above all others impressive and light-giving. One was the address on Christian unity by Dr. Wm. H. Black, President of Missouri Valley College at Marshall. Dr. Black spoke as a Presbyterian in a forth right fashion to Disciples, acknowledging the great need of unity and laying it afresh upon the consciences of his hearers that the Christian world expects the Disciples to do something substantial and constructive on behalf of a united Church. Reaching climax after climax, he would ask, searchingly, "And what are you Disciples of Christ going to do about it?" His hearers went away with burning hearts. One leading pastor declared that he sometimes feared Christian unity would burst upon the world so suddenly that the Disciples would be humiliated by their unpreparedness for it!

Rev. B. A. Abbott, pastor Union Avenue Church, St. Louis, new President of Union State Convention.

The other address was by George A. Campbell of Hannibal, president of the convention. He spoke on "The Message and the Task." He affirmed the vital need of conviction, deep-gripping conviction, if the Church is to do her work. "We cannot go far without passion and abandonment," he said, "and we cannot have these without a controlling conviction. If our innermost belief fails us, all is lost. If unwavering confidence possesses us, all is safe. The Church must ever possess the conviction of a true and God-given message and the challenge of a great task. The great life-creating periods of the Church, the times of epochal accomplishments and supreme spiritual heights, were those great epochs of spiritual discernment when the conviction concerning spiritual verities was the greatest.

"Every day demands its prophetic seers. We can never be worthy successors of those gone before unless we look to our convictions.

"Is the Church hesitating to undertake heroic work? Is the ministry somewhat cooled in its ardor and passion? Are the gifts to the cause of missions secured by labored manipulations? Are they lamentably small? Is the membership of the Church dangerously absorbed in the things of this world? Does a love of pleasure unduly possess the professed followers of Christ? Is there a diminishing of conscientious attendance upon divine worship? Are we failing to have zest for prayer and Bible study? Is the art of meditation being lost? Is secularization of our churches becoming alarmingly great? Is God less real to us than to our fathers?

"If to any considerable degree these might be answered in the affirmative, we must look to the foundations of our faith. Repairs of non-essentials will suffice but little. Improved methods will not count for much. We must restore to ourselves faith, vital, compelling faith in the absolute leadership and redemption of Jesus Christ."

Mr. Campbell declared that the present war in Europe was a second Calvary, and that a new social order was being born in the throes of universal suffering.

"In these days, when the dark clouds of the world's tragedy hang over us, Christ's darkest words, 'My God! my God! Why hast Thou forsaken me?' must be recalled with added sadness, but also with profounder significance. Helplessness seemed to be in the heart of Jesus and despair filled every soul of the little group of his followers as a symbol of that awful event. The light of day ceased to shine. For the time being Calvary meant to the Disciples the bankruptcy of every noble ideal. But Calvary, despite its anger, cruelty and ignominious death, we now see, was God's love breaking through to hearten our weak and fearsome humanity. After Calvary came the resurrection, the ascension, the pentecost, the victorious Church. So will it be after this present Calvary that has upset the world and which is causing to flow the life-blood of millions of fellowmen has passed. God will yet speak—is speaking in his wrath.

"If ever a new epoch in this world had birth, certainly one of the greatest epochs is now in the throes of birth. The war is the breakdown of human reason. The voice of the Church was ignored. The prayer of the Christ was despised. Corsica, not Nazareth, has had sway. And its sway has led to the undoing of civilization. This world cannot go on without Christ. His prophets will now take courage. They will speak more confidently in the name of their king."

The report of the state secretary, R. B. Briney, was a heartening and business-like document. It showed that the seven district organizations were highly efficient and that the district superintendents were drawing the churches of their several sections into a closer unity and inspiring them to greater attainments. The names of these superintendents are as follows: J. S. Mill, J. P.

Rowlison, J. B. Lockhart, C. A. Lowe, J. H. Jones. The entire state is divided into districts over each one of which one of these men presides. The two cities of St. Louis and Kansas City are separate districts in themselves with their own organization and leaders. Frank L. Bowen's work in Kansas City is much praised.

The entire state organization, including salaries of district superintendents, is operated on a budget of less than $12,000 a year. The receipts fell a little short of this amount this year.

Sedalia was chosen as the meeting place for next year, and B. A. Abbott, pastor Union Avenue Church, Kansas City, was elected President of the convention. The executive board was continued as last year, with Graham Frank, president; W. F. Richardson, vice-president; L. J. Marshall, secretary, and R. B. Briney, corresponding secretary. The attendance was large, though not quite up to some previous years.

New York Mission Work Prospering.

Reports of the activities of the four Disciple missions in New York City were made to the Disciples Missionary Union of Greater New York, June 1. During the month of May there were ten additions to the missions by baptism and eleven by letter, making a toal membership in the four organizations of 406. The Sunday school enrollment is 1,044, with an average attendance of 724. The missions raised, for all purposes, during the month, $876.86. The Russian Mission is holding open air meetings and doing a vigorous work. During the month of May union meetings of all of Russian missions in the city were held at the Casino. Dr. Fettler, the exiled head of the Baptist work in Petrograd, was the preacher. It is of interest to note that our mission is by far the strongest Russian work in the entire east. It is thoroughly organized, well advertised and active in its work. The need for a building is becoming serious. They have reached the limit of numbers and efficiency meeting in the rented basement of another church in whose rooms various other missions of foreign peoples meet.

Iowa Convention Under Difficulties

Certain circumstances made the State Convention of Iowa Disciples, held the last week of June, the least satisfactory of their recent annual gatherings. The convention plans were disorganized by a change of location from Colfax to Des Moines, only a week or two before the date set for the meeting. The sessions were broken up by the fact that the Woman's sessions were held in Central Church while the rest of the program was given at one of the great buildings on the Fair grounds, also by the adjournment on Thursday to attend the Commencement exercises at Drake University. And, to cap it all, the building proved to be altogether unfitted for the purpose of the gathering, being both inconvenient and far too large. Several sessions were held and officers elected for next year—Rev. C. H. Morris, Marshalltown, President, and Judge Hubert Utterback, Des Moines, Member of Board of Managers—and the convention adjourned two days ahead of time.

At the Woman's session in Central Church, a unique feature on Wednesday evening, was the re-enactment of the wedding scene at the marriage of Dr. Ada McNeil Gordon and Mr. Gordon, which occurred in Central Church just ten years before. Dr. Gordon has been the living link missionary of Central Church for seventeen years, and is held in intense affection by the entire congregation. Mrs. Barnett, who played the wedding march ten years ago, was again at the organ. Mrs. Hesse, who sang "Oh! Promise Me" ten years ago, sang it again last Wednesday evening. The ushers and flower girls sent greetings and a company of young women marched down the center aisle laden with gifts and money for Mr. and Mrs. Gordon. Their little children were introduced and received an ovation. Both responded in very happy and impressive words. They are on their furlough at this time, and will remain in this country for a year before returning to India.

Prominent speakers at the convention were President F. W. Burnham, of the American Missionary Society and Mr. Emory Ross, returned missionary from Liberia, Africa.

News of the Foreign Society

There has been instant response on the part of many of the friends because of the necessary retrenchment of the Foreign Society. The fact that it has been necessary to cut down missionaries' salaries and lower the allowances of the native workers has stirred the deepest interest. One friend sends in $500 advance payment on his Million-Dollar Campaign pledge to help in the emergency. A pastor on a small salary sends $30 to share in the annual reduction of a foreign missionary's salary. One church offers to be one of 250 to give a thousands dollars extra in this time of need. Several living-link churches have responded instantly with an increase of from $60 to $100 over their regular missionary's support. One church pledges 10 per cent of the income of a large number of its members for one week. There is great need of responses of this kind in the present extremity.

The little Sunday school at Hazelwood, Ind., sends its first Children's Day offering for Foreign Missions of $10.79, more than double their apportionment.

"Times hard; work scarce. Many of the church dazed because of the war. Nevertheless, the First Church, I am sure, would not want the income of our missionary, Mrs. Lemmon, reduced. I will guarantee the extra offering to prevent reduction. Many will be glad to make necessary sacrifices." (Telegram).—George A. Campbell, Hannibal, Mo.

J. W. Jones, pastor of the Fowler (Kansas) Christian Church, sends their Children's Day offering of $27.85, twice the amount of their offering last year.

We are glad to advise you that we secured three times the amount of our apportionment for foreign missions in our Bible School Sunday.—H. H. Cross, Supt. Edgewater Christian Sunday School, Chicago, Ill.

The Sunday schools are making an excellent record on Children's Day. For the first sixteen days following Children's Day Sunday the offerings from the schools have increased over $3,000 above those of last year.

W. C. Bower of the Central Church, Lexington, Ky., writes: "Our Children's Day offering will be 52 per cent larger than last year."

The missionaries, as far as they have been heard from, are responding in an unselfish and courageous way in regard to the necessary retrenchment in salaries. The incomes are small and the reduction will mean much sacrifice.

The Richmond Avenue Sunday school, Buffalo, N. Y., sends their Children's Day offering of $200.

The little Sunday school at Goshen, Mo., sends an offering of $13.25, which is almost three times their apportionment.

The Children's Day offering at the Loraine (Ill.) Sunday school was $25. Their apportionment was $15.

The offering from the Euclid Avenue Sunday school, Cleveland, Ohio, was $560. This Sunday school supports the station at Bolenge, Africa.

If a large number of churches and individuals will respond quickly and unselfishly, retrenchment of the work of the Foreign Society can soon be canceled and an advance vigorously begun instead of a retreat.

MOUNT HERMON FEDERATE SCHOOL OF MISSIONS.

The regular Summer School of Missions, now representing seven denominations, will meet at Mount Hermon, in the beautiful Santa Cruz Mountains, California, July 12 to 17. A glance at the names of the teachers and speakers who will address the Summer School shows that much interesting information will be given those who attend. Mrs. N. E. Gallaway, secretary of the Christian Woman's Board of Missions for California, North, is chairman of the Federate School of Missions. Mrs. Hallie L. Hill of New York, who is authorized lecturer for universities and colleges for the Council of Women for Home Missions, will conduct the class in the Home Mission study book, "Home Missions in Action," by Edith H. Allen. Mrs. Hill is a noted summer school lecturer. Miss Winnifred Williard of Denver, national foreign lecturer at summer schools, will conduct the class in the foreign book, "The King's Highway," by Mrs. Helen Barrett Montgomery. Miss Williard was at the summer school at Boulder, Colo., last year. Mrs. Paul Raymond, author of "The King's Business," will conduct the Normal Class for Mission Study. Mrs. Kate Waller Barrett, national president of the Home Council of Women in the United States for Immigration, will conduct some open parliaments and will give one evening address. Miss Mary Bentley, returned missionary from India for Y. W. C. A., will conduct work for young women. Dr. L. B. Wolfe, I.L.D., of Gunter, India, will give one lecture in costume. Rev. Frederick Goodsell, D.D., will give an address and stereopticon pictures on Turkey, he in Turkish costume. Mrs. Flora Bell Rosenberger, returned missionary, will speak on "The Challenge of Islam." Mrs. William Wallace, refugee missionary from Mexico, will speak one evening. On Wednesday afternoon, July 14, occur the rallies of the different denominations.

Disciples Publication Society

The Disciples Publication Society is an organization through which churches of the Disciples of Christ seek to promote undenominational and constructive Christianity.

The relationship it sustains to the Disciples is intimate and organic, though not official. The Society is not a private institution. It has no capital stock. No individuals profit by its earnings. The churches and Sunday schools own and directly operate it. It is their contribution to the advocacy and practice of the ideals of Christian unity and religious education.

The charter under which the Society exists determines that whatever profits are earned shall be applied to agencies which foster the cause of religious education, although it is clearly conceived that its main task is not to make profits but to produce literature for building up character and for advancing the cause of religion.

* * *

The Disciples Publication Society regards itself as a thoroughly undenominational institution. It is organized and constituted by individuals and churches who interpret the Disciples' religious reformation as ideally an unsectarian and unecclesiastical fraternity, whose common tie and original impulse are fundamentally the desire to practice Christian unity with all Christians.

The Society therefore claims fellowship with all who belong to the living Church of Christ, and desires to cooperate with the Christian people of all communions as well as with the congregations of Disciples, and to serve all.

* * *

The Christian Century, the chief publication of the Society, desires nothing so much as to be the worthy organ of the Disciples' movement. It has no ambition at all to be regarded as an organ of the Disciples' denomination. It is a free interpreter of the wider fellowship in religious faith and service which it believes every church of Disciples should embody. It strives to interpret all communions, as well as the Disciples, in such terms and with such sympathetic insight as may reveal to all their essential unity in spite of denominational isolation. Unlike the typical denominational paper, The Christian Century, though published by the Disciples, is not published for the Disciples alone. It is published for the Christian world. It desires definitely to occupy a catholic point of view and it seeks readers in all communions.

Ten Big Reasons Why

BETHANY GRADED LESSONS are being adopted by so many of the best schools among Disciples.

1. There is more to them—at least a third more—than is contained in any other series.
2. They are rich, vital and full of suggestion to teacher and pupil.
3. They are free from the sectarian spirit.
4. They are soundly and fervently evangelical.
5. They are truly artistic in all their illustrations.
6. They are printed on better paper with better binding and in better taste than any other series.
7. Every lesson writer is an expert of interdenominational reputation.
8. They are a monument to the modern spirit of unity—several leading denominations have co-operated to produce them and are now using them.
9. The Disciples possess full editorial rights, through the editor, Charles Clayton Morrison.
10. Every Disciple school that uses them participates in and promotes a great Christian union enterprise.

Life's Best Things Are Nearby

ALEXANDER PROCTOR was the greatest interpreter of spiritual religion produced by the Disciples of Christ in the generation just past. He kept his mind on more intimate terms with his own experience than was the wont of those who felt bound by the letter of legal commandments.

He therefore constantly interpreted the realities of religion in terms of his actual present life. This filled his preaching with a rare human quality and suffused his soul with an abiding and vivid joy.

A colporteur of religious tracts once approached the veranda of Mr. Proctor's house where the preacher, then grown quite old, was sitting, and introduced himself with the question, "Do you want to go to heaven?" "No, I do not, sir," promptly replied the seer, whose feet were even then taking hold on the threshold of the unseen, "I am already there."

This reply illuminates Mr. Proctor's spiritual genius. He had overcome the illusion with which most of us are obsessed, the illusion that the best things are the remote things. We despise the near—or ignore it.

We imagine that heaven is far away in space and time. But heaven is crowding itself right into our commonplace lives, if we were but aware of it. All the way to heaven is heaven, and there is no joy to be revealed to our souls in the future but the flavor and thrill of it may be a part of our experience even now.

Life's full meed of happiness and inspiration is lacking to most of us just because the rich value of the things we do possess is eclipsed by the illusion of the things that seem to be beyond. We strain after the remote.

We disdain the treasures of our own city or our land and travel far to look on scenes and objects less interesting and often less significant than those we have at home. Meanwhile travelers are coming great distances to behold what we ignore. It is a proverb with travelers that strangers often know a city's points of interest better than her own citizens.

These nearby possibilities of happiness which we take as a matter of course, mechanically, spending all our idealism upon remote and inaccessible things, assert their reality in a very tragic way ofttimes. When they are taken from us we awake to what they might have meant to us.

Carlyle loved his wife, but she did not know it, nor did he know it himself. He accepted her as an article of furniture. Much of the time she was in the way.

"Stop rocking," he said one day when he was writing.

Being particularly irritable that day, even her breathing annoyed him.

"Stop breathing," he said.

And she did.

But at her casket he cried, "O that I might have her back for just five minutes to tell her how much I loved her!" The measureless possibilities of happiness inhering in love—every-day love—had been overlooked because they were nearby.

With what glory does memory crown mother when she has gone! Her unselfishness, her untiring devotion, her almost preternatural insight, and the exhaustless fund of comfort upon which our bruised hearts were wont to draw—all these we measure and assess with new vividness when she has passed from our ken.

But why could not our hearts have flung this idealism about her while she was with us?

Our human nature cheats us into sweeping the distant ranges of possibility to find life's values. Meanwhile the best values of the universe lie in our lap. The physicist with his microscope finds worlds of mystery in a rain-drop equal to that the astronomer with his telescope finds in the firmament.

If we learn of Christ aright we acquire the fine art of spelling out the great idealistic meanings of life's facts and events. Dull work becomes companionship with Him who "worketh even until now." Love ceases to be a mere individual thing and becomes a bursting forth through us of the eternal heart of the universe. The little child in the home comes trailing clouds of glory and of mystery which abide over its cradle like the star over the place where Jesus lay. The mystery and the inspiration and the glory of life are not remote; they are near us all, accessible to us all.

How sorry a mistake it is to which our hearts have, perhaps unchangeably, grown accustomed—the mistake of thinking of God as "up there!" He is down here! His presence burns in every common bush. The manger was not too lowly to receive Him. And He was made known characteristically once by the breaking of bread!

The whole meaning of the incarnation was to cure our obsession that God is far away and to teach us to find him in our common life. We live in him and move in him, and in him have our being.

We need a new mental imagery in our praying. That spatial imagery of an august potentate far away in an upper heaven is not Christian. We need instead the sense of God's gentle circumambient pressure upon our souls.

> His fullness round our incompleteness,
> And round our restlessness His rest.

There is not one good thing that is kept far away in time or space. The secret of joy and contentment and inspiration is with us. It is not in heaven, that a miracle should be worked to bring it to us, nor across the seas, that some one should go on a long journey to fetch it to us; but it is nigh us, even in our mouth and in our heart.

The Contagion of The Golden Rule

A Study of Social Faith and Optimism.

BY FRANK WALLER ALLEN

THE biggest, most vital task of Christianity is to spiritualize the modern social order by injecting into it the dynamic of love. At the present time this is being best interpreted by means of the Golden Rule of Jesus.

The Golden Rule of Confucius is popularly accepted as the Golden Rule of Jesus. The average man in thinking of the Golden Rule of Jesus thinks of it in the terms of the things that he would not like to have done to himself and, consequently, that he should not do to other people. The Golden Rule of Jesus is constructive. It is something that you are going out to do to somebody else. It is wholly a law of action. The emphasis in the Golden Rule of Jesus is to be placed on "all things" emphasizing its universality, the next on "men," bespeaking its social application, and finally on "do," imperatively making it constructive and active. It may be said to be a universal law of conduct for the individual in relating himself to society. He is to do something for society. He is to do for society what he would like society to do for him.

DYNAMIC RELIGION NEEDED.

Therefore the new order is demanding a different manifestation of religion. It is demanding dynamic rather than a static religion; it is demanding a religion for here and now rather than for another world than this; it is demanding a religion that works itself out in the six week days as well as one which manifests itself in the sanctuary on the first day of the week; it is demanding a livable, lovable religion.

There needs to be a simplification of our definitions and a practical everydayness to our expressions of religion. The eternal must be humanized, brought to earth and wrought into the commonplace routine and duties of daily life. He who, without robbing or depreciating the sanctuary, discovers God in the streets has found immortality here and now without regard to time or place.

THE DISCOVERY OF GOD.

What is religion? Religion is a man's discovery that God is in life and a going to work with Him. Life is a changing, a process of becoming. So religion is an evolutionary, a growing process. It is the continuously increasingly great adventure of life; and its hope and ultimate experience is discovering and knowing God. Human experience is a progressive discovering of God. So our discovery of God is a constant, never-ending process, like our discovery of life.

To be great a religion must be intimately related to the most commonplace experience of everyday life. It is easy to believe that one has discovered God in a Gothic cathedral, but it requires greatness of soul to find Him in the hurrying, light-hearted throng of the streets on a Maytime Saturday night. But the point is that he is in the crowd; in the laughter, hopes and dreams of youth: in the living, striving, happy-hearted human throng! God is there or nowhere; and it requires neither a genius or a poet to make this discovery. Sympathy in human things and a faith in folk finds God among the people.

Rev. Frank Waller Allen, First Church, Springfield, Ill.

RELIGION SIMPLE AND REASONABLE.

Thus do we become seekers, constantly determining the relation of God to life. And in the Christian religion we determine the relation of God to human life through the mind and activities of Jesus the Carpenter. Thus is religion made simple and reasonable. Such a religion has no creed save that the God of Jesus is in His world; the conviction that justice and gentleness shall cause "the desert to blossom as the rose;" to give people a chance to be good by first making them happy; and to pray that we may be delivered from stupidity, ignorance and selfishness while we are granted an open mind and intelligent faith and a love at work for folks.

A religion is powerful to the extent that it interests men in men, and gives them the working means of advancing the welfare of their kind. The betterment of man's condition on earth is now fast becoming the chief solicitude of the church. The Golden Rule is the religion of the new order.

"The final test of a culture or civilization or a religion is the progress it creates. When the Apostle Paul said there was neither Jew nor Greek, bond nor free, male nor female, in Christ, he propounded the essential democracy of Christianity; in the first he abolished all racialistic aversions; in the second he condemned all class distinctions; in the third he raised woman to a level with man and destroyed the age-long, universal and anti-social discrimination against her. Christianity is a dynamic of all just action. The institutions of civilization are its enginery, but its religion is its dynamic, its propelling force."

LOVE AND SERVICE.

The divine element in a religion is love. Love manifesting itself in service is alone divine in Jesus of Nazareth and in man. Love without service is base; and service without love is dead. The absence of either results in atrophy of character. And only character counts—and then it doesn't unless used for human service. If there is anything which makes one man God's son more than another, it is because of a deeper love and a greater service. It is thus only that we become one with our Father and share immortality. Greater love hath no man than this, that he live the Golden Rule of Jesus in everyday life.

The Golden Rule of Jesus can and is revolutionizing business and industry. A preachment that will squeeze the "ice" out of service and the "fit" out of profit will put the Golden Rule into business. That is to say, whenever commerce learns to put profits in the background, the welfare of employes in the middle distance and the service to the public in the foreground, it will be the beginning of the Golden Rule in business.

BUSINESS IS BEING ELEVATED.

In fact, many of the large business organizations of today are frankly experimenting with this idea. The Rotary Club, a national organization of business men with ideals, has as one of its chief purposes the preaching and practicing of service first in business. The Ford Motor Company, Proctor & Gamble, manufacturers of Ivory Soap, the National Cash Register Company, the Nelson Manufacturing Company of Leclair, Ill., are successfully experimenting with the Golden Rule in business. All these firms, and others not mentioned, have worked out systems which they are constantly trying to improve, the purposes of which are to do unto their employes and the public as they would have their employes and the public do unto them.

Now I am not saying that this new conscience in business is going to literally solve our economic problem. These experiments are not worth so much for what they are actually accomplishing this very day as they are of value as an indication of the signs of the times. The trend of thought and action today is toward cooperation for the purpose of giving a greater service that we may have a better society. A Golden Rule that won't operate until we have an ideal society is "sounding brass." The hope of things in all this business is that commerce is going to discover that the Golden Rule pays. Mr. Ford has discovered that it pays to adopt a law of altruistic selfishness in his business.

SERVICE THROUGH DAILY WORK.

It does not charge him with sordidness; it is the highest compliment that can be paid a man in our commerce-ridden age. The world has discovered two great ideals in the New Testament, the service of all men by all other men, and the infinite value of the individual. To expect a man to serve this end sacrificially is asking too much of the present system of society. Altruistic selfishness touches men's imaginations and dares them to achievements where sacrifice fades from sight because of the joy of the task. It is a fine thing to be able to build a high ideal into a piece of modern machinery; to serve society by earning your bread and butter is working your way to salvation. It does away with a psalm-singer on Sunday and a mortgage ringer on Monday; with feeding the poor with one hand and robbing them with the other; with dividing life into secular and holy days and things. Altruistic selfishness or the Golden Rule in every-day life will bring religion to earth seven days in the week, and prove that all rights are holy.

IN INTERNATIONAL RELATIONS.

The Golden Rule can and will revolutionize international relations. The solution of the international problem lies in the teaching and preaching of a fundamental democracy. In the first place, we must cease to talk of God in the terms of monarchy, and think of Him in the terms of democracy. The curse of the race has been the idea of monarchy. And militarism has been the pus of monarchy. This whole monarchial and military analogy in religion stinks of cheap success and garishness. God is not a king, or monarch, upon a throne. He is not the God of a class or of a chosen people, neither is He the God of war.

"Behold, the tabernacle of God is with men and He shall dwell with them, and they shall be His peoples, and God Himself shall be with them." God is the God of the people. His dwelling place is upon the earth and among men. And so far as human affairs are concerned, the progress of the people is the progress of God.

The highest ideal of social progress is that of the cooperation of God and the people for the growth of human society. There are two notions abroad of which society wants to be well rid; the first is, that in so far as moral and ethical progress is concerned, God works independent of men; and the second is, that men can permanently progress without the leadership of God. Nothing can permanently retard religious infused progress. The king idea of God produces the notion of special privilege to those whose genuflections are most graceful, whose liturgy, forms and ceremonies are most empurpled with the servile coloring of monarchy. It produces a doctrine of folded hands and twiddling thumbs, looking to the King to do the work of the world alone. It separates life from religion; it produces sacred and profane history, it makes holy days and holy things over against secular days and secular things.

GOD A FELLOW-WORKER.

The democratic idea of God as a great fellow worker of the people produces self-respect, social self-reliance and independence. It places upon their shoulders a divine responsibility for the world's lack of love and justice; it makes all days holy; it makes all things and movements which have to do with the happiness and welfare of the people religious.

And if I understand anything of the mind and character of Jesus, such was His conception of His Father, God. Jesus was no king, and laid no claims to a relationship between Himself and the people as that of a monarch and his subjects. What king never had where to lay his head? What king since the history of humanity has been written has based his especial privileged relationship between himself and his subjects upon this principle of life, "And whoever will be chiefest among you shall be servant of all?" You call Him the world's brother, and you do well, for such He is; you call Him humanity's friend, and you do well, for such He is; you call Him the world's savior and you do well, for such He is; but you can not call Him the world's king, for such He never claimed to be. His hopes did not lie in special privilege, nor in a ruling, fighting class, but in a God led, God inspired people, whose law of life should be love. Jesus wore no halo except in the imagination of artists who thought in the terms of monarchy. He wore no purple robe save as it was colored by the sweat and the dust of the work of the day. He had no scepter other than that of fellowship, no law than that law of love. His "court" was a Galilean hillside, and His "courtiers" ignorant fishermen.

THE GOD OF DEMOCRACY.

It may take a long time to regain the ground we have lost, for kings and the henchmen of kings have taught us to think in the terms of privilege, but the church will yet find herself reaching all human kind. And she will do it by reinterpreting life to men in the terms of the personality and teachings of the Galilean carpenter. Our God will cease to be a super-monarch on a throne in the far-off-heavens, but He will be the Father-friend of all the people. The God of the Czar and of the Kaiser is not my God at all, nor can He be the God of democracy.

GOLDEN RULE TAKEN SERIOUSLY.

The day of the Golden Rule in the life of the people is at hand. I do not mean by this that the millennium is here, but I do mean that we are taking seriously our problems, and whatever economic programs we adopt, we are going to demand that they be permeated by the spirit of Jesus as expressed in the Golden Rule Any economic system that really contributes to the progress of the people must be held together by love. A religion which does not express itself in a fraternal, social relation is not a religion at all, but a mocking masquerade. And this idea is especially permeating American life today. It is contagious. The church has caught it, the factory has caught it, the field has caught it, our government has caught it, and who can say that before a great many years even old war-ridden, rotten Europe will not, too, have found the Golden Rule contagious?

Time to Hope.

Open all the windows
To the sun!
Winter's reign is over,
Spring begun;
Darkness is departing,
Skies are blue,
Distances are dawning
The mists through;
After longest waiting
Spring is won—
Open all the windows
To the sun.

Signs of gloomy winter
Still remain,
Last year's leaves lie sodden
On the plain,
But the light stays longer
In the street,
And about the garden
Songs are sweet;
Give the flowers a welcome
One by one—
Open all the windows
To the sun.

Take to heart the sunshine,
Weary men,
After disappointments
Hope again;
God will clothe the meadows
In bright gold,
He will give you blessings
New and old,
Triumph after failure
Shall be won—
Open Faith's clear windows
To the sun.

THE GENERAL CONVENTION.

THE CHURCHES of the Disciples have been trying for some years to create a General Convention, constituted on some principle of orderly representation, through which they might act to control and coördinate the various missionary and benevolent activities which have hitherto been carried on by independent and more or less competitive societies.

The overwhelming majority of the attendants at the annual conventions of these societies indicated by successive votes taken through a long period of discussion and preparation that they heartily desired such a convention to be formed.

Finally such a convention was formed by the action of the Louisville gathering in 1912, confirmed with practically no opposition at Toronto in 1913, and further confirmed at Atlanta in 1914 by the several societies voting, with practically no dissent, to bear their several shares in providing the modest sum required for the Convention's support.

Meanwhile, the opposition to the General Convention has been kept alive by a newspaper, whose attack is leveled at the delegate feature of the new organization.

The opposition holds that the churches ought not to undertake to control and coördinate their missionary activities in an orderly way, but that these activities should make their appeal to the churches through independent societies, and that each church without formal counsel with its sister churches, should make its offerings as it sees fit.

The opposition denies the right of the churches to make any effort to standardize their missionary organizations. It contends, on the contrary, that a plurality of unauthorized and competitive organizations should be encouraged to present their rival appeals to the churches.

The journal in opposition has pushed its contention with a vehemence and vulgarity that makes it an object of astonishment to our fellow Christians of the denominations and an occasion of shame and apprehension to all sensitive souls amongst ourselves.

Tired, humiliated and solicitous lest the unity of our movement be impaired by continued dissension, it will not be strange if in some minds the sentiment in favor of the General Convention will be found to have been appreciably weakened.

Counsellors will, no doubt, be heard at the Los Angeles meeting this month, advising that the Convention be given up for the sake of peace, and that we return again to the primitive mass meeting type of gatherings wherein a few persons having met the problems of the brotherhood, generously solved them and passed their solutions on to the un-understanding but grateful churches.

Before such counsel is accepted the situation should receive the most careful analysis and reflection.

EVIL SPIRIT MUST NOT PREVAIL.

QUITE ASIDE from the merits or defects of the Convention, no more serious calamity could happen to the churches than the triumph of the spirit which has dominated the opposition for the past decade of this discussion. That spirit has been the most malignant and shameless with which any religious group in America has had to deal.

It needs no words to convey to the imagination what consequences would ensue to our missionary work, and to our very character as a people, should the opposition prevail in so strategic a matter.

It would involve the disintegration of our missionary organizations in a degree that the well-informed can easily foresee.

Among its followers the journal in opposition has already broken down the sense of loyalty to any "recognized" agencies. That break-down of loyalty would inevitably be spread through the entire brotherhood with the abandonment of all plans to unify and standardize our missionary societies.

CHURCHES WILL NOT TURN BACK.

IT IS A DELUSION to think that we can return to the old order. The discussion and development of the past ten years have made the old order impossible. The General Convention is the fruit of a long evolutionary process, guided by the wisest counsellors our churches possessed, and opposed by not one disinterested man of first rank significance.

It is a child's fallacy to imagine that this process can be turned back. In the light of the vision that has come to them, the brotherhood of Disciples will never again be content with the individualism and uncoöperative congregationalism which characterized their former years. Our churches want now to work together, to defer to the common judgment in matters of missionary administration and to share responsibly in producing that judgment. We can no more be turned back to the old way than the United States can be turned back to the period of states' sovereignty.

This means that for the protection of their own interests, the various societies should heartily accept the common-denominatorship of the General Convention, and work to establish it.

If any society is now deploring the effect on its income of the present wicked agitation, let it ponder well what the effect on its income and its prestige will be in case the opposition to the General Convention prevails!

THE SOCIETIES' BEST FRIEND.

THE GENERAL CONVENTION is the Foreign Missionary Society's best friend. It is every society's best friend. It is the logical and inevitable outcome of the magnificent development of the missionary spirit for which the statesmanly management of the Foreign Society during the past forty years is preëminently responsible.

If the principle involved in the General Convention seems to demand a slight adjustment on the part of the Foreign Society to the equally valid interests of her sister societies, entailing for the moment a possible (though by no means unavoidable) reduction in receipts, let the officials of the Foreign Society reflect upon the far more radical adjustment and the inexpressibly greater embarrassment they and their work will be caused should the General Convention now be supinely abandoned.

A CONSTRUCTIVE WEEKLY

NO PEACE THROUGH COMPROMISE.

IT IS IMPORTANT that we repeat here what The Christian Century has said many times in recent years, that it is altogether futile and puerile to compromise progress for the sake of peace. If there were the slightest hope that it would bring peace, a compromise might be argued.

But everyone should by this time know that the journal in opposition does not want peace; it wants agitation and war. It thrives on its policy of strife. If it should win its point in one contention it would straightway create another issue.

The only way to peace for us Disciples is by going straight forward and doing our duty in the light of our highest ideals, in quiet disregard of the threatenings of our reactionary organ.

IN A FALSE POSITION.

FINALLY, it would seem to be the evident duty of all forward-facing men and women to see to it that the General Convention is given a chance to do what it was intended to do. If it is not given its own work it is a mere cumberer of the ground.

The Convention has so far been a victim, not chiefly of its opponents, but of its timid friends and of unfavorable circumstances.

Its three consecutive meetings have been placed in cities far from the center of our brotherhood's population. While the attendance has been large in each instance, considering the locality and the general conditions, it has not been adequately representative. This circumstance can be, and no doubt will be remedied at Los Angeles. For five years to come the meeting place ought to be selected from cities in the central west, easily accessible to the great body of our leading laymen and ministers.

But the chief handicap under which the Convention has labored has been its own timidity. It has been content with a position which has subjected it to contempt.

It has been simply one number on the program, one organization allotted a certain time and space for the transaction of its particular business. The general title over our annual gatherings has been "The International Conventions of Disciples of Christ." Under this heading the various independent societies have held their independent sessions.

So far the creation of the General Convention of Churches of Christ has brought about no change in this arrangement, but the General Convention itself has accepted a false place by the side of these independent societies as if it were just another society.

And what function has the General Convention performed? It has graciously been allowed to open the series of "International Conventions" with felicitous speeches and to close them with a benedictory service. In addition, at Toronto, it had one business session on a certain afternoon, and at Atlanta it seized the half hour preliminary to the opening of each day's program for the transaction of business!

And what was its business? Mainly tinkering with its own machinery!

THE COMMON DENOMINATOR.

IT IS NOT strange, therefore, that there are many to whose minds the meaning of the General Convention has not yet gotten home. They see no sufficient reason for its existence. It seems like a fifth wheel, a mere appendage to our annual gatherings. It is not important enough, some say, to justify its supporters in allowing it to be a cause of dissension.

It is true, its officers prepared a budget of the missionary offerings—a great work that could not have been done except by its agency—and it procured certain railroad courtesies for the missionary secretaries—a service not significant enough to have been given the prominence it received in the reports—but these good deeds only make more obvious the false position in which the General Convention has been placed.

The General Convention is intended to be the national gathering itself, not one of the organizations represented at the national gathering.

To it the missionary societies are expected to make their reports and from it receive instructions.

Its full significance and dignity will not appear until it takes this position of common-denominatorship for all the hitherto uncoördinated missionary and benevolent interests.

Instead of merely opening and closing the annual gathering, it should sit all the way through the week's sessions, representing the churches in their desire to have all their work embraced in a unifying, orderly and responsible Convention.

SOLEMN, INDEED!

"SIXTY SOLEMN PROOFS from the Scripture that instead of the Church getting better it will continue, and even increase, in evil, until the Lord Jesus Christ comes again"—that is the title of a tract that fell into our hands the other day, and the writer seemed to be glad that he could make out so strong a case!

LIFE.

By one great Heart the Universe is stirred:
  By Its strong pulse, stars climb the darkening blue;
  It throbs in each fresh sunset's changing hue,
And thrills through low, sweet song of every bird.

By It, the plunging blood reds all men's veins;
  Joy feels that heart against his rapturous own,
  And on It, Sorrow breathes her sharpest groan;
It bounds through gladnesses and deepest pains.

Passionless, beating through all Time and Space,
  Relentless, calm, majestic in Its march,
  Alike, though Nature shake heaven's endless arch,
Or man's heart break, because of some dead face!

'Tis felt in sunshine greening the soft sod,
  In children's smiling, as in mother's tears;
  And, for strange comfort, through the aching years,
Men's hungry souls have named that great Heart, God!

A DEPARTMENT OF INTERDENOMINATIONAL ACQUAINTANCE — By Orvis F. Jordan

Mormons Divided Over Saloon.

The Mormon Church is in the saloon business, but many of the rank and file members are total abstainers and are bitterly opposed to the traffic. The Mormon governor of Utah, Governor Spry, acting on orders from Joseph Smith, the Mormon president, vetoed the prohibition bill last year after it had passed both branches of the legislature. The inside facts have been revealed by Senator Seegmiller. The governor, according to Seegmiller, approached him and some others with these words: "Brethren, I come to you as your brother in the priesthood, and not as governor of the state, and I bring a message from the president of the church to you as state presidents, and the message is that President, and the message is that Presiveto on the floor of the senate and defend me in my action when you go home to your people."

Church Helps the Unemployed.

The Episcopalians of New York have been aiding the unemployed in their city through the Church Cooperative Association. They print lists from employment agencies in which positions are announced as being open, and the fees at these employment agencies are advanced by the church people and are refunded again by the persons getting the positions. For the aid of those too old or infirm to get the ordinary kind of position, they have arranged with a factory to get toys to assemble, and this work is done directly under the jurisdiction of the church organizer. The New York parishes take collections to keep this work going.

Church Union in Scotland.

The Established Kirk and the United Free Church of Scotland have committees out who are working on the problem of union. The war has been a hindrance to these negotiations, but some progress has been made. The Kirk leaders view the proposed credal basis with a measure of suspicion and the United Free leaders are apt to look askance at a plan which would leave intact the union of church and state against which they have protested for so many centuries. In spite of difficulties, it would seem that the principle of union was likely to win.

Methodists Will Move Forward.

The Methodists have a General Conference Commission on Evangelism and this commission has started what is called the Methodist Forward Movement. The goal is 250,000 new members by May, 1916.

Church Union in Canada.

The Canadian Presbyterian General Assembly has just been in session and the debate on the subject of church union in Canada has been very significant. A test vote was had in which it was proposed to lay over the discussion of union until after the war. This test vote failed to carry by a large margin, the vote being 84 to 366. While the matter is not yet definitely settled, it seems sure that Methodists, Congregationalists and Presbyterians in Canada will have corporate unity in a very few years. The Presbyterian assembly authorized the publication of a manual of family worship called "Hallowing the Home."

Will Consider Union at Chicago

The Chicago Synod of the Evangelical Lutheran church met in Maywood, Ill., recently, and the delegates to the national body were elected. These were instructed to use their best offices to bring to Chicago in 1917 every national Lutheran body of the country, that plans for a united all-American Lutheranism might be formulated.

Southern Presbyterians Fight Federation.

An influential portion of the Southern Presbyterian denomination is opposed to the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America. In 1912 they voted themselves out of re-

Federating Many Church Activities

An ambitious plan has just been set going to get all the big Christian organizations, like the Young Men's Christian Association, the Sunday school, Christian Endeavor, laymen's movements, and so forth, to doing team work. The country has been cross-harrowed with "campaigns" and "movements," and sometimes before one desired crop has begun to grow another plowing and harrowing and planting comes along until local pastors and churchmen are in perplexity.

Something like a hundred representatives of these national and interdenominational bodies got together in a conference at Atlantic City two weeks ago and authorized a commission on federated activities, which will seek to bring the present multiplicity of agencies into harmonious cooperation.

The prime mover in this new effort is Fred. B. Smith, leader of the Men and Religion movement, and the executive officer chosen is Rev. Roy B. Guild, late successor to Dr. Charles M. Sheldon, as pastor of the First Congregational Church of Topeka, and formerly executive secretary of the Men and Religion movement.

Among the eighteen organizations represented at the Atlantic City meeting, which lasted for two days, were the Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America, the Sunday School Associations, the Missionary Education Movement, the Laymen's Missionary Movement, the Brotherhoods, the Young Men's Christian Association, the Young Women's Christian Association, the Council of Women, the Young Peoples's Societies, and the Home Missions Council.

Apart from its important action in creating, under the Federal Council of Churches, this new commission on federated agencies, the Atlantic City meeting was notable for its personnel. Rarely are so many national religious leaders met together at one time. Men like John R. Mott of the Y. M. C. A. and Marion Lawrence of the Sunday School, and J. Campbell White of the Laymen's Missionary Movement, and William Shaw of Christian Endeavor, and Daniel Pohling of the Flying Squadron, were present and participating.

The discussions were frank, but friendly. There was no lack of candor in pointing out the difficulties and dangers to be met by the new movement, yet never once was the serenity of the meeting ruffled, and the action taken was unanimous. It means much for the Christian work of North America when the real leaders sit down in council together. The small group of women delegates, led by Mrs. Robert E. Speer, contributed materially to the spirit and success of the conference.

Not infrequently it has occurred that the plans of these general organizations for local campaigns have clashed, because each has gone ahead without conference with the others. Now this new clearing house should insure cooperation.

Nothing is clearer, under the changed conditions of our time, than that religious work can no longer be done exclusively on the basis of the local congregation. The thought and activity of the churches is largely being shaped by general "movements," like that of the Organized Adult Bible Classes and the Laymen's Missionary Movement and the Men and Religion Movement. The local church is still, as ever, the most essential factor in all Christian propaganda; but nowadays the churches all have interdenominational relations and functions.

Because a parochial system is inadequate for modern city conditions, the need for better cooperative machinery has called into action this Commission on Federated Activities.

lationship with their sister denominations and the following year they voted themselves back in again. At their recent General Assembly at Newport News the question was raised again, and the Assembly voted to withdraw from the Federal Council a year hence. It is evident that there was some hesitation about the wisdom of this step, or the new attitude would have been assumed immediately. Meanwhile, it is more than an even probability that they will rescind this year's action at the next General Assembly. Opposition to the principle of interdenominational cooperation has arisen in only a few of the denominations, most of them being enthusiastically loyal to the organization which has made such strides toward the goal of Christian Union and which had made the whole Protestant Church speak with one voice on some important matters.

is ill at his summer home, at Sagamore, Mass., with typhoid fever. While he is doing as well as might be expected, it is now certain that he will not be able to attend the great world convention of Christian Endeavor, which is assembling in Chicago, this week. A quiet man of unassuming piety, and true Christian character, he has held, without effort, his place of leadership in the hearts of millions of young Christians of every name.

Billy Sunday Will Not Go to Washington.

Billy Sunday was invited to Washington by some of the ministers there and he gave the church people of that city a sample of what they might expect should he visit the capitol city. Many of the leading ministers did not enthuse and Billy has decided not to accept the invitation of the others to hold evangelistic meetings in the nation's chief city.

Here and There

Mr. Barnes, the Pastor.

[The pen of E. B. Barnes is more familiar to our readers than his voice and his personality. That our readers may have some picture of him in his pastoral as well as his literary habitat, we take pleasure in withholding his accustomed contribution to this department this week, and giving the space to this appreciative editorial found in the Richmond (Ky.) Daily Madisonian, a few days ago.—THE EDITOR.]

THE SIXTH MILESTONE.

Rev. E. B. Barnes, pastor of the First Christian church of this city, has reached the sixth milestone in his ministry in this city. He was received most cordially by his congregation on his appearance here six years ago and he has found much in his ministry to give him encouragement. No man has stood higher in church circles than he. He is liberal and broad in his views, strong in his opinions which he always supports and maintains with facts, conscientious and painstaking in his work, and is a leader among men. Affable, of a social disposition he has won the affections of his congregation and the people by whom he is known. He is not hide bound nor a strict doctrinaire, but preaches, teaches and practices church unity along all the activities of the church, both social and otherwise.

Among some of his achievements here may be mentioned the erection of a new church at a cost of $40,000, on which remains an indebtedness of only $4,000, which can be raised at any time; the fine spirit of harmony which prevailed throughout the days of building and which prevails to this hour; the evangelistic services conducted by Dr. Yeuell which stirred the entire community and added eighty-five members to the congregation; the growth of the Sunday school from 150 to an average attendance of 400, and the largest weekly offerings in the state. The Sunday school supports an orphan in Louisville at $100 a year; gave this year $220 for foreign missions, and has a part in the benevolent work of our city and the church organizations throughout the year. The largest prayer meetings in the history of the church were held during the fall and winter months. Uniformly large congregations attend preaching services, and particularly the evening services when the attendance of Mr. Turley's men adds special interest during the winter months. The support of two missionaries is maintained by the congregation and the Woman's Auxiliary and Circle, the offering from both these organizations being $1,200 a year.

During the year he has preached a series on the Old Testament characters, which were received with enthusiasm. This fall and winter he will have a series on "The Modern Messages of the Ancient Prophets." A special effort will be made to reach the non-going church element this coming season. Dr. Barnes believes that religion and life are inseparable; that the church is here to help humanity in its many efforts to do good, either through the church or in any benevolent way; that the church is never to be a thing of life on Sunday and a graveyard through the week; that whatever ministers to the welfare of the community should have the co-operation and sanction of the church.

As an evidence of the high esteem in which he is held by his church, the church has just voted unanimously to send him to a convention to be held in Los Angeles, Cal., and the church will pay all his expenses carte blanche. Dr. Barnes has signified his intention to go and is making his preparations for the trip.

No finer delegate could be sent from any church. There is nothing small about him and on the questions that may come before that body for solution, the church has the satisfaction of knowing that its delegate will have an opinion worth expressing, and that he will express it, too.

Criticism Put to Base Uses.

Prof. Andrew F. Wese of Princeton, wrote a criticism of "Billy" Sunday which the liquor men of this state are using as a campaign document. It is really a two-edged sword, for it shows the fear in which Mr. Sunday is held by the whiskey forces wherever he goes. He is due in Louisville this fall, and already the enemy is at work. Rum may drive a man to commit any crime without a protest from the saloon interests, but they shudder when a preacher uses slang or is accused of irreverence! E. B. B.

SOLOMON CHOOSES WISDOM

LESSON FOR JULY 18, 1915.

I Kings 3:4-15.

Verse by Verse.

By Asa McDaniel.

4. Gibeon. Gibeon was five and one-half miles northwest of Jerusalem. It was a sacred place. It was made sacred because the tabernacle and brazen altar were there until Solomon removed them to the temple.—High place. The Hebrew word translated "high place" means a sacred spot, or place for sacrifice among the Canaanites. These places were located on a hill just outside the city, where the people went to worship.—A thousand burnt-offerings. This was a great religious gathering. Part of the animal was used as the burnt-offering and the rest was eaten by the people and the priests. Did Solomon offer? Solomon offered these through the priests, the chief of whom was Zadok.

5. In a dream. In Old Testament times men expected to receive God's will through dreams. Orientals have always held that dreams were sent for a purpose, and there have also been those who have claimed to be able to interpret them.—Ask what I shall give to thee. Jehovah, in this statement, laid his resources at Solomon's disposal. All that the heart could rightfully desire is included in the promise of God.

6. In uprightness of heart with thee. The course of David's life was for the most part cast in pleasant lines.—Thou hast kept for him this great loving-kindness. Solomon regards his being made king as a great kindness schown to his father David.

7. I am but a little child. With the customary oriental exaggeration, Solomon thus acknowledges his lack of experience.—I know not how to come out or come in. This is a proverbial expression meaning to conduct public or military affairs.

8. Thy people. The Israelites considered themselves the chosen people of God.—That cannot be numbered nor counted for multitude. There may be a reference made to the promise made to Abraham in this statement. Certain it is that it is a form of speech indicating a large number.

9. An understanding. Hebrew, hearing, RVm. A heart in the attitude of obtaining wisdom from Jehovah.—To judge. The Oriental mind always associated the function of the judge with the monarch, as he is expected to hear and decide important cases.

10. The speech pleased the Lord. Jehovah was pleased with the attitude, sincerity, unselfishness, and devotion to Israel, expressed in Solomon's request.

11. Long life. Hebrew, "many days" RVm.—Discern. Hebrew, "hear" RVm. The ability to hear causes, to weigh evidence and to render just judgments.

12. I have done. The request of Solomon was granted.—I have given. Jehovah gave him ability to know and to judge, just as he gives everyone such wisdom.—A wise heart. The wisdom indicated here is not to be measured by our standards. Subtle, cunning, keen to perceive that which is not at first apparent, is its meaning here.—An understanding heart. A heart sensitive to the Divine will. The heart stands at the seat of both thought and feeling in this connection.

13. I have also given thee. Some things he did not ask for but which followed as a natural consequence of that for which he did ask; namely, riches and honor. Read in this connection Matt. 6:33.—Both riches and honor. These are most magnificent gifts when properly used.—There shall not be. Or, "there hath not been," RVm.—Any among the kings, like unto thee. Compare I Kings 4:29-34.

14. If thou wilt walk in my ways. Jehovah gave promise of long life to the king, but it was conditioned upon his keeping in the right path. Read in this connection I Kings 11:1-13.—To keep my statutes and my commandments. This is an explanation of what the walking in my ways meant.—As thy father David did walk

15. Behold, it was a dream. There are three dreams of Solomon recorded in the Bible.—He came to Jerusalem. This was the "Holy City" and the resting place of the ark.—And offered up burn-offerings. The act of worship was also for consecration of himself to the kingship.—Made a feast to all his servants. They partook of the peace-offerings.

The Supreme Good

The Lesson in Today's Life

BY JOHN R. EWERS

Your young men shall see visions. You say this was only a dream but a dream may be very significant. A dream often expands the waking interests. Problems have been solved in dreams. It would be interesting to take up the famous dreams of history and show their influence as well as trace their causes. Solomon had just been crowned. The burden of responsibility was resting heavily upon him. He was eager to succeed. Honor had humbled him! Prosperity brings out the best in some men, precisely as adversity does in others. As a rule the failures succeed. Christ failed apparently, but he won the world. Sudden riches make fools of some men and saints of others. Solomon was wiser and nobler in this hour of his crowning than in any after time. Familiarity with honor, luxury and power effaced his modesty and dependence. You can only brush the blush from the peach once. You can only sweep the iridescent dust from the butterfly's wing once. You can only steal the sweetness and trust from a young man's heart once. It is gone forever and there are not riches enough in the capitols of the world to buy that priceless possession back again.

COMMENCEMENT.

What an opportune lesson! Thousands of young people stand this morning where the young and handsome Solomon stands in this morning's lesson. School days are over, the future waits. And yet the world does not stop and wait for our advice. Even our commencement oration did not right the universe. But how splendid are the radiant enthusiasms of youth.

So near is grandeur to our dust,
So near is God to man,
When duty whispers low, "Thou must,"
The youth replies, "I can."—Emerson.

The dauntlessness of youth, the divine fearlessness is glorious. Alas for the timidity of later years. When wings have been scorched, when unselfish attempts have been ridiculed, when noble schemes have been blasted, when men have sneered and contemptuously laughed at you, when the sordid selfishness of men has put fear and discouragement into you, then you look back with a sophisticated smile at the hopes of youth. Yet you would give the world to have been able to retain that trustfulness and just in proportion as you are able to retain it, just in proportion as you are able to avoid cynicism are you of any value in society. Every cynic should be sent to hell! The cynic with his curled lip is the arch discourager. He sings his monotonous song of, "What's the Use?" He doubts honesty, slurs purity and pities effort. Keep sweet as long as you can. Never allow your trust in men to die. Keep the fires of faith burning upon your altar. For in the hour that sweet trust dies your usefulness departs never to return.

YOUR CHOICE.

What shall God give thee? It is no dream that you can have whatever you want. "Ask and it shall be given." My friend, the most terrible fact in this world is that your prayers are answered! Whatever you ask for you shall get. I do not mean what you say with your lips when you kneel, before retiring, but what your heart cries for. I know young men who pray for gratified lust and they are getting just that. I know young men who pray for ease and they are getting precisely that. I know others who are praying for money and they are getting it. We get exactly what we go after, and the only prayer worth mentioning is the passion of your life. Lip service is too cheap; only one cry is answered and that is the cry of the heart. Put it down, what you want you will most certainly get.

WISDOM.

Solomon made the best choice—"The understanding heart." "Not to mourn, not to laugh, not to hate—but to understand." "To see life steadily and to see it whole" as Matthew Arnold said. That is the need of our time, to see reality from all angles. "I am but a little child," Newton said, "I seem but as a little child wandering on the sea shore, contenting myself with finding a prettier pebble or a smoother shell than ordinary, while the whole ocean of truth lays all undiscovered before me."

Disciples Table Talk

Self-Denial and a Denial to Others Also.

Dr. Peter Ainslie, of Baltimore, is being praised for sending to the Foreign Missionary Society, a check for the amount of money he would have spent in attending the Los Angeles Convention. But some are disposed to say that Dr. Ainslie's presence at the convention, where his counsel is invaluable, is worth more to the cause than his money. His act was purely unselfish, and humble. He denied himself the pleasure of the trip and the fellowship, and it did not occur to his modest heart that he was limiting the pleasure and value of the convention for others when he chose the self-denying course of staying away.

Many will hope that Dr. Ainslie may yet see his way to give to his brethren the annual pleasure of seeing his face and sharing in the good counsel of his trusted judgment.

Discounts Newspaper Interview and Deplores Attack on Denver Minister.

The Colorado state paper, edited by Randolph Cook, discounts the newspaper story, containing an alleged interview, which one of our national papers has made the basis of a vicious attack on Geo. B. Van Arsdall, who recently resigned the pastorate of Central Church, Denver. His work has been a notable one," says Mr. Cook, "not only for our cause in the state, but in the city of Denver he has been an aggressive and progressive force for righteousness, second to none in that metropolis." Mr. Cook characterizes as "stuff," the statement attributed to Mr. Van Arsdall, that "beliefs which were as life to me fifteen years ago are meaningless today," and adds: "Now, we hold no brief for Mr. Van Arsdall, but we venture the assertion that the paper has greatly misrepresented him; that he has not lost his faith in God; that he has not lost his love for the church, in which he has served, and by which he has been honored, for a quarter of a century. Let us be kind enough to give a brother the benefit of the doubt. . . . We bow to one in our loyalty to the Gospel; but, brethren, have we not grown large enough to allow a man to change an opinion without abusing him? There is nothing sadder in our history today than this." We have received a number of communications from Denver, and the state of Colorado, in which the attack on Mr. Van Arsdall is roundly condemned, and his work in Denver and the state highly praised.

Minister's Retreat Made Inexpensive at Bethany Park.

A feature of Bethany Assembly, at Bethany Park, Ind., this summer, will be a "Minister's Retreat," for instruction, fellowship, and better acquaintance. It is desired to have every minister in the state in attendance. The date is August 9 to 14. Many churches will wish to send their pastors, bearing all their expenses. But if a church will pay his railroad fare—a certain layman of the state has agreed to stand the expense of his hotel entertainment, on the Assembly grounds. This ought to bring a good attendance of pastors from all quarters of the state. The speakers for the week are: Prof. C. E. Underwood, who will lecture each day on "The Relation of Hebrew Wisdom to the Mission of Christ"; Prof. W. C. Morro, who will speak on "Fundamental Christian Doctrines"; Prof. Jabez Hall, whose facinating theme will be "Personal Reminiscences of the Pioneers"; W. R. Warren, who will speak on "The Church's Chief Asset" and "Preacher's Thrift"; and John W. Street, on "The Rural Church."

Federated Church Celebrates Ending of Happy Year.

The first anniversary of the founding of the Urbandale Federated Church, in Urbandale, near Des Moines, Ia., was celebrated June 27. This church is composed of representatives of thirteen denominations. It receives, without question, the members of any Protestant evangelical church. It it a real community center, encouraging all movements for the moral and material advancement of the community, including clean athletics, and wholesome entertainment. W. J.

Rev. William J. Lockhart.

Lockhart, the pastor and organizer of the church preached the anniversary sermon. He said. "The unanimity with which people approved of the plan to organize a federated church that would unite all the religious forces of the city, and the remarkable success that has attended the church from the beginning, is at least suggestive to those who, not knowing our people or the spirit that dominated them, were prone to question the success of our movement. But you know and I know that it was of God and that His guidance has been ours from the beginning. I question not He chose the time and the place for a demonstration of the oneness of His people. While having the representatives of thirteen denominations in our congregation, there has never yet been even the slightest tendency to manifest a denominational spirit on the part of anyone. The closest unity has prevailed from the beginning and this explains this remarkable congregation. Jesus prayed that we might be one, that the world might believe, and we have seen the demonstration." A beautifully printed souvenir booklet containing pictures, a history of the movement, a statement of its ideals, and a complete roster of its membership, which now includes 106 families, was issued on the occasion of the anniversary. Mr. Lockhart will continue as pastor, giving a limited time to evangelistic work. He prefers that his meetings be union in character.

Reviving Prosperity of Old Central Church, Cincinnati.

Central Church, Cincinnati, O., has enjoyed unusual prosperity during the past six months. During this period there have been one hundred additions to the church, at regular services, the average attendance at the mid-week service has nearly doubled, and there has been an increase of 35 per cent in the attendance at the Sunday-school. Much of this prosperity is due to the successful "Every Member Canvass," conducted by the men of the church last January. Claire L. Waite is in the fourth year of his pastorate at Central. It has been affirmed by well-informed students of church conditions in large cities that the down-town section of Cincinnati is the most difficult field in America for Protestantism. This makes the taking on of new life by our old Central Church there especially significant. Dr. and Mrs. A. E. Cory and their children recently united with Central, having moved out of the Norwood section, where they had previously held membership.

Medical Missionaries Needed on Foreign Field.

The Foreign Society has great need of medical missionaries. One is needed for China for a special emergency, where one of our hospitals has been closed because of the lack of a medical man. He should be a good surgeon and a strong, Christian character. He would serve among a million and a half of people, in a hospital that has 30,000 treatments a year. Another medical man is needed for the Phillipines by next fall. The Foreign Society has three hospitals in its Mission there, and two of these are granted large support financially by the Government. Unless an extra man is sent soon to the field, each of these hospitals will have to be closed during the furlough of the medical missionaries. This would very likely mean the entire loss of the Government support, as well as the indescribable loss to our missionary work.

An Incredible Claim Shown to be Preposterous.

Space forbade our publishing an article sent us last week by Graham Frank, in reply to the current criticism of the General Convention which another journal is carrying on just now with violent words. That journal undertook to "expose" the convention as a "monumental fake," by securing reports from secret correspondents in the churches represented at the convention. The reports of the detective work of these correspondents is published by the editor, who construes them as proof that no church sent delegates at all to the Atlanta Convention! Mr. Frank's response cites long lists of names of prominent men and women, who brought credentials, saying they were duly and properly selected by their respective churches, and also long lists of prominent pastors and laymen, whose signatures are attached to such credentials, vouching for them. If any facts were needed to convince our readers of the preposterousness of the critic's claim, Mr. Frank's array of facts and names would effectually do so.

They Love Him.

The way University Place people, in Des Moines, feel toward Dr. Charles S. Medbury, Drake's chaplain, and pastor of the University Church, is expressed by Charles Blanchard, in his "Christian News." He says: "Chaplain Medbury, whose great heart gathers up the young life of Drake University and all University Place, and links somehow with the skies these earthly lives of ours, in sermon and in prayer. What a rare gift of sympathy and of love and of longing and of life is his and how he wins and holds the affections of the student body, as of us, who meet him in the stress of life along the pathway of the years. Perhaps we do not know how rich we really are in the passion and power of Chaplain Medbury's consecrated ministry here in Drake and in University Place and in all the world; for truly his words are not bound, as the Word of God itself is not bound."

Pastor Sent by Commercial Club to Coast.

Nelson H. Trimble, who goes by the title "The Country Parson," in and around Columbia, Mo., but who also is the secretary of the city's Commercial Club, was elected by the club to represent the town at the San Francisco fair. The local paper says that Mr. Trimble's duty will be to see that people at the fair learn something good about Columbia.

Churches Celebrate July 4.

All Disciples of Lincoln, Nebr., united in a celebration of the Fourth, at Bethany camp grounds, on Sunday afternoon. C. W. McCord, the new pastor of Tabernacle Church, preached at 3 o'clock, and after a picnic supper all went to Tabernacle Church, for the evening service, where C. R. Neel, of Bethany Church, preached the sermon.

Washington Convention Asks for Sectional Conventions to Be Held Annually.

At the state convention of Washington, held in Central Church, Spokane, W. W. Burks of Walla Walla was elected president of the convention for next year and J. E. Davis of Spokane president of the board of directors. Vice-presidents representing the several districts were named for the board of directors as follows: J. A. Longston, Wenatchee district; W. W. Burks, Walla Walla district; A. A. Hansen, Lewiston district, and Hardy G. Koen, Spokane district. The convention passed a resolution petitioning the national missionary societies to hold four sectional conventions for the United States and Canada instead of one annual convention for the whole country as now, and that one of the four be assigned to the northwest. The petition declares in favor of a general convention once in four years. A. F. Hensey, missionary to the Congo country of Africa; Emory Ross, missionary to Liberia, and Secretaries W. R. Warren, Grant K. Lewis, C. C. Garrigues, and G. W. Muckley made addresses. Rosalia was selected as the meeting place of the next convention. The delegates were much interested in the plans and beginning of the Spokane University. They were taken to the university by special car after an address by President I. N. McCash.

Pastor Baptizes Parents, Brothers and Sister After Years of Alienation.

W. T. Smith, pastor at Monett, Mo., went to his old home at Merrill, Neb., to baptize his parents, four brothers and a sister, last week. The occasion is particularly touching, owing to the fact that Mr. Smith, who was ordained at 19 years of age, disobeyed the desires of his parents in becoming a minister. No member of his family would attend his services, though he preached for some time in a neighboring chapel. The circumstances of their conversion are not known.

Pastor Punctures Pride of Cultured Suburb.

After eight years' pastoral experience in Evanston, a suburb of Chicago, during which time his congregation has left its frame chapel and built a $10,000 brick house of worship, Orvis F. Jordan deemed that he earned the right to speak with peculiar intimacy on "The Religious Life of Evanston." "It is a real test of friendship," he said, "to know each other's faults and be friends still. That is just the way it is with Evanston and me. 'Faithful are the wounds of a friend.' I may therefore presume upon the acquaintance of these eight years to point out what seem to me to be the limitations of our community life." He then proceeded to say, "We have boasted long enough that this is 'Heavenston,' near the pearly gates. We have little infidelity but oceans of indifference. We need a new pride and a new humility." Evanston is one of the proudest suburbs of Chicago, and is noted for its churches.

Brick Manufacturer Becomes Foreign Mission Secretary.

Mr. R. A. Doan, of Nelsonville, O., has accepted the invitation of the Foreign Society to become one of its secretaries, and begins his work in that capacity, August 1. This invitation was extended before Mr. Doan started on his tour of the mission fields, but he withheld his final decision until his return. The great needs and opportunities in mission lands have deeply impressed Mr. Doan and he longs to give his life to this great work. He gives up his successful business in the prime of his manhood, that he may devote his service in a personal way to the work he loves so deeply. Mr. Doan is well known as the teacher of one of the largest men's Bible classes in America, and as a successful paving-brick manufacturer. The Foreign Society is to be congratulated on being able to secure the services of this strong Christian business man, who brings to its work the wise counsel of a layman who has been very successful in leadership among men. Mr. Doan's recent extended visit to the mission fields, where he has carefully studied the work at first hand and has worked with the missionaries in his evangelistic and Bible-study campaign, will greatly aid him in his task. He has been a real strength to the missionaries on the fields through his inspiration, sympathy, and wise counsel. No doubt Mr. Doan's step in giving himself to the work of the society will mark a new epoch in the relationship of our business men to the work of world redemption.

Dr. Idleman's Commencement Triumph at Drake University.

Dr. Finis Schuyler Idleman, pastor Central Church, Des Moines, was the commencement orator at Drake University. He spoke on "The University and Social Efficiency." The vast throng of over 3,000 people were greatly moved by his scholarly and courageous words. He dealt with the war and the war spirit, declaring that not the churches alone, but the universities are responsible for the militaristic passion. "From no classic halls of Europe", he said, "has come a protest against the war." "The weak must perish, and they should" is the brutal philosophy that makes such a war possible. He pleaded for a "noble non-conformity," the quality of soul that makes a man unafraid to stand before kings. "Non-conformity is the lot of all reformers. We are not to be spectators with our hands in our pockets, but prophets of the coming ages. The university is the native home of idealism. 'Are you just one more lawyer'? was the question put by the president of Brown University, to a brilliant young man, going out from his halls. And he answered, 'I shall make my profession my pedestal.'" Fruitful Pastorate to be Terminated by Pastor's Resignation.

W. A. Fite, for six years pastor First Church, Paducah, Ky., has resigned. Mr. Fite has accomplished a great work in Paducah and leaves with his church protesting against his departure. The board of officers unanimously adopted resolutions of appreciation in which among many other things is found this statement: "We recognize and highly recommend his lofty Christian character and splendid mental training and literary attainments. He is thoroughly versed in the Bible, trained to easy and convincing address, at times eloquent and always sincere and forceful. He has for the past five years and more, greatly pleased a congregation that is only exacting because of having been used to the best, and nothing short of the best will satisfy it. And, therefore, we reluctantly yield his services and his presence, that he may go to other fields of labor, wishing for him and his, success and happiness in his future work, and giving them the hearty commendation of this church." Mr. Fite has not yet announced his future plans. He will not leave Paducah for several months yet.

Furnished Apartments for Missionaries on Furlough at the University of Chicago.

Through the generosity of a group of ladies, the Graduate Divinity School of the University of Chicago is able to announce that it expects to have ready for occupancy October 1, four apartments of four rooms each and one apartment of seven or eight rooms, fully furnished for the use of missionaries on furlough, who wish to study in the Divinity School. The rental for these apartments will be less than the ordinary rent for unfurnished apartments of the same size and grade. Detailed information can be obtained by addressing Shailer Mathews, Dean of the Divinity School. It is expected that other apartments will be furnished if the demand warrants.

Glad His People Like the Gospel.

J. Boyd Jones, the new pastor at Central Church, Terre Haute, Ind., after three months' acquaintance with his people says this to them: "The pastor is delighted to know that the membership desires to have the whole Gospel preached in its purity and simplicity. He has no patience with fads and fancies, but believes that the Gospel is the power of God unto salvation, and he is happy to know that the membership of this church desires to have the Gospel preached, instead of having their preacher read a little ethical essay at the morning service."

Social Service Activities of First Church, Kansas City.

W. F. Richardson, pastor First Church, Kansas City, says: "In our downtown field, we are trying to do some, at least, of the work so much needed among the poor and churchless multitudes around us. A Daily Vacation Bible School is being conducted during the summer, and it is being planned to organize a Mothers' Club, to meet regularly, to aid the mothers in caring more effectively for their homes. We are giving a moving picture entertainment every Friday night, with travel, educational and other interesting and instructive films. Many union meetings are held in our church, including the Local Union of Christian Endeavor, which has held its monthly meetings with us for many years. When we can complete our building we shall be able to minister in many other ways to this field. At present we have only the Bible school building, which, however, is modern in every respect and a thing of beauty and utility. We have larger plans in view for the near future." The children's day offering amounted to $230, from 277 pupils and teachers.

Successful Pastorate Best at the Finish.

"The last three months of my ministry were the best," says the gracious and vigorous E. P. Wise after closing a ten years' leadership of the church at East Liverpool, Ohio. Mr. Wise feels very tenderly the strain of heart in severing the pastoral ties that held him to his people. He built a beautiful house for them and upbuilt the congregation in spiritual power as well as in numbers. His new work at East Market Street Church, Akron, O., began July 4. He will spend the week time during the summer in the country near New Berlin, O.

Los Angeles Committee Sets High Standards.

Mr. C. C. Chapman, the orange man of Southern California, and chairman of the General Convention committee says: "We propose to entertain the National Convention in a whole-souled, liberal California style. We are the hosts. We made great representations to get the convention. We want to so receive them that most of them will remain and those who do go back east will only do so to wind up their business affairs so as to come here to live. The business men of Los Angeles are smiling in 1915 as never before, because they are to help entertain so many guests. We are all proud of the Christian Churches of Southern California and want the whole world to know that we have a splendid body of entertainers."

Missionary "Felt Like a Fraud" When On Furlough.

The death of Miss Ada Boyd, for thirty-three years a missionary in India, under the Woman's Society, brings into relief one of the most interesting and beautiful personalities of our brotherhood's life. She went to India with Mr. and Mrs. M. D. Adams. Her home station was Bilaspur, though she traveled considerably into the fields to tell the gospel message. She was particularly devoted to zenana work, that is, direct personal instruction of women in the homes. Miss Mattie Burgess, writing some years ago, said of her: "She visits all classes of women. With genuine interest, she sympathizes with the poor, low-caste women, who help earn the living for the family, and teaches them. With infiinite patience, she teaches a woman to read, because, by so doing, the woman takes greater interest in the story of redemption. With faith and courage undaunted, she turns to new homes when some husband or father, becoming alarmed at the interest in Christ manifested by his wife or daughter, suggests that it might be well for her to discontinue her visits. Faint rays of light and faith had begun to dawn in the mind of one who had not known that she had a soul of her own, but now the sweet-voiced, sympathetic teacher can come no more. Who will care for the tender plant of hope and faith just beginning to peep forth from darkness? The seed sown was the Word of God, and He has promised to care for it; therefore, through the narrow lanes and alleys, in sunshine and rain; now with vigorous, bounding life, and again in bodily weakness; up steep, narrow stairways, or into pleasant little courtyards; by the dusty roadside or near the bank of the river—with faith unshaken, our friend carries the message of salvation. Miss Boyd is quiet, dignified and reserved. As a fellow-worker she is self-forgetful, sympathetic and tender, a safe confidante and advisor. She is so quiet and unassuming that just praise seems to her flattery. Once I asked her how she enjoyed her furlough. She replied, 'I felt like a fraud all the time.' The people delighted to honor her and show her the love she had won because of her faithful work on the mission field. To her the path of duty had been so plain and had been followed with such simple, child-like devotion, that praise and honor, because of her labors, seemed unwarranted."

—Nine hundred pupils of the Capitol Hill Sunday School, Des Moines, Ia., assembled at the old church building on the morning of the dedication of their new building and marched in a body to the new home. Geo. L. Snively and Pastor T. F. Paris succeeded in raising over $21,000 in short time pledges at the dedication service, sufficient to fully cover the indebtedness.

—Vice-President Marshall and Rev. Allan B. Philputt were the speakers at a Scottish Rite service in Indianapolis, commemorating the birth of St. John. Dr. Philputt spoke on Immortality, declaring that the value placed by God on man precludes the possibility of any hypothesis that life ends with death here.

—George A. Miller, pastor Ninth Street Church, Washington, D. C., presided at the dedicatory services of the new Capitol Heights Church near Hyattsville, Md.

—Mrs. E. L. Powell, wife of Louisville's preacher, was one of the prominent speakers at the Y. W. C. A. state camp at Louisville, last week.

—F. W. Emerson, recently pastor at Albany, Ore., and now residing at Berkeley, Cal., is devoting his entire time to the cause of prohibition, representing California on the national committee of
